The exhibit will be under the management of L. M. Holt, editor of the Riverside (Cal.) Press and Horticulturist, assisted by H. N. Rust, formerly of Chicago, as business manager, J. E. Clark, Commissioner of Immigration, C. Z. Culver, of Santa Ana, and Frank A. Kimball, of National City, San Diego county.

This will be a novel exhibit for the people of Chicago and the Northwest; and will attract crowds of people.

Those who desire to get information relative to Southern California should attend this Fair and consult with the best posted men of that section who will be in attendance.

BUSINESS.

There is no more faithful, persistent and undiscouraged worker than our friend L. B. Lathrop, of the Pacific coast. He has a zealous co-worker in Dr. Neal, a seceding Freemason and earnest Christian.

As long as these brethren live there will be at least one standard raised against the flood of secret lodges on the California coast.

A large list of yearly subscribers attest their success.

Rufus Johnson sends $10 toward circulating the Cynosure among ministers in the South. He wishes to help those ministers who need instruction. Do not fail to read the letters of Elders Woodsmall and Countee in this number. The Cynosure is certainly a Pole Star of light and life to the Southern churches. The names of many Southern ministers who need the Cynosure, have recently been furnished this office by Secretary Woodsmall. Who now will furnish the means for sending them the Cynosure? Many have contributed liberally already, whose reward is evident from the good work which the Cynosure has accomplished for the South.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from March 8 to 13 inclusive:

James Cation, Mrs A Stone, John E Jones, James Petirman, Frederick Byrer, L B Lathrop, James Fergason, E B Gillett, A J Foord, J O Doesburg, Mrs L H Plumb, J S Shock, W O Dinius, P R Bufkin, Harvey Pruesdell, J M Adair, James Hart, J C Heywood, Mrs R Schnellbacker, A F Spaulding, Robt Jones, C A Blanchard, E B Shurtliff, J A Meyer, H Randall, Mrs E F Smith, H D Nichols, Wm Fenton, Wm Swenson, Mrs M M Duff, J A Richards, S Heaton, Hiram L Brown, H A Day, C A Anderson, Warren Jenks, H Curtis, Isaac Jackson. Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers treat the readers well.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People!

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of GEORGE W. CLARK, the Minstrel of Reform, a forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages. Price 10cts postpaid. Address

FARM NOTES.

SPECIAL CROPS FOR POULTRY.

Every poultry breeder understands the value of having a variety of food, and that it is essential for the health of the fowls, and the production of fertile eggs, from which he can expect strong, healthy chickens. One can imagine the result to a community who would try to live exclusively on corn, yet propably nine out of ten who raise poultry, think their duty done when they have scattered before them their quart of corn and gathered the eggs. This treatment may appear to fulfil all necessary obligations when fowls can have unrestricted range through the summer season, as nature seems to provide means for sustaining life for feathered as well as human tramps. The necessity of providing corn, sometimes with wheat and oats for winter food, is generally understood, but if to these were added a supply of the other grains and vegetables of which fowls are fond, we would not hear so much complaint as now of stock "running out," and producing nothing but scallions.

As to the special grains, we may name buckwheat as one of the most valuable for the production of eggs. Sunflower seeds should also be included in the bill of fare of all well regulated poultry yards. The large amount of oil they contain seems to be especially valuable for young growing chickens. I think the finest developed flock I ever raised was one that had free access to a quantity of well ripened sunflower seeds. They also give a gloss and brilliancy to the feathers, probably unequalled by any other food. Even when fed in large quantities, I have seen no bad effects therefrom, as the husk or shell must be taken with the meat. I made an experiment one winter with two flocks, one of five pullets, and a cockerel of Plymouth Rocks the other of twelve pullets and a cock of Light Brahmas, these latter having a well appointed house, with all of the "modern improvements," sunlight, dust bath, etc. The former were in a small coop about four feet square, with a covered run formed by throwing cornstalks on some poles, and standing my battened sash up against the south side. The food for the two coops was scalded Indian meal. They were both fed from the same dish, and in proportion to their numbers. The P. Rocks laid well, and gained in flesh all winter. The Brahmas "went back," both on eggs and in flesh. The reason was that the first had the strippings from the cornstalks to help in the assimilation of their food, which the latter did not have. This proved, to my satisfaction, that some such coarse food must be provided if we would have the fowls thrive, and I may say here, that well cured green cornstalks, and young, tender grass and clover, should be provided for poultry as regularly as hay for other stock.—American Agriculturist.

POULTRY NOTES.

Fowls are very fond of milk and will thrive wonderously upon it.

In France, eggs are sorted and sized by passing them through a ring.

The pea hen lays her eggs on alternate days, and when she has produced five or six she will incubate, unless the eggs have been removed.

Where coops or runs have plank floors the floor should be covered with dry earth, as it is a good absorbent and will prevent little chicks from becoming crippled in the feet. Little chicks cannot thrive long on a plank floor without earth to absorb the excrement and disease germs. Many old poultrymen have learned this by dear experience.

An eagle has lately died in Vienna which has been kept in confinement 114 years. It probably was a young bird when caught, so that its age must have been not far from 120 years. A record of the eagle's condition was made from year to year. There are swans on the River Thames that are known to be 150 years old. For five centuries the Vintners' Company there has kept a record of certain swans, and the ages of the specimens of this long lived species of water fowls are known to a day.

The best bath we have found for fowls is an ash bath, says an exchange. It far excels the dust bath, although the dust bath is used by nearly all successful poulters. Take an old dishpan or some vessel that is wide and shallow, fill it with dry, fresh wood ashes, and the chicks will be in it before you can get out of the poultry house. We have seen this used and have never found lice where it is used constantly. The ashes get mixed through the feathers and lice cannot long flourish in this condition.

The lime for washing poultry houses should be used hot. The woodwork should be first well scrubbed, a little disinfectant being put in the water; then the lime wash may be brushed into corners and crannies, as well as flat surfaces. Houses may thus be kept perfectly free from insects. To be successful in poultry keeping one must have a liking for the pursuit. Of course, remuneration should be one of the primary objects, but at the same time, one should like them and care for them willingly though it is a "matter of money."

Each hen in a house should have one foot of space on the roosts. One hundred hens then would require four roosts twenty-five feet long, and to prevent the hens crowding too much upon the top roost these should be all on the same level. The roosts should be one foot apart, and be arranged in a frame hinged to the wall, so they can be lifted and hooked up for the purpose of cleaning. The roosts will take up four feet, and there should be eight feet more floor space; thus a house for one hundred hens should be twenty-five by twelve feet on the floor inside, and should be at least six feet high in the rear and nine feet high in the front, with ample ventilation.

A most important point in the matter of increased egg production consists in thoroughly domesticating the fowls. Feeding the fowls from the hand with meat occasionally, their eagerness for which overcomes their timidity, insures good results. It is a good plan to break up fresh bones for them daily, which not only increases the production of eggs, but assists materially in familiarizing the fowls with their attendant. To insure their domesticity, fowls should be visited often, treated with kindness, and cared for to such a degree that the owners attention will be largely recognized and appreciated.—Poultry World.

THE EXTRACT OF RED CLOVER.

From American Potter and Illuminator.

A certain extract, concerning which very little was said a half dozen years ago, is known, and favorably so, in nearly every city and hamlet in this country. And this is because it has made its way, not by windy and fictitious advertising, but solely by reason of the merit of the article itself. We refer to Needham's Extract of Red Clover. This is not in the least sense a patent drug compound, but is, on the contrary, the pure extract of a simple and absolutely harmless specific of nature's own providing—the fragrant blossoms of Red Clover. Unassuming as the remedy may seem in itself, it is only another evidence of the common fact that nature usually employs the simplest means to produce great results; for this delightful product of our meadows has indisputedly proven itself efficacious for the complete eradication from the human system of all forms of blood disorder, as displayed in Salt Rheume, Erysipelas, Rheumatism, Catarrh, etc., and the various kinds of Cancer. In the latter disease this extract has demonstrated itself to be the only constitutional treatment that effectually and permanently cures. Messrs. D. Needham's Sons, the proprietors of this valuable product, have recently removed their headquarters to 116 and 118 Dearborn street, Chicago. Write them for descriptive circular, which contains full information.

NEEDHAM'S RED CLOVER.

The drug trade of the country, must, by this time, have become very familiar with D. Needham's Son's Extracts of Red Clover Blossoms as a constitutional blood purifier. Certain it is that very many of the leading pharmacists now carry in stock this article in its various forms—fluid and solid extracts as well as packages of the cured blossoms—and recommend it unhesitatingly as the best remedy for the cure of Cancer, Catarrh, Salt Rheume, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Piles, Whooping Cough, and many other diseases. This journal does not hesitate to heartily indorse these extracts for the relief of the diseases named, as a number of instances of cures effected by their use have come under our personal notice; while the entire absence of any possibly deleterious substance ought to commend them to the favor of pharmacists generally, in this day of noxious decoctions. Needham's extracts have already attained a deservedly large sale, with a constantly increasing demand. You can safely put them in regular stock, if you have not already done so.—From the American Drug Trade, February, 1886.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. Table of Contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of argumente. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

National Christian Association.
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees" 304 pages.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

IN BRIEF.

The once mighty Euphrates seems likely to disappear altogether, according to the Times of India. For some years past the river banks below Babylon have been giving way, so that the stream spread out into a marsh, until steamers could not pass, and only a narrow channel remained for the native boats. Now this passage is becoming obliterated, and, unless matters improve, the towns on the banks will be ruined, and the famous river itself will be swallowed up by the desert.

The British troops conquered Burmah easy enough, but now come reports of risings in different parts of that country. But it will be held, nevertheless, and will lead to a great extension in the sale of British goods in that part of the world. Some curious facts are being told about the people of that country. The food of Burmese peasants includes almost all kinds of reptiles, the grub of a ball rolling beetle, a kind of ant which constructs nests of leaves in tree tops (eaten in curries), and hill rats. The last named exist in such hordes that their consumption is almost a necessity to prevent the rats eating the Burmese.

According to the late superintendent of the mint, while the silver production of the world holds its own the gold production is steadily declining. In 1883 the whole world produced $94,027,901, against $98,591,588 in 1882. While the total for 1881 was $103,023,078. The silver production for the last year was $114,217,733. Our own country is the greatest silver and gold producer in the world. Our output of silver last year was $46,200,000, and of gold $30,000,000. Yet, in view of this falling off in the supply of gold, that metal has been made the sole measure of value by the commercial nations, and hence the falling prices of all commodities; the real phenomena is the augmentcd value of gold, which will buy more than it did before silver was demonetized.

An English consul named King, who lived in San Domingo for twelve years, has recently published a work about that island that is full of startling facts. It seems the negro race, left to themselves there, have deteriorated and are reverting back to barbarism. They pay no attention to education, are immoral in their lives, and will not follow industrial pursuits. Polygamy is very common, and Voudoo worship, with all its superstitious horrors and cannabalistic rites, is practiced very largely and is steadily increasing in popularity. Our own experience in this country is that the black race is amenable to civilizing influences. Colored communities with us are peaceable, happy, and reasonably industrious. But the experiences of San Domingo must not be repeated on our soil. There is danger if the blacks are left to themselves, in communities where there are few or no whites, that they will deteriorate. They can be saved by industry and education, and these agencies must be brought into play to enable the black man to advance abreast with his white brother.

Reduction of temperature in air or liquids by means of refrigerating machines is now common in all our cities. Ice machines are used on ships, and refrigerating plants are to be found in packing houses, cold storage warehouses, etc. Among the more recent applications of freezing temperature is the freezing of sand and mud in tunneling operations. The idea, in one sense, is not wholly new, because in sinking shafts through quicksands, freezing mixtures in pipes have been used to freeze the sand solid, and thus enable the workman to dig through the sand and brick the tunnel up before the sand melted. In a tunnel constructing under a hill near Stockholm it was found that the interior of the hill consisted of wet sand, and the moment this was cut into it began to flow like a thick liquid, and there was danger that there would be a "cave" on the surface above. Several houses threatened to collapse and sink in the cave, and the work had to stop. Then the idea of freezing the sand was tried by the contractor. The plan was an entire success. By means of chilled air from a refrigerating machine the loose, wet sand was frozen solid, and then it was easy to cut out the hard sand and build an arched tunnel through it. The tunnel then held the sand in place and it was allowed to melt, as the tunnel arch would support it as well as the houses above.—Demorest's Monthly.

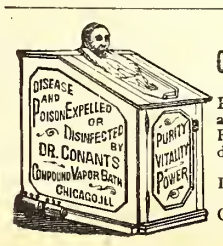
It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."



E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The most important business in the Senate during the week is likely to be the passage of the resolution to quiet the title of settlers upon the Des Moines land over the President's veto and consideration of the Chestnut count bill.

President Cleveland on Thursday sent a message to Congress vetoing the bill for the relief of settlers on the Des Moines River lands.

Twelve years ago, March 13th, 1874, the body of Charles Sumner was brought to the Senate chamber. The solemn rites and impressive tribute of respect accorded that Senator were repeated at the Capitol Friday in the funeral of Senator Miller of California. The scene was very impressive.

COUNTRY.

At Logansport, Ind., Friday evening the tank of a gasoline stove exploded, its flaming fluid saturating the clothing of Sarah Hassett and Joseph Heffner, both of whom started on a run with their garments ablaze. Both were captured after an exciting chase, but cannot survive their fearful burns.

Nat C. Goodwin and other actors and actresses, for appearing in Sunday performances, were fined at Cincinnati Friday $50 each.

An unknown person Tuesday afternoon placed four pounds of paris green in the coffee to be used by the inmates of the almshouse at Lebanon, Pa. Eighty of the victims were taken seriously ill and twelve of them are still in a critical condition. Had a less quantity of the poison been used, one half of the persons who drank of the coffee would have died.

Pat Ford and John Murphy, under sentence of death at New Orleans for the murder of A. H. Murphy, were discovered unconscious in their cell Friday morning, and physicians who were summoned declared the condemned men had been poisoned with powdered belladonna. All efforts to rouse them from the stupor proved futile and at 12 o'clock they were borne to the scaffold and executed, on the order of the Governor.

The steamer Ike Bonham exploded her boiler on Thursday, eleven miles below Vicksburg, Miss. A number of persons were killed and several dangerously wounded.

A new oil well was struck on Thursday near Washington, Pa., that is said to be good for 1,000 to 1,500 barrels daily. There is great excitement in the county.

The Iowa legislative committee investigating the Brown-Sherman affair have refused to accept the deposition of Mr. Valk, insurance actuary at Chicago, and a leading witness for Mr. Brown. It is again said that the investigation is being made solely in the interest of ex-Gov. Sherman.

The tug John Martin exploded in Boston harbor Wednesday morning, the craft being blown to pieces, and the crew of five men were instantly killed.

Three brothers, the notorious Archers, confined in the county jail at Shoals, Ind., under charge of murder, expiated their horrible crime at the hands of a determined mob Tuesday night.

A decision in favor of the Prohibitionists' appeal in the matter of the Atlantic election, was yesterday made by the Georgia Supreme Court.

The San Jose Anti-Chinese Society and the Citizens' Anti-Chinese Association met at Sacramento, Cal., Wednesday. Delegates were in attendance from all parts of the State. A committee reported, favoring United States Senator Mitchell's Anti-Chinese bill, and that if the passage of Senator Mitchell's bill could not at present be secured the convention favored the passage of either of the bills introduced by Representatives Morrow, Felton, or Henley, and the use of all peaceable and legal means to rid the State of the Chinese now here, and prevent the coming of any more. The resolutions strongly opposed any and all illegal means of expulsion.

The Cunard steamer Oregon, while between Fire Island light and Shinnecook, came into collision, Sunday morning, with the three masted schooner, Fannie A. Gorham. The vessel struck the steamer on the port side, immediately under the dining saloon, and tore a large hole in her side, causing her to sink in a few hours. All of the crew and passengers were taken off from the Oregon in safety. The greater part of the Oregon's mail was also saved.

Myron Nowland, aged thirteen, while in school at New Boston, Mich., last Monday, printed some letters on the back of his hand with red ink. Later the hand and arm began to swell rapidly and soon after convulsions set in, continuing till Thursday, when the boy died. He was undoubtedly poisoned by the ink.

Early Saturday morning two freight trains on the New York division of the Pennsylvania railroad collided at Cornwall, Pa. Two cars were telescoped and one caboose burned. Four elephants were in one of the cars and one of them was killed.

The strike on the Gould system of railways from St. Louis southwest continues to the great demoralization of business in Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas and Texas. Part of the lines are in the hands of a receiver appointed by the courts; he has refused to enter into any negotiations with the secret orders managing the strike. A freight train which left St. Louis Thursday morning on the Iron Mountain Road was stopped at DeSoto by strikers, who disabled the engine. They were pursued by a United States marshall and posse and overtaken. They refused to surrender, and, attempting to escape, the marshall and his men began firing, wounding one of the strikers severely and capturing seven others. Several unsuccessful efforts were made by the officials of the Missouri Pacific to run freight trains out of St. Louis Saturday, and resorted to the courts to enjoin certain leading strikers from trespassing upon their property. Ten Knights of Labor were arrested at Sedalia, Mo., for disabling an engine. Merchants in country sections are beginning to feel the effects of the strike, and are becoming exasperated at the action of the strikers. Public meetings to discuss matters have been called in a few places.

The express train which left Chicago at 11 o'clock Friday night, over the Chicago and Rock Island road, was boarded between Joliet and Morris by a band of masked robbers. They brutally murdered Kellogg Nichols, the express messenger, and robbed the safes of about $25,000 in money and $10,000 in jewelry. The railway and express officials have offered $10,000 reward for the arrest of the criminals. Nichols made a brave and desperate fight, and when found he held in his clenched fist a tuft of hair, evidently from the head of one of his murderers.

FOREIGN.

Employes of the street railway at Toronto, Ont., who had formed a branch of the Knights of Labor, were peremptorily discharged Wednesday. No union men will be employed. An attempt to run street cars Friday, precipitated a riot, both mounted and foot police charging the mob, who had wrecked a car. A desperate attempt to rescue persons who had been arrested was frustrated by the officers, who used their batons freely.

The speech which Count Von Moltke made in the German Reichstag Thursday is supposed to indicate a purpose on the part of the German Government to ask a seven years' renewal of the military estimates. This will meet with a good deal of opposition, but Prince Bismark will undoubtedly exert himself to the utmost to retain the means now at his disposal of maintaining the powerful standing army of Russia.

Louisa Hart, a rich procuress of London, was committed for trial on a charge of providing young girls for a number of aristocratic patrons. The arrest has caused quite a sensation in certain circles and gossip bandies about many names of titled debauchees as likely to be identified with the business in which the woman has grown rich.

Advices from Labrador state that below Esquimaux Point to Blanc Sabine the people are starving. They killed in January 500 dogs and ate dog meat every day to save their lives. Late last November a ship was sent from Newfoundland with a load of provisions, and in a great storm was lost and never heard of. The bishop at Esquimaux Point has written to the government asking that provisions be sent him as soon as navigation opens as there is going to be starvation there this spring. At Pentecost many families are begging for food, and there is none to give them. At Pointe Demonto there is no more flour to be had, and the people are in a starving condition.

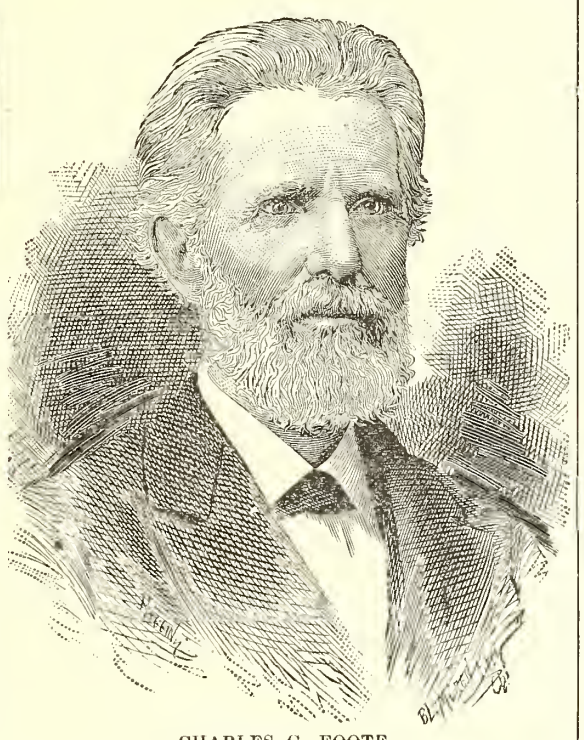
THE PRESENT NUMBER will be found one of the best. The portrait and sketch of Rev. C. C. Foote, the description of the Birmingham outrage, the discussion of the United Brethren case, the resumption of the Secret Empire department, are some, not all, the points our readers will commend.

NEXT WEEK we are able to promise valuable contributions to the discussion of the labor question, which is now foremost in the country.

REV. CHARLES C. FOOTE.



SKETCH OF HIS EVENTFUL LIFE AND LABORS.

BY GEORGE W. CLARK.

In forming our estimate of the stuff reformers are made of, we must not forget that "blood tells." The father of the subject of this sketch, who died two years ago in his 103d year, was undoubtedly the oldest Anti-mason in the world. For long years he filled different civil offices by the choice of Anti-masons. The writer knew the old gentleman when he was a staunch, Anti-masonic magistrate in the town of Mendon, N. Y., more than fifty years ago.

The first awakening of his first-born son to the great realities and responsibilities of life was amid the tremendous moral and political war caused by the murder of Capt. William Morgan by the Masons. Before half his teens were past, the parental home was exchanged for a residence with the partners of an establishment, both of whom were found to be Freemasons. The stealthy conversations of these men, in bated breath, with other Masons seemed to render the very air heavy with guilt and fear to a mind so early and thoroughly aroused to the murderous wiles of the Masonic craft.

The impressions of those early days have been growing and strengtheuing for nearly sixty years. By long continued and careful study he has thoroughly mastered the manifold proofs of Masonic wickedness: 1. By the public declaration of over a hundred renouncing Masons at Le Roy, N. Y., in the presence of two thousand hearers, that Morgan's revelations of Masonry are true. 2. The testimony of his personal friends, President Finney, Dr. N. Colver, and Elder Bernard, who had renounced Masonry; whose testimony is worth more than that of all adhering Masons, sworn to deny. 3. The confessions of Masons who have listened to Bro. Foote's own lectures, that "he never could have known so much about Masonry unless he had himself been a Mason;" thus uninteutionally acknowledging the truth of his charges. 4. The declaration of accredited, standard Masonic authors that Masonry is a religious system, and that it makes sure to its members "the grand lodge above, without Christ or the Holy Spirit. 5. The Anti-masonic writings of ex-President John Quincy Adams, the results of seven years' study. And all these are but a moiety of the demonstrations in his possession of the unutterable wickedness of Masonry.

CHARLES C. FOOTE.

The great religious awakening in Western New York began almost simultaneously with Anti-masonic and temperance revolutions. The closing of pulpits and churches against the lodge men, and the conversion of communities to Christ, kept even pace. It was in the midst of these scenes that the subject of this sketch entered the Christian life. Is it any wonder, then, that Charles C. Foote is a radical of radicals, or that he was in advance of most of his peers in earnest and public opposition to secret societies? He is no immature or theoretical reformer. If his words "burn," it is because they flow from a soul on fire from a certain and full knowledge of the multiplied and ruinous crimes and evils of Masonry.

The editor of the Oberlin paper, on reading his articles on the Oberlin Masonic defection, said he "had not heard such lamentations since the days of Jeremiah." At the end of one of his Anti-masonic campaigns, a friend accompanied him to the depot and said, "I will not leave you till I see the train start, for the Masons will kill you at the last moment if they can." He replied, "Let them kill me if they want to; I will make just as good a martyr as a young man, and if dead, will make a good breakwater for those who follow after."

With Masons, in personal conversation, he makes short work. He often says: "I want but one minute to prove to you that you cannot remain a Mason without committing a sin. You say in Masonry there is great light. Grant it, for the argument's sake. But you 'put it under a bushel.' That's a sin, sir! But you know and I know that your affirmation is false—a huge lie; and that's a sin. Now renounce, or that double sin will meet you at the last tribunal."

A true reformer from principle is a universal reformer; hence there are many threads in the woof we are weaving. The first time Bro. Foote heard of the temperance reform he said, "I go that;" and ere he had finished his preparatiou for college he entered the pulpit for the first time as an advocate of the temperance cause, and from that time on he has been an earnest and consistent supporter of the temperance reform and prohibition. During his ministry of half a century he has never allowed fermented or intoxicating wine at the Lord's table in any of the churches under his care.

Nearly at the beginning of the anti-slavery agitation he identified himself with the Abolitionists, and received into his pulpit anti-slavery lecturers, whether colored or bleached, who were almost everywhere denied a hearing. Those were eventful days. The friends of the slave in New York met at Utica in 1835 to form a State society, which the pro-slavery men said should never be formed in that city. During the proceedings of the convention, amid the roar of cannon and the rattle of musketry without, and the crashing of doors and windows, the howling mob rushed into the meeting, and with stones and bludgeons drove out the assembly, not only from the house but from the city, with garments torn and stained with blood; but not until the society was formed. Our hero was with the outraged Abolitionists, and went with them to Peterborough, the home of Gerritt Smith.

At an early period in his ministry he gave up a large and united congregation to take charge of a small anti-slavery church, without a house of worship, a parsonage, or salary! This because they could find no other minister in sympathy with them. During his stay with this people his labors were blessed with three revivals—an ample reward for all his personal sacrifices.

Finding a great demand for anti-slavery lecturers, he left his pastoral labors for a season, and gave his entire time to lecturing, attending conventions, holding meetings in groves, barns, streets, school-houses and churches betimes. Let it not be supposed that whatever of achievement was accomplished in rousing the people to the danger of losing their liberties was wrought out by the few weeks of demonstration that preceded the choice of our nation's office-bearers. Long and weary years of exhausting and martyr sacrifices were made ere a slumbering people could be aroused to learn and feel that three million of slaves were clanking their gory chains on soil consecrated to liberty, and that in the end the fetters were to be clasped upon their own limbs. Many a noble life has found an early grave by reason of these self-denying and multiplied toils; and many a patient wife has watched in solitude her nightly taper until she deserved a martyr's crown, while her husband has been toiling through drifted snows or facing the pelting storms, laden with messages of warning for the leaden ears of a people "consenting to the oppression of the poor."

During these travels in the lecture field Mr. Foote delivered the first out-door speech to the thousands convened at the famous "Jerry rescue" at Syracuse, N. Y., at which the Abolitionists were victorious, Jerry forwarded to Canada, and the slave-holders went home the wiser.

From these scenes we turn to his labors in Canada, among and for the refugees from the Southern prison house, providing them lands, homes, schools, teachers, meeting-houses, and whatever they needed in starting life in their newly acquired freedom. In these labors he had the co-operation of the leading Christian philanthropists of Detroit. During these years he suffered greater privations and more physical hardships than during any other period of his life, but making many hearts glad through the comforts secured to them.

None need be surprised to learn that Bro. Foote was the only white man in Detroit to whom John Brown revealed his intended crusade in Virginia. He did not dissuade Brown, but assured him his mission would cost him his life. He then furnished him material aid.

The old Liberty Party, the national reformers for securing homes for the landless, and the Liberty League for securing righteous civil government, each found in our universal reformer the fullest sympathy and co-operation. His devotion to these principles and his labors for their triumph gave him a reputation that won for him by these parties the nomination for Vice-President of the United States, the Hon. Gerritt Smith heading the ticket.

His contributions to newspaper literature, consisting of sermons, lectures, revivals, travels, narratives, etc., would fill a large volume. During his public labors he held many public discussions, in which his sure conviction that he was in the right, and his quick, sharp, incisive responses were sure to give him the victory.

But for the complicity of the American Board of Missions with slavery his life would have been given to foreign missions. To complete his preparations for mission work, he spent two years in Fairfield Medical College, N. Y., preaching to a neighboring church most of the time, where his labors were blessed with his first religious revival. It would be a mistake to suppose that these reformatory labors turned our brother from the legitimate work of the Gospel ministry. These national sins against which he set his face were in his eyes effectual barriers to the success of the Gospel. He, therefore, acted the part of John the Baptist in preparing the way for the Gospel, and of John the Apostle in preaching it. And proclaiming this Gospel has been his life-work and highest joy, and it has been crowned with abundant success, nearly every church in which he has labored being blessed with revivals.

Leaving the pastorate for a time, he devoted himself to the work of an evangelist, until by overwork he was compelled to leave the field for the recovery of his health. At the expiration of a year he was invited to the chaplaincy of the Detroit House of Correction. Here a revival immediately commenced, and continued through the entire four years of his labors there. In their report of prison revivals, the National Congress gave to this revival a prominence nearly equal to the combined revivals of all the prisons in the nation. These four years were the most laborious, the most painful, the happiest, and the most successful years of his life; but they brought him to the very brink of the grave, superinducing no less than three attacks of ænemic apoplexy, from the effects of which he has never fully recovered.

In this condition his old friend and fellow laborer in the anti-slavery work, Dr. J. C. Jackson, came to his relief, and invited him to the freedom of his sanitarium, "Our Home on the Hill Side," Dansville, N. Y. Six months' treatment so recuperated his paralyzed and exhausted powers that he accepted an invitation to minister to a Union church in Minnesota, from whence he returned to Detroit, greatly benefited by Minnesota's magnetic climate. Since then he has labored a season in several churches in Michigan, Illinois and Iowa, and occasionally supplying pulpits in Detroit; and more recently the "Salvation Army" has enjoyed the benefit of his labors.

In all these years he has labored as an unsectarian, equally at home with all, he has served all. Everywhere he has taught that all Christian believers are in Christ's family, and that his family constitute his church, becoming so by virtue of their spiritual birth. For a few years past the Sabbath-schools have been to him a subject of special interest. Having learned that but a small percentage of Sabbath-school scholars are converted while members of the Sabbath-school, he commenced gathering statistics. The result showed that of over half a million of Sabbath-school pupils, only about three per cent of the entire number were annually converted. He saw by this astounding record that the golden opportunity of life was lost forever. There are in the United States about 7,000,000 Sabbath-school scholars, and it is fair to infer that the above percentage will cover these 7,000,000. It was this record that called forth his articles to Sabbath-school teachers and pupils in the Cynosure. The conversion of Sabbath-school scholars has become an object of personal solicitude and labor wherever there is an opening. The results of these labors have been the hopeful conversion of hundreds of scholars, and in some instances almost the entire school has been brought to embrace the Saviour. So rich has been the harvest from these personal labors that his ruling thought and desire is to get others to make this a specialty; and that teachers learn how to do it, and be made to feel the vastness and wealth of success; and that their desire for the salvation of their pupils shall become so intense that they cannot live without its accomplishment.

His mind seems to be a boundless storehouse of truth. In his palmy days it was not uncommon for his discourses to occupy two hours, to an unwearied audience. While preaching to one of the churches in Elmira, N. Y., his watch stopped; not noticing it, he preached nearly all the afternoon. Horrified at what he had done, he asked the people why they did not stop him, and was told they did not wish him to stop any sooner. An old minister hearing his sermon on the "Baptism of the Holy Spirit," said, "You have packed six sermons into that one." A lady listening to his sermon on the "Titles of the Lord Jesus," said, "He so exalted us it was a wonder how we could come down again." It was because his own sensibilities were on fire that he thus inflamed the feelings of his audiences.

He holds what he regards as cardinal truths with invincible tenacity. And when these truths were called in question, he is ready at once to "square off" for a theological tilt. Some of his best sermons are in defense of these cardinal truths. Thus when a D. D. denied in his presence that God had any necessary method of saving men, he wrought out a telling discourse on soteriology, or God's Method of Salvation a Scientific Necessity. Hearing a minister deny that a regenerated person could know by consciousness that he is regenerated, or that he is a recipient of spiritual baptism, he prepared an equally forcible essay on "The Revealing Power of Consciousness by the Illumination of the Holy Spirit." Hearing a minister say in a sermon that total depravity did not mean that sinners are as bad as they can be, he prepared a sermon from Jer. 3: 5: "Behold thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldst;" proving first from the Bible, and second from the history of sinners, that they are as bad as they can be. He delivered it in a revival by which five careless young men were stricken under conviction. When it was asked, may we make our own good a motive for the service of God, he wrote a most searching sermon on the subjective motive in true and false conversion, or spurious motives produce only spurious fruits. This subject he presented to a large church, which resulted in the hopeful conversion of over forty persons; and in another church about twenty persons renounced their hope, said they never were converted, and gave themselves to the Lord Jesus by virtue of his own rights and merits. In his revival labors so powerful have convictions sometimes been that Bro. Foote has been called at almost all times of night to impart instruction, lest this extreme anguish might produce fatal results.

For more than forty years the writer has been acquainted with Charles C. Foote, and has never known him to shrink, falter, or swerve for a moment from the support and defense of the truth and the right. His convictions are deep and strong, and his mental make up of that positive character that he cannot be a time-server. He is ever ready to espouse and champion every good cause, no matter how unpopular or hated of men. The faithfulness, the zeal and boldness with which this intrepid servant of God has advocated all righteousness has been a marked feature of his life. And much of his time and labor have been freely given to the cause of humanity, "without money and without price;" and his frequent and generous benefactions, while gratefully remembered by many, are best known to his Divine Master.

As a friend and Christian brother, especially with those who are in sympathy with Christian reform and progress, he is warm-hearted, constant and cordial.

> "Nature's own nobleman
> Friendly and frank,
> The man with his heart in his hand."

And now, having just entered upon his 76th year, worn and depleted by a long life of multiplied toil, he sighs for a little more strength and a few more years to devote to the reforms and works that have shared his sympathies so long.

I will close this record with a brief quotation from a recent Detroit Free Press:

"Nearly every evening there may be seen at the meetings in the Salvation Army barracks a slight old man, with small but striking features, bushy gray hair, looking younger than he is, and possessed of great nervous vitality. Notwithstanding his advanced age, he is still active, energetic and enthusiastic in the religious and political causes he espoused years ago. This is the Rev. Charles C. Foote, for generations a prominent resident. He is of a nervous and impetuous organization, and has through life often been considered erratic, not to say cranky.* But he has always been honest, always earnest, and usually right. For some fifty years he has been a Christian minister, and nearly as long a radical, political agitator. He was one of the earliest and most prominent Abolitionists. . . . He was a Republican up to the time of the reorganization of the American, or Anti-masonic party, some ten years ago. In 1882 he was the American candidate for Governor of Michigan, and at the last election for Secretary of State. He has sublime confidence in the future of his party, and declares 'as sure as God lives it will one day sweep the country.' In his early manhood he lived in New York, near the scene of the Morgan murder, and has been a foe of Masonry ever since. . . . He is a man of strong principles, strong prejudices, and strong friendships."

THE BIRMINGHAM OUTRAGE.

BY W. PITT NORRIS, M. D.

Monday, March 1st, was the day of our town election, and the anti-secretists were beaten by five votes that were illegal. We have been swindled out of our rights at the elections here for the past seven or eight years by illegal votes; and when we would accuse the Masons of it and name the illegal voters, they (the Masons) have flouted out their ehins and asked us "what we were going to do about it," and told us to help ourselves if we could—well knowing that any legal action we might take in the matter was already decided against us, and would only serve to rivet their chains the closer about our necks.

After the result of the above election was made known, and while we were still in the poll-room, I remarked that this was another outrage upon the legal voters of the town, mentioned the names of the illegal voters at this election, and declared that the men who upheld such fraudulent voting were equally guilty with the men who did the illegal voting; whereupon one John Sutton, a G. A. R., said that he induced one of those men to vote, and was "proud of it." James Wilson, an anti-secret man in the crowd, made some remarks to Sutton, when the latter made a lunge at him with a knife, inflicting a gash in his cheek, which bled profusely. Wilson then knocked Sutton down twice with his natural "setting maul," when he was grabbed by the lodge sympathizers and pulled out of the crowd. Sutton got up out of the rubbish and kept lunging around with his knife, threatening all Antis in general and myself in particular, calling me a "son of a b——," and threatening to "cut my heart out." I grabbed his wrist to take his knife from him, when I was caught by two large men, one a Knight of Pythias and the other a jack-Mason, and forcibly pulled away from Sutton, his knife going through my hand and inflicting an ugly wound. I was then held in the arms of these men while Sutton cut me four times with his knife—one cut just missing my eye, one from behind the ear across my cheek, one across the main blood-vessels of my neck, almost from "ear to ear," and one in my scalp behind the ear. Josiah Anderson, in trying to free me from the banditti, received several gashes from Sutton's knife about the head and face. At this time Wilson broke loose from the men who were holding him and slung the jack-Mason who was holding me into a corner, which let my right arm free, and I struck the Knight of Pythias, who yet held on to me, in the eye, knocking him loose from me, and then turned my batteries upon Sutton, who was still lunging at me with his knife, knocking him down and kicking him as he went to the floor.

The next morning a justice (?) of the peace, who is a Mason, an Odd-fellow and a Knight of Pythias, with the secret society men at his back, sent to Fairfield for a lawyer, fixed up an information against four of us, charging us with assault and battery, and Sutton signed it. Wilson, Norris, Anderson and Deahl were arrested, brought into court, and the charge read. We pleaded "not guilty," and asked for time to procure counsel and prepare for trial, which was denied us by this eminent justice. We hastily secured the services of W. S. Allen, an attorney who resides here, and who is not a member of any secret society—for which reason alone the banditti who were prosecuting the case ignored him and sent to Fairfield for a lawyer. We demanded a separate trial, which was denied us by the justice. Our attorney took exception to this ruling of the court. We then went into the completest farce of a trial that ever disgraced the name of justice. After considerable haggling the prosecuting attorney dismissed, without prejudice, the charge against Norris, Anderson and Deahl, and the trial of Wilson proceeded. Wilson demanded a jury trial, which was granted. The witnesses for the prosecution were heard. They were all, without exception, sitting down when the trouble commenced, with a crowd standing between them and those immediately concerned. Not one of them could fairly see Wilson and Sutton when the first blow was struck. Not one of them swore that Sutton did not strike first. Wilson had seven witnesses, who were standing close to both parties, who on the witness-stand testified point blank that he did not strike Sutton, or attempt to strike him, till after he had received a gash in his cheek from Sutton's knife. Yet Wilson was adjudged guilty of assault and battery! and fined by this justice (?) $50 and costs of prosecution! An appeal was taken, of course.

One week later a fellow in town who goes by the sobriquet of "Ignorant Bill," a Mason, an Odd-fellow, and the junior editor of the Enterprise, filed an information before this same justice against Sutton, Norris, Wilson, Anderson and Deahl, charging them with a voluntary affray. The whole thing was concocted by the fraternities; Sutton was to plead guilty, which he did, and was fined $10 and costs. We understand the lodge men paid his fine. Wilson was not arrested; Deahl was dismissed. Myself and Anderson pleaded "not guilty," and were fined $15 each and costs. We of course appealed. The first trial was a farce, the last one a "roaring farce," in which the banditti completely overreached themselves! Remember, in the first case Sutton had Wilson and the rest of us arrested for assault and battery, and Wilson was fined $50 and costs. One week later Sutton comes into the same court and pleads "guilty" to a voluntary affray!—completely knocking his case against Wilson for assault and battery clear out of court and out of existence.

Here is the case in a nutshell: Sutton, the tool of the banditti, braces himself up with alcohol, purchased of one of the Masons who sat on the jury that convicted Wilson! He then goes into a crowded room with a knife, slashes around with it, gashes a man with it, who knocks him down, as he richly deserves; and the men who were compelled to defend their lives against the knife of this tool of the secret banditti are dragged into court and fined because they did not quietly submit to having their throats cut across from ear to ear!

We are all alive yet, and intend to fight this thing through and defend our sacred rights, let come what will. If we have to live under the iron heel of such a miserable despotism, we feel that our lives are of little worth.

We endeavored to introduce evidence to show the condition of Sutton's mind that Monday night, but it was ruled out by the justice. We have reliable witnesses who will testify that Sutton declared immediately after the fight that he had gone up to the poll-room to defend his party, and, — ——, he had done it, and wished that he "had killed every one of them G—d d—d Antis."

Birmingham is passing through just what other towns must experience before this country becomes what it ought to be—"the land of the free," instead of the Freemasons.

"THE UNITED BRETHREN COMMISSION."

BY REV. HALLECK FLOYD.

Prof. Kephart says: "I shall hail with delight the day that witnesses the end of organized secrecy, and to all laudable means to bring about that day I shall gladly lend my support." But he confesses to a desire to legalize a rule that is interpreted by some to exclude all secret societies, by others, to exclude some, and by others still, to exclude none. And he pleads for this rule to take the place of the clear and honest statement of organic law, that has become historic in the church, which reads as follows: "Our members shall have no connection with secret combinations." The conclusion, therefore, seems to be, that the Professor holds, that the best way to exterminate evil is to admit it to the communion of the church.

The Professor lays down three propositions which he discusses to show the expediency of admitting secret societies into the church. I will not reflect upon him, as being unduly influenced and biased by prejudice, but accord to him sincerity in his efforts to defend the Commission, which is charged with the responsibility of introducing secretism into the church. The propositions are as follows: 1. "Did the constitution of our church, as it is to-day, ever receive from the membership a formal acceptance?" 2. "Had the General Conference of 1885 authority to appoint the church commission?" 3. "Is the proposed article relating to secrecy, a declaration against secret societies?"

In reply to the first interrogatory: As a matter of fact, no formal acceptance was necessary, for the members of the General Conference of 1841 felt themselves duly authorized to adopt a constitution, which they did. Nor is a formal acceptance necessary now to amend the constitution. The people are not recognized as a legislative body. The only legislative body is the General Conference. It may freely legislate on all subjects, but only so as to preserve the constitution inviolate.

It was adopted in 1841 with all due and proper form. And it has been endorsed and officially recognized by the church too frequently and too long to be now brushed aside as a worthless thing. The Professor has had his "say so," as well as myself, about the preliminary steps in the adoption of the constitution, and he has introduced Prof. Drury to aid him in an effort to settle a mooted question; which is, to say the most of it, only a side issue in this discussion. For if the constitution is not the constitution for want of a "formal acceptance by the membership," or for any other reason, then the action of the late General Conference in appointing a Commission to amend it was not only irregular, but illegal also. But if it is the constitution, then it must be amended, when amended at all, according to its provisions for amendment. Therefore the question of informalities or irregularities in its adoption can have no bearing in the discussion, other than to show that it is a statutory law and not an organic law. The Professor seems to think that it is a statutory law. He says, "The validity of our constitution results from its adoption by the General Conference, but not from the fact of its formal adoption by the church." Well, if it is only a legislative enactment, then the General Conference has power to change it at any time without appealing to the people; and, therefore, an election calling upon the people to vote on it is unwarranted; and a commission to absorb the printing fund and to paralyze the great interests of the church, by keeping up an agitation among the members of the church, about a matter over which they have no control, is a very great blunder. In this position he is at variance with what he says was the action of General Conference of 1885, to-wit, "The General Conference of 1885, however, conceded the validity of the constitution, hence instead of annulling it, and providing another, they sought simply a method by which to submit admendments to the people." Their action was a double action, striking backward and forward. They declare, "that section 4 of Art. II. which reads: 'No rule or ordinance shall at any time be passed to change or do away the Confession of Faith as it now stands'; and Art. IV. which reads: 'There shall be no alteration of the foregoing constitution, unless by request of two-thirds of the whole society,' were too far reaching and impracticable to be articles of constitutional law." It became necessary for them to nullify these two articles of constitutional law, so as to open the way for changing the Confession of Faith; and so as to adopt the plan of ratifying the work of the Commission, by a two-thirds vote of those who might feel willing to become particps criminis to their action by voting, instead of adhering to the constitutional plan, of waiting until two-thirds of the whole society asked for any given change. And this is the basis of the commission act. If this is not nullification, will Prof. Kephart give it a suitable name?

It is also true that the General Conference of 1885 felt constrained, through fear of an immediate rupture of the body, to throw in an amendment to this Commission act paper that "nothing contained in it should be so construed as to render the constitution invalid." This paper by which the Commission was created, bears the marks of insincerity upon its face. And the Commission act is based upon nullification of the constitution: and all who adhere to it and advocate it, thereby, place themselves outside the protection of the constitution, and will forfeit their rights to the property of the church, if they press this Commission folly until an organic division is brought about.

In reply to the Professor's second interrogatory, "Had the General Conference of 1885 authority to appoint the church commission?" I answer, No. No authority whatever. No legislative body has the right to delegate its responsibilities and privileges of legislating to another body. This is a principle well established in jurisprudence. Legislatures may appoint committees to prepare work for them, but can not appoint committees and clothe them with power to legislate. But this is what the General Conference did when it authorized the Commission. They declared that the legislation of the Commission should become the fundamental belief and organic law of the church, provided two-thirds of those who could be induced to acknowledge the authority of the Commission by voting, should cast their votes for it; and that the bishops should so publish it in the Telescope; and all this to be done without reporting to the General Conference for its approval or rejection. Authority to appoint the commission! No. It was an assumption of authority such as was never known in the church before; and it was of a strictly partisan type, from first to last. The committee appointed to make nominations were nearly all "liberals." The Commission also which was created, ostensibly to bring peace to the church by compromise, was composed of "liberals," except Bishops Dickson and Wright, who did themselves and the church an honor by refusing to meet with them. The tellers appointed to receive and count the vote are all leading and pronounced "liberals." It was that kind of authority which party leaders in politics exercise over the rank and file of their party when an important election is pending.

I come now to notice the Professor's third proposition, and I am glad to be invited to do so, for it contains the gist of the whole matter: "Third—Is the proposed article relating to secrecy a declaration against secret societies?" The following is the proposed article referred to:

"We declare that all secret combinations which infringe upon the rights of those outside their organization, and whose principles and practices are injurious to the Christian character of their members, are contrary to the Word of God, and that Christians ought to have no connection with them."

The Professor says: "There is no other ground upon which they can be condemned." But I ask, what is the ground? Will the Professor be so kind as to show the "ground," by making an application of this declaration, or by giving a rule by which it may be known where the "only ground" of opposition to secret societies is? The proposed article declares against all secret combinations "which infringe upon the rights of those outside their organization." But how can it be determined as to what secret societies do thus infringe?

It also declares against all secret combinations "whose principles and practices are injurious to the Christian character of their members." But here again is a declaration without any application. And both these indefinite charges must be proven by the church, as the plaintiff in the case, before conviction can be obtained; for they are connected together by the copulative conjunction "and." And after all is done and said, the declaration is not mandatory, and hence does not and can not exclude from our communion any member of any secret society.

The most that can be said in its favor is that it is a little diluted advice, without any application. Paraphrased, it is this: Whatever is wrong in secret combinations is contrary to the Word of God, and Christians ought to have no connection with any secret combinations that would be injurious to them. If this deceptive proposition should ever become an article of constitutional law in the church, the door for the admission of the whole army of secretists would very soon be wide open. Is this what the Professor desires? If it is, he is consistent in defending the Commission. He says: "The fact that I believe that those characteristic marks belong to all such orders does not render it necessary that our entire church should think so." This is a confession that I had not expected the Professor to make. The truth is that the law in some parts of the church has been treated as a nullity for a number of years past; and this movement is intended to remove the odium of nullification which has attached to the liberals thereby. For this purpose, it is desired to make constitutional a rule that can be interpreted to exclude such secretists only as administrators of the law may desire, or to exclude none where it may be determined so to do. But our church is an itinerant church, having a unified government under one code of laws, and the church can not enter upon the field of passing enabling acts; for this would be at war with our general church polity. Besides, our position as an anti-secret church is an historic one; and we can not go back on our history and life without disrupting the church. We fought the battle through as an anti-slavery church, and we are religiously and patriotically proud of the victory that has emancipated four million slaves. Having lifted up our banner against this system of lodgery more than one hundred years ago, it can not be that the Lord will now suffer us to trail it in the dust. We know our inheritance, and in the name of the Lord we will maintain it.

Dublin, Ind.

Woman Suffrage has a keen critic in Gail Hamilton, who writes thus of the question, touching on some points not always thought of: "Woman suffrage is an artificial cause, and is just as hard to keep up as slavery was to put down. Convention, discussion, legislation, fail to arouse any enthusiasm for woman's rights, because there is no organized incistent, radical woman's wrongs. Individual women suffer, and concrete laws are unjust to women as a class. As men increase in refinement and virtue, women share in the improvement—inevitably because man is compounded of men and women. Whatever women suffer, they suffer from an imperfection of human society, not from any combined intentional oppression by the stronger sex. Woman suffrage languishes, not because men will not grant it, but because women do not wish it. Women can not be made to wish it, because they do not suffer from the lack of it. Whenever they want it, they will have it. There is more danger that they will have it without wanting it, than they will want it without having it."

LETTER FROM WESTERN ASIA.

ADA BAZAR, 23rd Feb., 1886.

We had a very mild winter this year. The mercury stands at 50 degrees at 5:30 A. M. The opening blossoms of the peach and plum trees begin to appear, but there is danger yet that the frost will blight them.

Ada Bazar has increased in size within the last twenty years. Emigrants from Caucasia, European Turkey and Batoum—all Mohammedans—crowded to Bithynia, and have settled both in Ada Bazar and the surrounding country. Most of the people were Christians, nominally, before this immigration.

And yet there is room. Large tracts of land are uninhabited and uncultivated. There is not a hill or plain which would not admit of cultivation. Probably not one-tenth part of the land once tilled is now under cultivation. The indolent Turk—the present farmer—with his rude plow, to which is put a pair of oxen or buffaloes, cultivates a small piece of land enough to raise a little wheat for the market, and millet for his subsistence, and then he passes most of his time in the coffee-shop with his chibouk, complaining that times are hard.

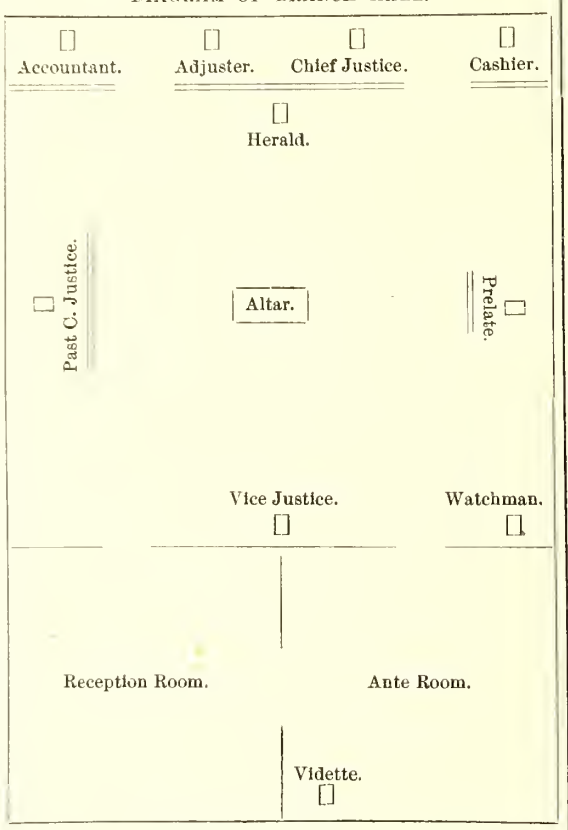
Our church has entered upon the fortieth year of its existence. In 1846 it was organized with fourteen members—poor, down-trodden and persecuted—in the midst of Islams and nominal, persecuting Christians. "These forty years the Lord thy God hath been with thee: thou hast lacked nothing." The membership is now 130—a net gain during the year 1885 of ten members. The contributions during the year, both for congregational purposes and in aid of several charitable objects, were 17,623 piasters—little less than $800.

The following is an abridgement of the article which appeared in the leading Armenian paper, Arevelh. Speaking of Dr. Somerville's preaching tour, which terminated last year in Constantinople, it says: "While preaching here (in Constantinople) his words were translated into native languages. The Scotch minister spoke to the Armenians several times. Now, we noticed that not only Protestant but also Gregorian Armenians listened with pleasure to his discourses. Christians have more points of harmony than of discord; therefore Dr. Somerville was able to choose the subjects of his discourses from the wider and higher regions of Christianity, where all Christians agree. * * * Now, the acceptance which the sermons of Dr. Somerville have found reminds us of the equally sad and remarkable fact that the power of preaching is a noticeable want among our clergy. * * * We have deep wounds, among which not the least, nor the least source of evil, is the fact that the greater part of the Armenian clergy is in a condition which does not correspond with their high calling. * * * In the majority of sermons heard on Sabbath and festival days there is neither heart, nor sense, nor art. There is no heart; the people are not touched, and words of our spiritual fathers make no impression upon the character of our people. We noticed what an impression the addresses of Dr. Somerville made even upon Gregorians, who are accounted the most worldly and the most liberal thinkers. Unfortunately, in the greater part of the sermons of our spiritual fathers is noticed not only dryness with respect to feeling, but also poverty with respect to sense. And it is natural that it should be so. Our preaching priests and bishops, for the most part, do not concern themselves to read to get information and new points of view and new ideas for preaching. They are more inclined to read daily papers, rather than to nourish their minds with the inspiring writings of Scripture and of the ancient holy fathers, and in general with religious and moral studies. * * * It is now a great requirement of the nation to have care that from among our priests and bishops be raised well-informed and eloquent preachers, to give to our people a sound religious and moral education, and to chase away religious indifferentism from among our new generation."

The world moves. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!

ALEXANDER DJEJIZIAN.

—Rev. M. A. Gault writes to the Blanchard, Iowa, Record: "The Sabbath is worse than blotted out in Omaha. A poor brakeman whose mother had taught him to keep the Sabbath was ordered out by the superintendent on Sabbath morning. Shortly after the poor fellow was crushed under the wheels. His mangled form was stretched out in the depot. The superintendent came down to see him, and taking his cold hand said, 'You need not be uneasy, we will pay your funeral expenses, and see that your family does not suffer.' The dying man fixed a piercing gaze upon him and said, 'Ah! you will! But who will pay for the loss of my poor soul?'"



THE SECRET EMPIRE.

ORDER OF THE IRON HALL.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

Among the many weak imitations of Freemasonry that have been devised to entrap and defraud men of their money, time, self-respect and religion is "The Order of the Iron Hall," organized March 28, 1881. The central body is called "The Supreme Sitting." A subordinate lodge is called a "Branch." The following is the plan of a Branch hall, and corresponds very nearly, except in the names of officers, with an Odd-fellows' or a Good Templars' lodge:

DIAGRAM OF BRANCH HALL.

It will be noticed that the altar and prelate are conspicuous, and that the order proposes to provide for the religious as well as the other necessities of its members. The following is the opening ceremony:

OPENING CEREMONY.

[The Chief Justice will take his seat and call the Branch to order, and, rising, will say:]

* Rap.

C. J.—Herald, you will apply the test to all present and satisfy yourself that all are entitled to the privileges of the Order of the Iron Hall.

Herald (after investigation)—Chief Justice, all present are of the true metal.

* * Raps.

C. J.—The Prelate will now invoke the Divine blessing.

OPENING PRAYER.

Almighty Father, Creator and Ruler of the Universe and Director of the destinies of men, we thank thee that thou hast again permitted us to assemble at this time for the transaction of the business of our Order. We beseech thee to preside over our deliberations; aid us to so guard our lives and actions that the bonds of union which unite us may be strengthened; grant us thy protection as we journey amid the dangers of life's pathway, and embue us with a true spirit of forbearance toward each other as thou dost forbear with us. Help us so to live that when done with this world and its cares we may be received into and dwell in thy kingdom, and to thy name be all the honor, praise, and glory forever. Amen.

C. J.—Friends, advance the sign of this Order. Watchman, see that the signal is hung on the door.

Watchman—The signal is in its proper place.

C. J.—The Branch is ready to proceed.

* Rap.

[Which is repeated by the Vice.]

Next follows order of business, after which the signs are given, etc.

The ceremonies of initiation are thus described:

INITIATION.

[The Herald retires, hoodwinks and introduces the stranger, presenting him at once to the Prelate, who offers the following:]

* * Raps.

INVOCATION.

O thou Great Jehovah, who did'st create and adorn earth; thou who hast provided so bountifuliy all things necessary for the support and comfort of all mankind, grant thy blessing upon us at this time, and do thou especially impress this stranger who desires admittance into our Order with the solemn responsibilities of the obligations he is about to take, and grant that he may find acceptance with us, and enjoy our future prosperity. Amen.

It will be seen this so-called prayer, like the one at the opening of the Branch, and like those of Masonry and Odd-fellowship, lacks the three essential elements of acceptable prayer, namely: Confession, invocation of the Divine Spirit, and the recognition of the atoning Sacrifice, our Lord Jesus Christ. True, there is a profession of honor to God, but "he that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which sent him (John 5: 23), and such prayers are simple blasphemy. The first step of the candidate is a practical denial of the Lord that bought him.

After this it proceeds as follows:

C. J.—Herald, conduct the stranger to this chair for instructions.

C. J.—Stranger, your petition . . . . having been properly presented, duly executed, and favorable action taken thereon by the members of this Branch, you are entitled to membership in this Order, and thus secure to yourself all the rights, privileges, and benefits thereof. Provided, however, that you shall first voluntarily take upon yourself the obligations and pass through all the ceremonies of our Order without hesitation and be successful in mastering and overcoming all difficulties. Shall we proceed?

Stranger—We shall.

C. J.—Herald, conduct the candidate to the altar for obligation.

[The stranger is conducted to the altar, placed so as to face the Vice Justice, and places both hands, palms down, upon the Constitution and Emblem of the Order—which is printed on the cover—when the Vice Justice will advance to the altar and administer the obligation, (not to be repeated by the candidate).

* * Raps.

V. J.—Do you, in the presence of the Most High who created the universe and all living things, in infinite goodness and wisdom, and conducts all things with justice and forbearance, and in the presence of these witnesses, solemnly affirm and sincerely promise that you unite with this Order of your own free will and accord, and with pure motives, and do you also solemnly affirm that you will never betray or communicate any of the secrets or ceremonies, or any part thereof: and do you further affirm, that you will not violate this obligation, and will not, either in consideration of gain, interest or honor, nor with good or bad designs, take more than is justly your own from any member of this Order, nor permit it to be done by others? Do you further promise and affirm that you will not take any of the secret works of this Order, should any be in printed form, from this hall unless as an officer thereof? Do you further most solemnly promise and affirm that you will support and abide by the Constitution and General Laws of the Supreme Sitting, and all the By-Laws, Rules, and regulations of this or any other Branch of the Order of the Iron Hall of which you may be a member? All this do you most solemnly promise with a fixed and steadfast purpose to keep and perform the same, under the penalty of being forever debarred from all the rights and privileges of the Order? Do you so promise and affirm? What is your answer?

Stranger—I do.

* Rap.

The covenant thus taken in darkness and ignorance is an extra-judicial and forbidden oath, in violation of both Jewish and Christian law (Lev. 5: 4, and Math. 5: 34-37. It is simply profaning the name of God by calling him to witness what the initiate does not know to be true—that he will "abide by the rules and regulations of this or any other Branch of the Order of the Iron Hall." He can not know what these laws are, and surely not what they will be. His promise, too, that he will not cheat his brothers is easily construed into a permission to cheat those who are not such.

SWEARING OBEDIENCE TO THE UNKNOWN.

The principle on which the obligations of secret societies is given and received cannot be justified on any theory which will leave the honor of all concerned in such transaction untarnished. No person can, on the strict principles of personal honor, solemnly pledge allegiance to the unknown. He who vows obedience to the unknown, surrenders the true dignity and honor of personal manhood. This is true regardless of what may be the subsequently revealed character of the obedience required. In morals and religion, and in the common integrity of common manhood, the nature of an obligation, and the character of its subsequent requirements, must be known in order to consistent acceptance. The principle of allowing one's self to be sworn in the dark, in itself saps the foundation of all moral integrity. No one on any known principles of personal fidelity to right and righteousness can pledge himself to obedience to "laws, rules and regulations" of which he is in total ignorance. Much less can one in harmony with morality or manhood, pledge himself to obedience to "all laws, rules and regulations which may be hereafter enacted or adopted" by any association of men. To swear obedience to the existing unknown ought to be sufficiently reckless to satisfy the most thoroughly depraved on the subject of swearing in ignorance of what the oath embraces; but when obedience is vowed to the, as yet, uncreated unknown, we know of no language equal to a legitimate characterization of this vague, indefinite, and wholesale abandonment of every principle of personal honor and integrity.

The Grand Lodge of the "Ancient Order of United Workmen," is being held in this city. In its published newspaper reports, its members are required to vow obedience to "all the laws, rules and regulations of the grand and subordinate lodges which now are in force, or may hereafter be enacted by this grand lodge," All proposed benefits are really in the nature of a bribe to such pre-sworn assurance of obedience to the unknown. This principle of swearing its members blind is peculiar to all secret societies. To become a member of any secret society, pledged obedience to the unknown meets the candidate at the very threshhold of initiation. This being indisputably and unquestionably true, we do not hesitate to nail our thesis to the outer door of this heathen temple of pre-sworn secretism, charging it in the adoption of the principle or prepledged obedience to the unknown, with the subversion of every principle on which morals or manhood can consistently base its action.

Reader, if your neck is under the yoke of forevowed despotism, as you value your manhood and your soul, throw it off at once and forever, to be Christ's free man. If free, never surrender the independence of personal integrity to the imposition of a yoke of bondage which subverts every principle of manhood, of morals and religion, in preswearing obedience to the unknown.—Wesleyan Methodist.

—The New York Catholic papers are so full of adulation of the "princes" who are coming to the "thrones" in that city, that one might mistake them for court circulars in Madrid or Burmah. The Catholics and the Freemasons are in a race to see which can play the bombastic role the most impressively. The Catholics are a little ahead.—Interior.

Reform News.

Michigan State Meeting.—Rev. H. A. Day, secretary of the Michigan Association, writes that the State meeting will be held about April 13, either at Olivet or Grass Lake. On the 12th, at Eaton Rapids, a convention of United Brethren will be held to pray and consult respecting the state of their church. Rev. Wm. Dillon of Dayton, editor of the Christian Conservator, will attend the former, and probably both. Bro. Day will also attend both, and urges that Secretary Stoddard and the editor of the Cynosure be also present. These will be important meetings.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Notes by the Way—Father Leuty's Old Home and Munificent Gifts to Christian Reforms—A Baseless Lodge Lie.

Waterloo, Ind., March 19.

The towns along this Lake Shore road were once quite familiar to me, but ten years have made some changes. Among the crowds gathered about the depots I recognized but a single familiar face. That of Bro. Samuel Smith at Ligonier looked natural, though changed to the "sear and yellow leaf of life's autumn" since our last "hand-shake." He said the Wesleyan church was available for anti-lodge lectures, and that Bro. Woodruff kindly extended to me the hospitalities of his home. I may come this way and call on my return. A glimpse of the old farm-house from the car-window brought back many and happy memories of Father Leuty and the days gone by, and it was with great satisfaction that I recalled the statement in his last letter that both himself and present companion were glad of the disposition he had made of his property, for now they have enough and are free from all care, while their means are supporting and spreading their principles over the land. It was quietly whispered in my ear, some days since, that a rumor was current at Ligonier that Bro. Leuty is in straitened circumstances and nearly or quite dependent on public charity for daily bread. If there is any foundation for this report, I hope Bro. Leuty will notify Bro. Stratton and myself, and we will look after the case. He has done too much for the cause of Christ to be left to suffer in his old age. If it is a "Masonic lie," as a recent letter from him would indicate, then the sworn fraternities ought to have the benefit of it. One hundred dollars per month would seem to be sufficient for a man of Father Leuty's frugal habits; but it would doubtless be inadequate to meet the demands of some of the Ligonier Knights for a single week's "spree" in sash and regalia, with expensive "andro ginous" degrees added after the banquet and ball were over. UNITED PRESBYTERIANS AND ODD-FELLOWS.

THE PRESENT FRIENDS AND OPPOSERS OF THE OHIO LECTURER.

Fair Haven, O., Mar. 18th, 1886.

Dear Cynosure:—I filled the appointments announced in my last week's letter to the best of my ability. Some of the session of the U. P. church at College Corner were rather afraid that I might call down the wrath of the fraternity on them and consequently were a little shy. Their pastor, Rev. Mr. Finney, took my part and succeeded in getting their consent for a little time after the sermon Sabbath morning to speak of the anti-Christian character of Masonry. It was a beautiful spring morning and the attendance was accordingly large; several of the fraternity were present I was told. Rev. Finney is doing a good work here.

At Hopewell on Monday evening it looked at first as if Rev. Mr. Huston, the pastor, Mr. W. P. McQuiston, the janitor, and myself were to compose the audience. Perhaps a dozen altogether came in before the meeting closed. Among the rest an odd-looking old gentleman who announced himself as an Odd-fellow, good and true. He looked as solemn as if he had come to a funeral. Hopewell is a country church. It was built by a colony of United Presbyterians who left South Carolina in an early day because of slavery.

Other churches of the same denomination have built on all sides until the old church is left with comparatively few members. I think I never have visited a section of the country where the people so universally agree in religion as this. Secret societies do not prosper here. There is a little starvling Odd-fellows lodge at this point composed largely of the roughs. Most of the members look as if they had been viewing the skeleton in the coffin until they will soon be good subjects themselves.

At Morning Sun I had the pleasure of addressing a very good audience considering that the farmers have commenced spring work; some two hundred were present. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Hume, was away attending his sick father. He was recommended very highly and I have no doubt had I met him, I should have found a warm friend to our cause. To-night I expect to address friends and Odd-fellows in the U. P. church here. I understand the Odd-fellows are going to ask some sharp questions. I hope they will.

FROM INDIANA.

Seed sowing by the Way.—Plenty of work in Preparation.—A faithful Conference.—Anti-masonry does not hinder revivals.

Marion, Ind., Mar. 11th, 1886.

Dear Cynosure:—I reached Logansport a few hours after leaving Chicago and stopped over night. In the morning before leaving for Marion, Ind., I circulated a few reform tracts. Upon the train I continued my work. By and by I heard a discussion behind me mingled with denunciations of those who attack "our orders" without being posted so as to know what they are doing. I had handed the principal speaker the tract entitled "Selling Dead Horses." Presently I heard him say, "There is nothing in Freemasonry or Odd-fellowship that any man could object to."

"That is so," said his comrade, sitting near.

"Then, they are religious societies," he added.

"Yes, and moral, too," the other chimed in.

At this junction I arose from my seat and approaching the first speaker, I offered him another tract entitled, "Should Freemasons be Admitted to Christian Fellowship."

"What," he said, "another dead horse?"

"No," I replied, "the lesson that tract teaches is, that it is a fraud and a swindle for the lodge to sell as Masonic secrets that which has been made public for the last sixty years. But this, which I now offer you, treats of Masonry as a religious institution."

He took the tract. When we were approaching Marion we stood facing each other waiting for the train to stop. I looked into his eyes. The bravado was gone, and guilt and shame were clearly depicted there. I had spoken but a few words to him, but the Holy Spirit had done his work. He was convinced of his sin, and betrayed his confusion and shame.

Masonry is, as he said, a religious institution, and so is Odd-fellowship. But it is not the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ. And he began to see, I doubt not, the differenee between being a devotee of a false religion, which blinds and deceives and corrupts and destroys; and a follower of Him wh enlightens and purifies and saves.

Since I reached Marion I have visited several of the old reformers in this region, and have arranged for seven lectures, and two sermons.

I lectured twice, at North Marion on the antagonism of Freemasonry, and kindred orders, to Christianity. A presiding elder of the United Brethren church was stopping over night, in the place, and attended one of my lectures. I found him a staunch Anti-mason, and loyal to the old constitution of his church, as is the conference to which he belongs. There are fifteen pastoral charges in his district. During the six months since their annual conference there has been, he said, from eight hundred to one thousand sinners converted in these churches. That gives an average of about sixty to each pastor.

When I had inquired after their spiritual prosperity, as a people, and had recieved the cheering intelligence that God was with them, and that sinners were being gathered to Christ, immediately I was curious to know whether they had consented to tolerate the devil worship of the lodge, in order to conciliate Satan, and modify his antagonism to their work. When I found that they still refused to fall down and worship Satan, as the price of success; and that they still refused to recieve to membership those who refused to forsake the worship of devils, my heart was made glad; and I felt that in that presiding elder I had found a brother indeed; and I rejoiced in his goodly purpose never to bow the knee to Baal.

I said to myself, if God will help these old-fashioned United Brethren, so that they can succeed in spite of the devil, in winning so many souls to Christ, what need is there to conciliate Satan by recieving those who still worship devils in the lodge, to the communion of saints. C. F. Hawley.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE CHINESE QUESTION.

Wahoo, Neb.

Editor Cynosure:—Though I heartily enjoy the reading of your paper, I can not but regret that you invariably take what I consider the wrong side on the Chinese question. You will, I hope, allow me to remind you:

1st. The Chinese laborers are not free laborers, but rented out much the same as the "apprentice system" of the Colonial history.

2nd. The Chinese will never be Americans. If a Chinaman should happen to die before his lease is out so that he can return home, his bones at least must be sent home. What would you say if other nationalities did that?

3rd. The Chinese will never make America their home and take their families over. When they bring women over it is for the sake of gain. Other emigrants do not so.

4th. The Chinese will live on five cents a day. What American laborer can there compete with him?

5th. All the money earned by the Chinese is taken out of the country and is a direct national loss, whereas other immigrants add to the national wealth.

6th. The Chinese need only to be known to be shunned. If Chicago and New York had been infested as the Western cities have, there would not be such a gush of misdirected sympathy towards coolie immigration as there now is.

7th. The Chinese will never become amenable to the laws of the United States. They have courts of their own, and regard the courts of this country with the most profound contempt. With the exception of Mormons, no other immigrants do that.

8th. The Chinese are so numerous that they could literally deluge the country, and the loss not be felt at home. The less America has of them the better.

S. M. Hill.

DR. NATHAN BROWN.

Bro. Editor:—Allow me herewith to express my sincere gratitude for the faithfulness with which, in your issue of the 5th, you have chronicled the labors and missionary services of the late Dr. Nathan Brown. It has been with intense pain that I have noticed in the press of his own denomination an apparent disposition to withhold from him the credit due him as a faithful servant of Christ. This has appeared especially in two particulars: First, in reference to his work as a translator; and second, in his attitude in respect to secret societies. In none of these editorials is he credited as having translated more than parts of the Evangelists into Japanese, while, as you have stated, the whole New Testament was completed in 1879. This translation was not sustained by the denomination, on the ostensible ground that it was not learned, but too colloquial. Dr. Brown, as you are aware, replied that it was made for the people and written in pure Japanese; while what was claimed as learned had interpolations from the Chinese. The version was sustained, however, by private donations through Bro. Peter Howe, and borne to Bro. Brown without the friction and waste of machinery.

His position on the lodge question, through the entire fifteen years of his editorial supervision, was unmistakable. The force of his vigorous pen was brought to bear upon all combinations of wickedness and class distinction. His opponents writhed under the keenness of his logic and withering sarcasm, and concluded to treat him as the same class are treating the Cynosure—ignoring it. Still, the verdict of the ablest has been that, "as a reviewer, Dr. Brown had no superior."

Since writing the above, my attention has been called to an extract from a letter of his daughter in the Standard of the 18th ult., in which she states that he not only made the first translation into Japanese, but lived to revise it. Thus much for filial faithfulness

Yours truly, E. L. Harris.

AN ODD FELLOW CONFESSION.

I met one of my Odd-fellow parishioners yesterday, who has felt displeased with my opposition to secretism and tobacco. I showed him your exposure, exchanged grips, etc. He admitted much and denied nothing. He says it does not seem so foolish when gone through in the lodge as to read it in open day. He added "I am done with it, and am convinced that there is no necessity for secret lodges; but I think you will only get Christians to own up to the evil that is in them."

I said, "I suppose that, instead of a corpse or skeleton, they often use something to represent one during initiation?"

"Oh," he said, "I don't know that. When I joined, the man who was initiated with me couldn't stand the sight of the corpse and had to be taken out."

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED BRETHREN.

Clearfield, Iowa.

"We have or have no constitution." If we have no constitution, then we have no church government; but if we have a government, then we have a constitution. Nor is the constitution devoid of practical value because it requires a two-thirds request of the "whole society" to change it before it can be done; or is it good sense to argue that the words "whole society" may mean less? Of what is society composed? Of individual members. If two-thirds of the members composing the whole society had signed a paper requesting the constitution to be changed so as to admit members of secret societies into the church, no one would have said it was unconstitutional. But no such request has been or is likely to be signed, because a large majority of the society hate the lodge. If the church did not hate the lodge the constitution would not be so objectionable to the liberal part, consequently they seem to stand in need of some Masonic grand high priest, well versed in mystery, to interpret the words "whole society" to mean something else. Perhaps Albert Pike could interpret it in a way agreeable for the Commission. They will, no doubt, interpret it to suit him.

The constitution has been for forty-five years the fundamental law of the church, and has been accepted by the whole society; not only so, but it has been the best judgment of the conferences to pass laws under it successively till 1885. But if we have no constitution, then the General Conference was illegal and the Commission begotten of an illegal thing.

The outcome of all this is that the interests of the church must suffer every way. We are not of one accord, without which it is impossible to have revivals on the Gospel plan. After a long-continued, expensive litigation the Commission will find the constitution to be valid, but the church will be in debt more than its property is worth. Then the liberals will be willing to step out. But our principles are worth contending for, at whatever cost, and our rights we will maintain. We will not surrender to the lodge.

PITH AND POINT.

"OCCASIONAL," PLEASE RESPOND.

Will your correspondent of Walla Walla, W. T., in Cynosure of March 4th, 1886, please send me his address? I wish to co-operate with him in favor of the principles and measures which he advocates.—G. W. Day, Roseburg, Oreg.

A RULE FOR ANTI MASONS ONLY.

I selected five of the least objectionable of the N. C. A.'s publications, and placed them on a list of $75 worth of books to be added to the Riverside Public Library. The list passed through the Library Committee approved, but when it came to the State Board of Education, those five books were scratched off, the reason given being that the Board did not think it right to appropriate the people's money to purchase books for any public library that would tend to produce dissension.

That rule may be a good one, but it does not seem to work when the Masons wish to lay the corner-stone of some public building built by the people's money.—Albert W. Paull, Providence, R. I.

A PAPER FOR EVERY HOME.

I like the Cynosure very much—its earnestness in denouncing sin in all its forms, and fearlessness in doing the Lord's will in exposing the secrets and combinations of wicked men, in bringing to light the hidden things of dishonesty, in trying to inculcate good and noble thoughts on the public mind, and in upholding a Redeemer, Jesus, as our only hope of reconciliation to Almighty God. I cannot but admire the courage and fearlessness of all those noble men who put their lives in jeopardy and suffer so much persecution for the enlightenment of humanity, and exposing before the public mind the infernal abominations of secret societies. I like the Cynosure, and wish it God-speed. It ought to be in every home.—Robt. H. Buttermore, Lake City, Minn.

BLESSED SALVATION FREE FROM LODGERY.

I must have the blessed visits of the Cynosure. I have worked too much in the anti-secrecy cause to let it stop. I have held two meetings of nearly seven weeks each; at one about twenty converts and the other fifty. I have been in the third one a week, at South Medina; five have made a start, and three are happily converted. I preach and pray against the lodge. I ask the question personally, and also to my congregations: "Would there be any secret societies if everybody would become Christians?" I have the first affirmative answer to receive. All agree with me that there would be no possibility of organizing one. Then I add, "That shows they are all of the devil." God save the real U. B. church from selling out to the lodge power. Pray for Morence circuit.—W. O. Dinius, Morence, Mich.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON I, April 4, 1886.—The Word Made Flesh.—John 1: 1-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us.—John 1: 14.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The divinity of Christ. "At Ephesus, an outpost of Asia towards Europe, met the mysticism of the East and the philosophy of the West." The outcome was that perversion of Christian doctrine called the Gnostic heresy, which, by maintaining that Christ had appeared only in form but not in actual substance, eliminated from the scheme of salvation all that was vital and living. Only light can conquer darkness, and John's sole design in writing this new Gospel seems to have been to supply in the truth itself, the only antidote for the soul-destroying errors of these false teachers. Its opening, though often compared to the first verse in Genesis, as much surpasses it in sublimity as the mystery which it unfolds is a deeper one. John asserts Christ's divinity before he asserts his humanity. The most learned or poetic conceptions of Christ which do not rest on his divinity as their basis, must fail utterly to satisfy the intellect or the heart. The other evangelists show us the King, the Teacher, the Prophet. John shows us the God-man, and, so far as even inspiration can do it, carries us beyond his human birth into an eternity behind the remotest geological epoch of which we can only use Christ's own expressive phrase (John 17: 5), "before the world was."

2. His office and humanity. vs. 6-14. Christ's office in coming into the world, was to be its Light—not through his teachings merely, but by being himself a living manifestation of the truth. John was not that Light, but similar in this to the humblest Christian, he could only bear witness of that Light. The privilege of sonship results from receiving Christ, and is entirely one of free grace, having nothing to do with hereditary lines or human ambition. The Divine Word simply "was," implying both eternity and uncreatedness; but when he became man he "was made flesh," i. e., a created being like ourselves. Further than this no one has, or can, penetrate into the mystery of the Incarnation. Enough that we are not given a half but a whole Saviour; that he is not only one with God, but in human weakness, one with us.

3. The witness of John. vs. 15-18. John's witness to Christ was that full, complete, self-abnegating testimony which every Christian is called upon to bear. We cannot be that Light, but we can reflect it; only to do so we must keep near to it. No soul that starves itself on the lowest spiritual diet, can testify that "we have received of his fullness, and grace for grace." Here we have one of John's wonderful ways of compressing the grandest truth into the smallest compass. It is enough to know we have a little grace to be sure that we can have a great deal more—counting up with every fresh accession. Zion's bank not only honors our every draft at sight, but pays the highest rate of compound interest. But to witness for Christ we must beware of such companionships or associations as will stifle our testimony. A dancing, wine-drinking, card-playing Christian is not expected, even by the world, to bear a witness that is worth anything. But still less can a lodge Christian, joined to an institution that suppresses and even forbids all testimony for Christ. Does not such an one lay himself under the terrible risk that his Lord will deny him before his Father at the last day?

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What personifications of the Word have we in the Old Testament? Prov. 8: 30; 22: 23; 17: 8. How does Paul's idea of grace coincide with John's? Eph. 2: 5, 8.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"The Word." No translation of the Greek term, "Logos," here translated word, is at all adequate. Neither Latin nor any modern language supplies anything really satisfactory. Verbum and "the Word" do not give the whole of even one of the two sides of Logos: the other side, which Tertullian tried to express by Ratio (reason, thought), is not touched at all; for Logos means not only "the spoken word," but "the thought" expressed by the spoken word; it is the spoken word as expressive of thought.—Cambridge Bible.

Christ, the Word of God. That the Word was Jesus Christ is evident from verse 14. He is called the Word of God because through him is revealed to us the thoughts and feelings of God, as our words express our thoughts and feelings to others. 1. Christ is the Word of God to us through nature, for God made the world and all that is in it by Christ. Therefore Christ is the Word that reveals to us all that we can learn of the nature and attributes of God from the works of God in creation. 2. Christ is the Word of God in the Old Testament. He is probably the "Angel of the Lord" who so often came to men in the early ages. 3. Christ's own person is the Word of God, he "being the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person," so that he could say, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Christ is the revelation to us of the character and love of God. 4. Christ's teachings reveal to us the mind and heart of God; the heaven and eternal life God has prepared for us, and the way there; and God's desire that we should all come to him. 5. Christ's atonement on the cross is the revelation of God's love for us and his plans for us. No word of love ever equalled this or so expressed to man the very heart of God. 6. Christ is still the Word of God by the Comforter, the Spirit of Truth, whom he sends to reveal the truth of God.—P.

"And the Word was God." This statement annihilates two errors that might arise: 1. That the Word being with God, might be inferior. No; he was God, none greater than he. 2. That if equal to God, there might be two Gods. No; he is not one of two Gods. He is God himself, the One Eternal God.—P.

Christ, the Life. He is the fountain and source of all life, animal, vegetable, intellectual, spiritual, eternal (Col. 1: 17; John 10: 10); nothing in the universe moves or has power except through him. Whenever any living thing began to live, the Word was the source of that life. It is interesting to note that science to-day confirms this statement. Every effort after spontaneous generation, to produce new life by the forces in nature, is an acknowledged failure. Only from life can life come. There are great changes and developments after life has once been given; but when it comes to producing life, science finds its "thus far and no farther." This is peculiarly true of the spiritual life of the soul, the new birth into the life of God.—P.

"And the darkness comprehended it not," Did not receive the light so that the darkness would be removed. The primary reference is certainly to the constant closing of their eyes by the Jews to the light of the Old Testament teachings, concerning the spirit of true religion, the nature of the kingdom of God, and the character and appearance of the promised Messiah.—Abbott.

What is included in being Children of God? 1. We are born again into the nature and character of God, the same kind of spiritual life that he has. 2. We are members of God's family, the holy of all ages and all worlds. 3. We are under his peculiar loving care, dwelling under the shadow of his almighty wings. 4. We have a share in his beautiful home. 5. We are heirs of all things through him, his joy, his love, his character, his blessings.—P.

"Full of grace and truth." This phrase describes the Word above. In Jesus Christ is the union of two things whose value to us is infinitely enhanced by this being united. Grace, God's tender mercy and loving favor, might suffer us to continue in sin were it not joined with truth,—the true view of our duty, the evil and danger of sin, the justice and holiness of God, and the purity of heaven. And this truth would leave us in despair were it not conjoined with the loving kindness of God manifested in Jesus Christ, and showing God's desire for our salvation, and the way by which we may attain it. Note, too, that Jesus is full of grace and truth. They are complete; no alloy of imperfection is mingled with them. There is no scant measure, no danger of their being exhausted. He overflows with them.—P.

OBITUARY.

Margaret Stewart, wife of James Stewart, dicd at Lagrange, Wis., February 24th, 1886. Mrs. Stewart was born in the State of New York, September, 19th, 1810. She came to Wisconsin in 1842, and endured the trials and hardships of pioneer life. Fifty-three years she was the companion and helpmeet of her now bereaved husband, who is left to finish life's journey alone. She was the mother of nine children, seven of whom survive to bear testimony to her faithfulness. Mrs. Stewart was a Christian, she having united with the Presbyterian church when eighteen years of age, and her life exemplified the teachings of Christ.

The wife and mother rests in peace. She was buried in Round Prairie cemetery, the funeral services being conducted by Rev. P. W. Petcrson of Elkhorn.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 1886.

EVANGELISTS ARE GOD'S METEORS, to show by sudden illumination how the regular stars have become dim. The advents of Whitefield, Nettleton, Finney, Moody, and now Jones and Small, were each a meteoric period which changed the face of the church and the methods of Gospel labor. Whitefield was an Episcopalian, Nettleton a Congregationalist, Finney a Presbyterian, Moody a Melchisedec without license or ordination, and Jones and perhaps Small are Methodists. But, excepting Nettleton, who was a trifle bigoted, the sectarian fences fell before these evangelists like decayed fences on a farm, allowing all the stock to walk over them. Thus these prophets of the Lord reflect his opinion of sects. These new evangelists sweep like Southern cyclones. Pity that when the sect lines are blown down they could not be kept down. The rise of sectism is the beginning of church deterioration.

REV. SAMUEL P. JONES preached in the Rink last Sabbath afternoon to men only. Five or six thousand came out in a wet, drizzling, cold day and filled the great extemporized auditorium. The sermon was sublime. The slang and queernesses so liberally allowed him by the papers had nearly disappeared, though his sharp illustrations and terrible reproofs frequently brought out rounds of applause —the only ones, a Chicago gentleman said, he had ever heard in a religious meeting which seemed to add to instead of detracting from the spiritual power of the discourse. We shall try to give our readers next week, and forward, some extracts of these discourses. A circular was read Sabbath morning, signed by Dr. Scudder and eight or ten other prominent clergymen—Episcopal, Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian—earnestly asking the united prayers of all Christians in the land for this religious movement, that by it God may revolutionize Chicago.

"OUR POLICY."—The American gives a clear, candid and able reply to those who have accused that paper of "selling out" the American party or "compromising" its principles, by advising Americans to vote for St. John, who has written a hundred letters, more or less, saying, that he had not entered a lodge for eighteen or twenty years; and "I never shall enter another." This was the substance of J. Q. Adams' reply which defeated his election and secured that of Jackson. St. John was voted for nearly two years ago, after Senator Pomeroy had given notice to withdraw, and we had no candidate. A man who assumes that he knew more and better what to do than the thousands of Americans who voted for St. John; and who accuses us of "selling out" a party which is now "alive" and making strong progress, must have abundance of leisure and very little sense.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.—The winds now playing on "the sea of glass," (popular opinion) are all blowing toward the American party. Grover Cleveland, now Democratic President of the U. S., was chosen Governor of New York by a majority of 200,000 votes. One half of that majority, at least, were given him by Republican voters; and General Grant, who had been a life-long Democrat, was nominated and elected by the Republican party. This demoralization of the old parties makes way for a new American party. The white voters of the South will not become Republicans, nor will the colored voters become Democrats. A new party is thus becoming inevitable. A local politician from an upland county in Georgia said to us, in the cars, "In my part of the State, it is plain that neither Democrats or Republicans will have a majority in 1888, but some sort of a Reform party." He was, of course, a Democrat in the election of 1884. More than one hundred strong Republicans before the election, in six Southern States, say now that they would not swap Cleveland for Blaine. Leading Prohibitionists object to the name "Prohibition party" as unnational; and thousands of the rank and file Prohibitionists object to working on an evener with lodges behind tiled doors.

"A CENTURY OF DISHONOR."

This last and not the least of Helen Jackson's popular books, should be read by all who aspire to understand our Indian problem. The narratives of outrage and massacre of the Indians by our people excel in horror the Mountain-meadow massacre by the Mormons; and though Indians have practiced butchery in war, and tortured their prisoners, they have had the one standing palliation—the steady aggression of the whites.

There is, however, one fatal defect in the book. It omits, entirely, the cause which keeps Indians savages; that is, their religion; and their religion is Masonic. I have seen and heard Indian agents speaking for temperance, in the Masonic Temple, Washington, D. C. The agents were Freemasons. I boarded in a building where delegations of Pueblos, or village Indians, had just left, and I learned that the white U. S. agent, who had them in charge, had submitted to their long diabolical initiations, and so had become "a son of the tribe," with a vast influence over them. In short, the agent had acquired ascendency over them by worshiping their gods, who are devils. But as a Chinaman's religion is twisted in with his queue, so the Indian's religion makes labor defilement and degrading in men, proper only for squaws.

James Garvie, a teacher in Mr. Riggs' school at the Santee Agency, who sends a Dakota Indian to Wheaton College, says that he saw an Indian of uncommon power, physical and mental, sit down to be shorn of his long hair, as a first step toward Christian civilization; and that his mental agony and dread at breaking the oaths and obligations of his religion, made him sweat profusely, and quiver in every limb and muscle! Exactly the terror of Freemasons at breaking their oaths. Sending Masons to civilize Indians is sending small-pox patients to cure a pest-house. J. B.

THE UNITED BRETHREN CONSTITUTION.

"The thing which I greatly feared is come upon me, and that which I was afraid of has come unto me."—Job 3: 25.

W. J. Shuey gives two and a half solid columns in the Telescope to a discussion of "The validity of the Constitution" of the United Brethren Church. He has employed Odd-fellows and Masons to work on the Telescope, while the church expelled such men from its communion. As an officer of the First United Brethren church, Dayton, he has taken no pains to keep Masons and other secretists out of the communion by enforcing the discipline. He now knows that young men who are members of Summit Street church, which was once strongly anti-secret, are now joining the Odd-fellows and Knights of Labor; for we—that is to say, I—gave him the information, and asked him to visit the pastor with me and verify and redress the evil. And now, while standing by and seeing the members of his church and the church of his fathers joining secret, oath-bound, worshiping "orders," and officially sheltering and aiding on the making over that church or the members thereof to the worship of devils, he amuses us with long, learned articles on the "validity," etc., etc.

So, for more than ten long years, Presbyterian church leaders fought over false issues and "constitutional" questions, while all the time taking in slaveholders and rending the Presbyterian church, and thus kept that great and learned body aloof from the struggle to rid the country from slavery without human slaughter—all the while professing to be anti-slavery men! Does not the blood of the slaughtered thousands in the slavery war rest and rust on the coffins, clothes and hands of those unfaithful watchmen? (Ezek. 33.)

The constitution question is a short one: In 1837 the General Conference adopted a constitution, and instructed Wm. R. Rhinehart to notify the whole church by circular that their delegates would be asked to ratify that constitution at the next conference, in 1841; which notice was given and printed in the discipline that year.

In 1841 conference met, and the delegates, as warned and empowered by their election under the circular, proceeded to consider the constitution framed four years before, in 1837, but made such changes that, Shuey says (not shows), they adopted a constitution "radically different" from the one framed in 1837, which they were called by circular and empowered by their election under that circular to "ratify," which, Shuey holds, forbids them to amend or make fundamental changes in. He splits hairs betwixt a and the. The circular, he says, only notified the people they were to act on the constitution of 1837, and not on a constitution such as was in fact adopted in 1841. The conference had power to vote aye or no on the constitution of 1837, but not, he claims, on the same constitution which, by changes, he says, was made "radically different" from the form sketched in 1837.

Well, the constitution of 1841 was adopted by the conference delegates notified by the circular, and elected and empowered, Shuey says, not to ratify the one they did ratify, to-wit: the one adopted in 1841, but only to ratify that framed in 1837.

But the people thought differently from Bro. Shuey. They accepted the constitution of 1841, which has stood unchallenged for twenty years, from 1841 to 1861, when the lodge was rearing its snake-crest in the slavery war.

No word seems to have been uttered, no objection made that the circular-instructed delegates had transcended their powers by ratifying the constitution of 1837, changed ("radically") into that of 1841. The people, it seems, did not discover that their delegates had transcended their powers by adopting the constitution of 1841, until now, in the year of grace 1886, they are informed of it by Mr. Shuey!

Let us unravel this mystery. The constitution of 1841 contains this honest, plain, downright German sentence: "THERE SHALL BE NO CONNECTION WITH SECRET COMBINATIONS!" Discipline, p. 17.

After twenty years' (which quiets a title) cheerful, unquestioned and unquestioning acceptance of and acquiescence in the constitution of 1841, that clause included, which itself ratifies it; after thousands of our soldiers had been drawn into lodges to get favors of rebels, a Southern man and member of the United Brethren church, who had secretly joined a Masonic lodge against honor, decency, and the letter of the law, discovered that the constitution needed revision, and that clause needed striking out! And though overwhelmingly voted down at first, backed by "the world, the flesh and the devil," and aided by lodgites received into the churches during their twenty years' clamor against the law, that party at Fostoria, O., have carried a motion to revise the constitution by a committee of twenty-seven, in which Commission a majority are opposed to the law, and in favor of letting in the children of Masonry, while they take no measures to cast out the parents. The radicals object to that Commission of twenty-seven and its work. They object to changing their constitution by the novel method of a Commission instead of a direct reference to the churches; and thus the devils who ran slavery till it fell and then entered the lodges have shifted the discussion from the Satan worships of the lodges to the constitution, so men can take either side without hurting their consciences, and so help the party which helps the lodge without seeming to do so. Thus, by strategy and the blinding force of the money power, the lodge has this great and good church of God by the throat. But let these brethren remember that it is darkest just before day; that this kind can not go out but by prayer and fasting; that these lodges are not of God's planting, and they shall be rooted up.

Meantime, I would not secede. Luther did not secede from Rome till cast out. Nor would I support preachers who are Masons or Masons' jacks. The rebel convention of 1878 endorsed, by printing, Z. Warner's doctrine that minorities are not bound to pay church expenses. (Pam. p. 61.) "To the wicked God saith, 'What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth?' " Psalm 50: 16.

And if there is a wicked man on earth, it's the man who faces the whole canon of God's Word against the stupid, secret, false worships of mankind, and claims to serve God's altar, while he worships devils, which not even the ignorant Gentiles did. They worshiped devils, but did not yoke devil-worship with God's. J. B.

C. C. FOOTE'S INTRODUCTION SPEECH.

The State convention held in Wheaton in November, 1878, was one of the best ever held by the State auxiliary. The attendance of men well known as leaders was large; among them were Barlow, Browne, Ames, Pettengill, Chandler, Chittenden, Bailey, J. M. Snyder, Bishop M. Wright, Dea. O. M. Brown and others. In the convention was observed a stranger whose striking appearance was noted by many. A face of marked intelligence, a crown of white hair, a keenly piercing eye, an attention that seemed to take in every word—yet not a word said he until the afternoon of the second day. The resolutions were read and were being passed without noteworthy remark, when suddenly this venerable man, to nearly all unknown, arose and spoke to the resolution on lodge worship. The remarks were brief but they sent an electric shock through the convention. Their clearness, their force, their power of logic, their comprehensiveness astonished us. Immediately every one felt the power of a great mind that had met and vanquished the prejudices and the hatred of men, and that grasped in their breadth the principles of Christian reform. In that five minutes' speech C. C. Foote left the stranger's place, and took that of a recognized leader among us; and that with such a grace that envy and prejudice, if they could be felt in such a meeting, were impossible.

We have turned back to the Cynosure report and reproduced it as a fit accompaniment for Bro. Clark's sketch and the fine portrait of the first page.

THE SPEECH.

He wished to call attention to the worship of the lodge. The question is, Is there such a worship? He was sorry to say there is. This worship might be described under different heads.

1. It is a Christ-repudiating worship. He knew a case where a man was called on to pray in the lodge, and, forgetting for the moment where he was, he began to pray in the name of Christ. Immediately the gavel came down, and he was stopped and informed that it was contrary to the rules of Freemasonry to name the name of Christ in the lodge.

2. It is a worship of darkness. God, in his Word, describes himself as dwelling in effulgent light. At the creation God called the light day; the darkness he called night. Of himself the Scriptures are full of reference to the light that is about him. He is clothed in light. Christ is the true light, which lighteth every man. Masonry does not own Christ, the light of the world. Its worship is not a worship of Christ, but of darkness.

3. It is a lying worship. The speaker had heard Dr. Healey, formerly of the Tabernacle church, Chicago, and later President of Straight University, New Orleans, referred to as a Mason on this floor. Mr. Healey had told him in a conversation that he was not a Mason. President Blanchard explained his reference to the fact, saying that Healey acknowledged to him in his (Healey's) study that he was a Knight Templar, and produced his ritual, with the confidential remark that he did not show it to everybody. Mr. Foote—Well, he did not show it to me.

4. It is a bloody worship. The terrible oaths of Freemasonry prove this, as well as the actual cases that have been brought to light.

5. It is an incendiary worship. He had preached in a pulpit in Michigan where the building had been fired three times by a Masonic faction. He had preached in a pulpit where, a cup of cold water being given to the minister, it was mysteriously exchanged for a cup of poison. A mouthful was taken, but, suspecting foul play, he spit it out.

6. It is a persecuting worship. He had preached in a pulpit where the minister had received a package containing a halter, a bullet, and a package of poison, and a note saying, "Take your choice."

7. It is a murderous worship. A young Freemason had told him that Morgan deserved to die for revealing Freemasonry, and he would have helped dispose of him. He had preached in the Masonic temple in Le Roy, N. Y., from whence a company of one hundred renouncing Masons had come proclaiming to the world that Morgan had been murdered in accordance with Masonic law. He had heard Morgan referred to as having been killed. He would say Morgan was murdered.

8th and last. It is a hell-bound worship. He read a brief extract and continued: "An adhering Mason is sure of hell. I believe it and can prove it."

Read and Pass Them on.—The addresses of the editor of the Cynosure before the Bethel Literary Association of Washington City, and at Lane Theological Seminary, Cincinnati, repeated at Union Biblical Seminary, Dayton, are documents of great interest to reform readers. The former was printed in the National Republican daily at Washington, the latter in the Christian Conservator, Dayton. Of the former Rev. S. Collins, D. D., Hoboken, N. J., president of the N. C. A. National oCnvention, writes:

"The Cynosure of the 4th inst. is worth more than its weight in gold for the address of President Blanchard to the colored people of Washington, D. C., on secret societies. Copies of that address ought to be sent to every hamlet and cabin throughout the land. Every anti-secret paper should publish at least the substance of it, and call on its readers for the means of printing it in large, plain type, by the million, for the million."

If the Washington speech is so good, the other will be found equally so. The two papers above named will be mailed from this office to any address for three 2-cent stamps, or either one for two 2-cent stamps. Get, read, and circulate them.

T. V. Powderly, the head of the Knights of Labor, attempted last week to settle the railroad strike in the Southwest, and sent word to Vice-president Hoxie of the Missouri Pacific to that effect. He received a reply that was sufficiently humbling to his lodge dignity. Mr. Hoxie answered that he would be glad to meet Mr. Powderly or any other citizen, as such, who wished to have the troubles of the road settled on a just basis; but as a Knight of Labor, head or tail, he had no business with him. Govs. Martin of Kansas and Marmaduke of Missouri were more successful. They had an audience with the strikers, and then with the managers of the road. The latter they exonerate from any charges of violated faith with the men; the latter have unwisely obeyed the orders of their unknown lodge superiors in striking without reason or justice. The fact that a member of their order was discharged from the employ of another road in another State by an officer of the United States court is not reasonable excuse for their conduct. The Missouri Pacific managers agreed with the arbitrating governors to take back all the men at the old rates. Perhaps they will forgive their strike, as a part of the penalty the whole community must suffer from the lodge. The men have not complained of ill-pay or ill-usage. If they do, the governors should right any abuse.

At the last quarterly communication of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, says a lodge organ, a new full length portrait of Stephen Girard (who was an ardent Freemason) was exposed to view. Here is an account taken from the Baltimore Telegram: "The new full-length portrait of Stephen Girard, which has been painted by order of the Grand Lodge, was exposed to view at the meeting. It occupies one of the panels on the south of the hall. The great benefactor is represented as leaning on a bale of merchandise, with his hat beside him as if he had just laid it there. A full rigged ship is shown in the distance heading for the landing." But Stephen Girard was an infidel, and is called a "great benefactor" because he left a million or two dollars to found a college for the moral ruin of poor boys. This was his intention. It has been providentially and mercifully overruled by God, so that Girard College now teaches the moral precepts of Christianity. But such are the acts Masonry seems to delight to honor.

The ministers of McKeesport, Pa., have set an example to the churches. The striking employes of the National Tube works, said to number 4,000, met Saturday night and formed a Knights of Labor lodge. After they had gone so far, a number of ministers, who were present, rallied their courage and gave their fellow workmen such good advice that the assembly appointed a committee to consult with the manager and arrange a settlement. Last Sabbath evening Rev. C. F. Goss, pastor of the Moody church in this city preached on the rights and wrongs of workingmen. When the churches shall take their proper place in the labor controversy, insisting that justice, righteousness and the Golden Rule must be maintained by all parties, the workingmen will no longer be ground between the millstones of the greed of capital and the despotism of the secret lodges.

The Chicago Times has crowned Powderly, the chief of the Knights of Labor, Czar the First, coupling the title with the declaration that he fully merits it as the head over the greatest despotism which has yet been seen in this country! Thus, we may say, the Times condemns lodgery as a greater evil than slavery. We congratulate the Times on the discovery, and hope for its future help in the great fight for the protection of our civil and religious liberties, before another civil war shall deluge our country with blood and involve millions in misery.

—Secretary Stoddard started Friday morning for Ray, Steuben county, northeastern Indiana, where he is expected to preach and lecture in the church of which Rev. R. C. Wylie is pastor. Next Sabbath and the day following he has appointments in Bloom and Crete, near this city.

—Bro. Geo T. Dissette, having completed his engagement to the Illinois Association, has returned to his former home in Sabetha, Kansas. During part of the time of his labor in Illinois his family have been located in Wheaton. The best wishes of many friends follow Mr. Dissette, and we believe his experiences in this State will assist him in putting down the lodges in Kansas.

—Bro. E. Umbaugh of Brookville, Franklin Co., Ind., writes that he would like to raise a club for the Cynosure, and wishes a good lecture in his place. Are Secretary Stoddard and Bro. Hawley are both this week in that State, they may be able to turn that way.

—A movement to be commended by the whole country has been started by W. G. Steel of Portland, Oregon,—to have Congress set aside Crater Lake, in Klamath county, Oregon, and its vicinity, as a national park. The description of this wonderful lake and the grand scenery which it presents is given on another page. Mr. Steel is, we believe, the son of an old reformer, who died a few years since, well known throughout the country for his connection with the "underground railroad" and as an Anti-mason.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Death cuts down all.—Legislation in Congress.—Senator Colquitt as a reform Legislator.—Temples to the lodge-god and Albert Pike.—A great fight over a small matter.—A dishonest proposal.—Salvation for the lowest.

Dear Cynosure:—Death has been very busy among Congressmen and their relatives. Senator Miller, Congressman Hahn, the wife of Senator Hawley and mother of Senator Gorman are among the number. The first was buried from the Senate Chamber, the funeral being attended by the President, most of his Cabinet and the diplomatic corps.

It is quite improbable that there will be at this session any legislation on the silver question or the tariff. Both parties are divided on this question and each is so anxious to get or retain an ascendency that it dares not risk a division. Nor is it probable that the Blair Educational Bill will pass the House. Its postponement is supposed to mean its practical rejection. The objection to its constitutionality seems never to have been suggested when fifty years ago the proceeds of the sale of the public lands were divided among the several States, or the recent plan of appropriating the revenue of the whisky business to the cause of national education was devised. Perhaps Southern Congressmen think it will be easier to manage ignorant than intelligent voters. Perhaps it will; but the country is greatly endangered by reason of such Congressmen and such voters.

The numerous temperance bills now before either House of Congress indicate not so much a disposition on the part of Congress to act on this question as the outside pressure brought to bear on them. Among the weakest is that introduced by Senator Colquitt in reference to the Soldier's Home. It provides that no distilled or malt liquors shall be sold within a mile of the Home except in Shuetzen Park. This park borders on the grounds of the Soldier's Home and is the favorite resort of the German Sabbath-breaking beer-drinkers. It seems never to have occured to the distinguished Senator that this was making the house burglar-proof, all except the front door. The soldiers of the Home are habitually robbed of their money and their manhood by a set of low rum-shops, nor does the proposed legislation do ought to diminish the evil.

The new Masonic Temple at 1007 G street, N. W., which was some time since purchased from the Roman Catholics, was on Monday last dedicated by the Mithras Lodge of the A. A. Scottish Rite. The venerable (?) Albert Pike was the principal official. The flourish of trumpets and the notice of the public press that attended the dedication of their temple on 3rd street, were now conspicuously absent. The influence of the old Confederate chieftain is on the wane, even in Masonic circles. The great debate opened by Senator Edmonds on the report of the judiciary committee, in reference to the paper on suspensions, still drags its slow length along. On neither side does it elicit popular enthusiasm. A good many have been attracted to hear distinguished Senators, but the results have been rather disappointing. Great speeches require great occasions, and this is surely not an occasion for the display of great powers. Doubtless the Senators are right in insisting that they have a right to all papers on file in the public departments, but until something more important is involved in their refusal than the question who shall hold certain offices, they will not awaken enough public interest to make it a serious question.

The bill proposing to suspend the Chinese treaty for twenty years is a good deal like an act to repeal the Decalogue. Among simple-minded people it has been supposed that solemn international compacts could not well be set aside, except by mutual consent. But the Chinese have no votes and can't fight.

The Salvation Army are opening new stations and extending their work in the city. If they do no other good, they may at least provoke the churches to better and more determined efforts to save the perishing. The work of the Central Union Mission still goes on with good result, and there are at present many meetings of foreign missionery societies, which awaken much interest.

H. H. Hinman.

Speaking of the late trouble between the socialist agitators and the McCormick company of this city, the Interior says: "A noticeable feature of this socialistic attack was that all who were actively engaged in it were foreigners—mostly Poles and Germans. Another noticeable fact is that the McCormick company was defending the rights of labor against the tyranny of socialism."

THE WORD OF PROMISE.

Lord, Thou hast led us as of old
Thine Arm hath fill the chosen Race
Through Seas that raged, through Floods that roll'd,
To the mount of David's place.

Where Thy fruitful Valleys stream,
The Manna on every Field,
Thy Rock and Vineyard's Wells hath fed,
Thy Might with Sword and Spear and Shield.

Thy Lord of Hosts'
Thine Ark, and Sepulchre, Sons and Sires,
Where the Goddess heathen Coasts
Thine Israel's Altar fires.

The Saviour, Wilderness remote
Shall hear Thy Works and Wonders sung,
Shall see the Rocks that Moses smote
Yield Fountains in the Desert spring.

Shall see the Sleeping Myriads awake,
From Error freed,
When Land and Sea and Heaven shall break
For Saints that own a Common Creed.

The Gates that fence His Flocks apart
Shall fall and crumble in Decay,
And Love Throughout every Heart
In the splendors of the Day.

Then shall His glorious Church rejoice
The Word of Promise to fulfil—
One Shepherd's Voice
And God and Father over all!

—O. W. Holmes.

THE KINGDOM AND THE CHURCH.

In the New Testament no two ideas are more distinct than those of the Kingdom of Heaven or of God, and of the Church: they differ not only formally, but materially. The one is the idea Jesus most loves to state and to explain, that he has most often and variously illustrated by metaphor and parable, that he has steeped in the most august associations, made glorious to hope, beautiful by its promises, awful by its threatenings: the other he has but twice expressed—once in a casual way, and once solemnly in the address to Peter—yet in words that almost seem chosen with the view of accentuating its difference from the Kingdom. He builds the Church, but he is the Kingdom: human agency may help in the one, but he alone is active in the other. The apostles plant churches, but not kingdoms: they ordain elders, but do not anoint kings. The Kingdom is universal, ethical, ideal, invisible, what already is, yet what is still to be. Men are to come from the East and West, and are to sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God: the little child is in it as well as the grown man, the publican and sinner may enter before the Pharisee or scribe. It is the possession of the poor in spirit and the persecuted: it is righteousness, joy, peace in the Holy Ghost: it is inner, abides within man, is outer, working secretly like the leaven hidden in the meal: it is here and now, yet men are to pray, "Thy kingdom come." It ever moves in a circle of ideas that imply the sole sovereignty of God, the sphere where he reigns and men obey, and his rewards are unto the meek and the obedient.

But to all this idea of the Church stands in contrast. It is vast, visible, instrumental, the scene of varied human activities and agencies—a society men may constitute, order, and administer. The Church is a unity, a holding a community. There are many churches: each city may have one or several; in them differences may emerge and disputes rage; man may rule or be ruled, excommunicate or be excommunicated. The Church was the favorite apostolic idea as the Kingdom was Christ's; while he founded the Kingdom, the apostles planted, not a Church, but churches. And while these were the means, Christ's was the end, the Kingdom was the Religion, but the churches the method of its realization. It is an eternal ideal, ever in process of embodiment, doing its work by virtue alike of the immanence which makes it everywhere present and active, and of the transcendence which makes it a goal to be ever approached, yet never reached; they are historical facts and factors, working in the interests and for the realization of the ideal, creating the conditions needed for it, exhibiting the successive and progressive attempts at its achievement. To identify the churches with the religion is to commit a blunder of the first order: it is to lose the ideal of Jesus, to materialize the spiritual, to reduce to the forms of space and confine within the limits of time the infinite and the eternal. Such a view may be false—that has yet to be proved: but its idea of religion, its work and possibilities, are sublime enough to stand without shame in the presence of the most exalted doctrine of historical Christianity.—Principal Fairbairn, in the Contemporary Review.

SCIENTISTS NOT INFALLIBLE.

The "Higher Criticism" which has undertaken to reconstruct all ancient records, which re-wrote the history of Rome for the first five centuries, pronounced Troy a myth, and has sought to invalidate or correct the Bible history, frequently makes such blunders and mistakes that all but the critics themselves will soon doubt its infallibility. The Troy of Priam, that they decided had never existed, has been unearthed by Schliemann, with its Scæan gates and Pergamos. At Mykenæ he has found probably the very bones of Agamemnon, and the golden masks in which he and his friends were buried. The libraries of old Assyrian and Babylonian kings have also been brought to light by recent discoveries, and found to be rich in confirmations of the Bible story. They contain accounts of the confusion of tongues at Babel and of the flood, as well as many other illustrations of the sacred history. To two of these we invite the attention of our readers.

The prophet Isaiah (chapter 20: 1) names an Assyrian king called Sargon. He was, as far as we know, mentioned by no other historian. Berosus and Herodotus were silent concerning him. Not another voice out of all the history of the past was raised to tell that he had ever lived. The critics did not hesitate to declare that this silence proved he never had an existence. They held that it convinced Isaiah of a mistake and a want of inspired guidance. For twenty-five centuries the only intimation the world had that Sargon had never lived, was found in his passage of the Hebrew prophet.

But the Bible was right and the critics were wrong. The Assyrian discoveries have given us his full history. We are even permitted to study the royal archives of his reign. He was a founder of a dynasty, the father of Sennacherib, and one of the greatest monarchs that ever occupied the Assyrian throne.

Another example. The Bible makes the Hittites a great people in the earliest ages. They are contemporaries of Abraham, Moses and Joshua. A recent writer says: "We see their serried lines of chariots opposing Joshua on his entrance into the Promised Land, and in the decisive battle by Lake Merom. We see their soldiers of fortune leading the hosts of David and Solomon, and their women in the harems of the same powerful monarchs; and finally we see the Syrian army flying in panic from the seige of Samaria for the fear of the kings of the Hittites." The Scriptural writers make them a great and powerful people. But no trace of the Hittites has been found in classical history. In fact, of all known records, the Bible excepted, not one had one word in regard to this people. So the destructive critics on the continent and their imitators in England, with various degrees of emphasis, asserted that these Scriptural recognitions of the Hittites had no foundation in fact, that no such people had existed during Old Testament times; that this part of the Jewish history was indisputably not true, and that this want of accuracy destroyed the theory of inspiration as well as credibility of the record.

For a long time no answer could be given that would silence objections. Not a line had been preserved elsewhere concerning this people in all the history of the ancient world. It was held to be impossible that a race of such prominence could have lived, flourished and passed away without leaving traces elsewhere. The "critical method had proved the Bible to be wrong." So the critics said.

But the march of modern discovery has proved that it was the critics who were wrong. In 1872 there were found at Hamath, not far from Damascus, inscriptions that were of Hittite origin. Soon after, additional testimony came from Egypt. As the monuments there were more carefully examined, and as the work of deciphering inscriptions proceeded, behold the Hittites appear as one of the enemies most feared by the Egyptians, as a great people, occupying a vast territory, and as one of the chief of then existing peoples. Nor was this all; the Assyrian tablets and cylinders added their testimony, and carried the history of the Hittites back to nineteen hundred years before Christ, declaring that at that remote period they were a mighty people. Their remains have been found from the borders of Egypt to the Euphrates and northward to Asia Minor, proving that they occupied a large part of Western Asia and were a mighty race. Thus are the critics put to shame. So will it always be. We may sometimes have to wait for further light in order to silence them, but in due time it will come. "We have not followed cunningly devised fables," but the word of eternal truth. The storm of error may beat upon it and seem for a time to prevail, but it will stand, for "it is founded upon a rock."—Evangelist.

"I CAN PLOD."

The Rev. Dr. William Carey, who was the originator of the Baptist Missionary Society of England, and the great pioneer of mission work in India, was born in obscurity. His father was a poor man, and could afford him but little assistance. At an early age he was apprenticed to a shoemaker, and even after he was licensed to preach, in consequence of his poverty, he continued to work at his trade. Notwithstanding the difficulties which surrounded him, he was diligent in the improvement of his mind, and embraced every opportunity which presented itself for the acquirement of useful knowledge.

When he first proposed his plans to his father in reference to his great missionary work, he replied:—"William, are you mad?" And ministers and Christian people replied to his proposition, "If the Lord should make windows in heaven, then might this be."

His discouragements in first entering upon his work in India were appalling. When he found himself without a roof to cover his head, without bread for his sickly wife and four children, he made up his mind to build a hut in the wilderness, and live as the natives did around him. "There are many serpents and tigers, but Christ has said that his followers shall take up serpents," said the undaunted man.

God did not call him to this sacrifice, but to others, which required wonderful courage and persistence, before he achieved his final success, which has made him famous the world over.

What was the secret that enabled the shoemaker's apprentice to become one of the most distinguished men of the age? What brilliant gift raised him from an obscure position to one of honor and fame, as the author of grammars and dictionaries, translations of the Bible and other books. He either translated or assisted in the completion of twenty-seven versions of the Scriptures, requiring a knowledge of as many languages, or dialects.

He betrays the secret. In giving an estimate of his own character, he speaks of himself with Christian humility, but with full consciousness of the honor put upon him in the wonderful results he has been permitted to achieve. While not laying claims to brilliant gifts or genius, he says: "I can plod—I can persevere."

He does not say, as we see too often nowadays, "I could always manage to get along and keep up with my class in some way, without much study. I could jump at the meaning of my lesson; or, I can catch up a trade without years of hard labor," but, "I can persevere."

Plodding boys, hold up your heads! You may seem to be left behind in the race by your so-called "smart" companions. Plod on. Your progress may be slow, but do not be discouraged. Remember, "the race is not always to the swift."—Churchman.

CRATER LAKE.

Crater Lake is situated in the northwestern portion of Klamath county, Oregon, twenty-two miles west of north of Fort Klamath, and about ninety miles east of Medford, which is the best point to leave the Oregon & California railroad. The Jacksonville and Fort Klamath military road passes within three miles of the lake, and the road to the very walls of it is an exceptionally good one for a mountainous country, while in near proximity may be found remarkably fine camping grounds.

The lake itself has been variously estimated from one by two to twelve by fifteen miles in extent, but from my own observation, careful and critical, writes W. G. Steel, a recent explorer; I would say it is certainly not less than six miles wide by eight long. It is almost egg-shaped, ranging from east of north to west of south. The water's surface is 6,300 feet above sea level, and is completely surrounded by cliffs or walls, from 1,000 to over 2,000 feet high, which are scantily covered with fir timber. To the southwest is Wizard Island, 600 feet high, circular in shape, and slightly covered with timber In the top is a depression or crater—the Witches' Cauldron—90 feet deep and 475 feet in diameter. This was evidently the last smoking chimney of a once mighty volcano. The base of the island is covered with very heavy and hard rocks, with sharp and unworn edges, over which scarcely a score of human feet have ever trod. Farther up are deep beds of ashes, and light, spongy rocks and cinders, giving evidence of intense heat. Within the crater, as without, the surface is entirely covered with volcanic rocks, but here it forms one of the hottest places on a clear day in August it has ever been my lot to witness. Not a breath of air seems to enter, and the hot sun pours down upon thousands of rocks and stones that reflect his rays with an intensity that seems to multiply beyond conception. Directly north of the island is Llao Rock, a grand old sentinel, standing boldly out on the west side of the lake and reaching 2,200 feet perpendicular. From the top of it you can drop a stone, and it will pass down and grow smaller and smaller, until your head begins to swim and you see the stone become a mere speck and then fade entirely from view, and at least nearly half a mile below it strikes the unruffled surface of the water and sinks forever from sight in the depths of a bottomless lake.

There is probably no point of interest in America that so completely overcomes the ordinary Indian with fear as Crater Lake. From time immemorial no power has been strong enough to induce them to approach within sight of it. For a paltry sum they will engage to guide you thither, but before reaching the mountain top will leave you to proceed alone. To the savage mind it is clothed with a deep veil of mystery, and is the abode of all manner of demons and unshapely monsters. Once inhabited by the great spirit, it has now become the sheol of modern times, and it is certain death for any proud savage to behold it.

From Allen Davey, chief of the Klamath tribe, I gleaned the following tradition in reference to the discovery of Crater Lake:

A long time ago, long before the white man appeared in this region to vex and drive the proud native out, a band of Klamaths, while out hunting, came suddenly upon the lake and were startled by its remarkable walls and awed by its majestic proportions. With spirits subdued and trembling with fear, they silently approached and gazed upon its face; something within told them the Great Spirit dwelt here, and they dared not remain, but passed silently down the side of the mountain and camped far away. By some unaccountable influence, however, one brave was induced to return. He went up to the very brink of the precipice and started his camp-fire. Here he laid down to rest, here he slept till morn, slept till the sun was high in the air, then arose and joined the tribe far down the mountain. At night he came again; again he slept till morn. Each visit bore a charm that drew him back again. Each night found him sleeping above the rocks; each night strange voices arose from the waters, mysterious noises filled the air. At last, after a great many moons, he climbed down to the lake, and there he bathed and spent the night. Often he climbed down in like manner, and frequently saw wonderful animals, similar in all respects to a Klamath Indian, except that they seemed to exist entirely in the water. He suddenly became hardier and stronger than any Indian of the tribe, because of his many visits to the mysterious waters. Others then began to seek its influence. Old warriors sent their sons for strength and courage to meet the conflicts awaiting them. First they slept upon the rocks above, then ventured to the water's edge, but, last of all, they plunged beneath the flood, and the coveted strength was theirs. On one occasion, the brave who first visited the lake killed a monster, or fish, and was at once set upon by untold numbers of excited Llaos (for such they were called), who carried him to the top of the cliffs, cut his throat with a stone knife, then tore his body into small pieces, which were thrown down to the waters far beneath, where he was devoured by angry Llaos—and such shall be the fate of every Klamath brave who, from that day to this, dares to look upon the lake.

Crater Lake is but a striking memento of a dread past. Imagine a vast mountain six by eight miles through, at an elevation of 7,000 feet, with the top removed and the inside hollowed out, then filled with the clearest water in the world to within 2,000 feet of the top; then place a round island in one end 600 feet high; then dig a circular hole tapering to the center like a funnel, 90 feet deep and 475 feet in diameter, and you have a perfect representation of Crater Lake.

What an immense affair it must have been ages upon ages ago, when, long before the hot breath of a volcano soiled its hoary head, standing as a proud monarch with its feet upon earth and its head in the heavens, it towered far, far above the mountain ranges—aye, looked far down upon the snowy peaks of Hood and Shasta, and snuffed the air beyond the reach of Everest. Then streams of fire began to shoot forth, great seas of lava were hurled upon the earth beneath. At last its foundations gave way and it sank forever from sight—down, down, down deep into the bowels of the earth, leaving a great black, smoking chasm, which succeeding ages filled with pure, fresh water, giving to our day one of the most beautiful lakes within the vision of man.

WASHING DISHES FOR MAMMA.

Little ones, with white arms bare,
Say, what are you doing there,
That you're making such a clatter,
Tell me, what can be the matter?
Filled with wonder and surprise,
Little blue-eyes thus replies:
"Surely you must know, papa,
Washing dishes for mamma!"

Washing dishes, little one,
Some don't think such splendid fun.
Tell me, for I want to know,
Why do you enjoy it so?
"Little children like to be Useful, papa, don't you see?
Very happy now we are Washing dishes for mamma,"

"She has much to do, you know
And we love to help her so.
Greatest pains, indeed, we take
Lest the dishes we might break;
China, glass and earthenware
Handle we with greatest care.
True and trusty, sir, we are,
Washing dishes for mamma."

As I went away, I thought
Of the lesson they had taught;
Being useful every day
Makes us happy, as they say;
Love can make our labor light
While we follow what is right,
True and trusty as they are,
Washing dishes for mamma.

REMARKABLE ANCIENT RUINS.

The Chihuahua (Mexico) Enterprise reports the discovery of some remarkable ancient ruins on a hill or mountain four leagues south of Magdalena, in Sonora. The hill is about 700 feet high, and half way up there is a layer of gypsum, which is as white as snow, and may be cut into any conceivable shape, yet sufficiently hard to retain its shape after being cut. In this layer of stone are cut hundreds upon hundreds of rooms from 6x10 to 16x18 feet square. So even and true are the walls, floor, and ceiling, so plumb and level, as to defy variation. There are no windows in the rooms, and but one entrance, which is always from the top. The rooms are but eight feet high from floor to ceiling. The stone is so white that it seems almost transparent, and the rooms are not at all dark. On the walls of these rooms are numerous hieroglyphics and representations of human beings cut in the stone in different places; but, strange to say, all the hands have five fingers and a thumb, and the feet have six toes. Charcoal is found on the floors of many of the rooms; implements of every description are to be found. The houses or rooms are one above the other to three or more stories high, but between each story there is a jog or recess the full width of the room below, so that they present the appearance of large steps leading up the mountain.—Selected.

TEMPERANCE.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

It has more than once been said that the chief English and American exports to heathen lands are rum, missionaries and gunpowder. In these far-off countries extremes meet, and the man of God with the Water of Life finds the man of trade with his bottles of brandy; the peaceful school and mission-house are alarmed by kidnappers and the report of fire-arms sold the natives through greed of gain. We have hitherto heard very little of Germany in discussions about new territories and the battle of merchandise against the missionary in the dark places of the earth. But the Fatherland has now become united; it has its first Protestant emperor; it has seized colonies and entered the race of civilization and Christianity, which is fast circling the world. Since April, 1884, Angra Pequena, and four other territories in West Africa have come under German control; part of New Guinea and some small islands have also become colonies, and Germans are busy discussing questions of migration, self-government and treaties.

A recent article in the Missions-Zeitschrift on The Transmarine Brandy Trade sheds not a little light upon why the empire seized some of these lands, and what the business has been which attracted German merchants so far from home.

Zogoland lies beside an English colony, and the English put a high duty on imported liquors. The Germans do most of the business in ardent spirits; so when they saw Zogoland preparing to unite with the British possessions and pass under an expensive liquor tariff they became wildly patriotic, and the colony was seized by Germany to protect the brandy trade. A constant stream of cheap intoxicants flows from Hamburg to all parts of the heathen world. The following figures illustrate this: The annual German exports to Africa in a recent year reached $7,929,500, of which $3,000,000, or over thirty-eight per cent, was in ardent spirits. Most of it went to the Gold Coast. Hamburg sent 531,501 double centners of goods to West Africa in 1884, and 345,000, or sixty-five per cent of it, was brandy, representing $3,729,475. This dreadful traffic is steadily on the increase. During 1883 and the first quarter of 1884 a steamship firm in that city sent 2,453 tons of spirits to the Congo region, with 555 tons of other goods—or $75,000 worth of brandy, $75,000 worth of powder, and $62,500 worth of other goods. England and America have fallen behind in this sad competition of missionaries, rum and powder. Following our guide through the wide world of heathenism, we are met everywhere by the same sad sequence—strong drink going before, and despair and death following.

Says Dr. Reichel, of the Moravian Missions: "A cry of horror rises from all mission fields at the ruin wrought by intoxicating liquor." Drunkenness reached the heathen Lapps in Europe, and nearly destroyed them before the Gospel came near them. American traders and the Hudson Bay Company have done similar work among the natives of this continent. Of the negroes in the West Indies a missionary writes: "Drunkenness is the rule; no land has been so desolated by alcohol as these islands." In Demarara the white merchants have boycotted the missionary, Meyer, to force him to give the natives brandy for wages as they do.

Two German merchants, in 1883, imported $10,000 worth of liquors among the 30,000 Samoan Islanders. That is the business which led Bismarck to seize these coral reefs. The missionaries report that drunkenness is on the increase, and brandy is one of the chief imports in all West Polynesia. In Japan intoxication is so terribly familiar that a sign has been put up over a Buddhist theological seminary which reads, "Brandy is not allowed here." Burmah was once wholly ignorant of strong drinks; now they are the bane of the people.

But the Eldorado of ardent spirits is Africa, the Dark Continent for the darkest curse of humanity. The weak native here seems unable to resist this terrible destroyer, and the unanimous testimony of missionaries is that the natural cruelty and bloodthirstiness of the Africans are kindled into the madness of demons by fire-water, and beneath the wounds of European traders this poor land lies bleeding at every pore. The subject tribes of Madagascar "fairly swim in a flood of brandy." Some are never sober; men, women and children lie drunk together. Not a little of the guilt here must be charged to France.

Mohammedan influence hinders the sale of liquor on the east coast of Africa; but, in spite of that, the German traders import $20,000 worth of brandy a year. In South Africa the spectacle is heart-rending. Hottentots, Caffirs and others perish beneath this curse by thousands. On one Sunday, between 11 o'clock and noon, an English gentleman counted at the diamond fields 317 natives dead drunk, while many others were partially intoxicated.

West Africa is, if possible, in a still more deplorable condition. Every small harbor on the coast sucks in the deadly tide of sulphuric acid, sugar and water which these heartless traders present as brandy, gin, etc. The first German colony here was bought from a dealer in such drink. The Congo lands also, we are told, were bought with liquor. A bottle of rum is current coin. The request for a drink in West Africa is heard everywhere as one hears "Backsheesh" in Arab lands. One ship brought to the Niger 300,000 bottles of gin. Brandy has almost taken the place of the native beer on the Gold Coast, and drunkenness has become so common that it is a rule not to visit an official after dinner. No street preaching is allowed in the evening, for no man dare face the intoxicated multitude. From the cradle to the grave, every event in the West African's life is saturated with strong drink. Funerals are horrible to see, sometimes $500 being spent for rum and powder at such occasions. A missionary says at times a whole village is drunk. Many sleep with a bottle under their heads, for use during the night. One native dealer is reported as keeping 96,000 bottles of brandy in stock for the interior trade.—The Advance.

LITERATURE.

The History of Russia. From the earliest times to 1879. By W. K. Kelly, A.M., Professor at Nancy, and corresponding member of the Academy of Sciences of St. Petersburg. Translated from the French by Lucy Herriott Lang. In two volumes. Price $1.75. John B. Alden, New York.

In attempting to sum up their knowledge of one of the foremost European nations, most readers, even those with some claim to a literary taste, will be surprised at the paucity of their information respecting Russia. The lives of Napoleon, the writings of Voltaire, of Dr. Wallace and of our own countryman Schuyler, give us glimpses through the darkness which surrounds this great nation. A work like this must therefore be welcomed by the reading public. The writer is a Frenchman, and is an authority of European authorities on his chosen subject. He has spent years at St. Petersburg and is familiar with the language and literature of the country. Russian history, says a literary cotemporary, "runs almost in myth, proceeds into a wilderness of conflicting traditions, and emerges into a full day in comparatively recent times. It is crowded with imposing personalities and darkened by terrible crimes, striking events make it dramatic, the sufferings of a great people lend it pathos, the interest of the present hour and the uncertain questions for to-morrow invest it with deep interest. While the history of political events is told with fascinating interest we fail to find a movement of the deepest concern to Russia so fully narrated and explained as we could wish. The secret societies of Russia are a study apart from the lodge systems as we of America understand it. Dr. Wallace has more fully accounted for the political origin of the Nihilists, but his works are not very accessible, and have not the popular character of the present volume. This omission will be a disappointment to many. The volumes are fully illustrated and a full index adds greatly to the value of the work.

The English Illustrated Magazine concludes its interesting history of the Life-boat with spirited illustrations. The invention and successive improvements of the life-boat, the establishment of stations, the thrilling incidents in which its history abounds, and record of so magnificent an invention make up an entertaining and profitable story. The great English sport of Fox-hunting is illustrated by numerous spirited and humorous pictures of the chase. "Sir Thomas More" is a sketch of one of the prominent historical statesmen of England, the successor of Cardinal Woolsey as Chancellor under Henry VIII. "A Digger's Life" concludes the number. (Macmillan & Co.

The March-April number of the Missionary Review devotes a large and prominent place to a review of the life of William Carey, the shoemaker who became one of the most celebrated of missionaries and one of the most noble of characters. The conventions for foreign mission held in England are described and commended, also the efforts to secure greater union in foreign missions, which are now most deservedly attracting wide and thoughtful attention among the home churches. The news and notes from foreign missions, and from the missionary societies are full and instructive as ever. Published by Rev. R. G. Wilder, Princeton, N. J.

Two suggestive articles to appear in the April Century are "Strikes, Lockouts and Arbitrations," by George Max Powell, and an editorial on the Grant Memorial, "Who shall make the Monument?" "What kind of a Structure?" "The Question of Site" etc. The issue of the new life of Longfellow adds timeliness to a paper by Mrs. James T. Fields on "Glimpses of Longfellow in Social Life," which is to appear in the same number, accompanying a new portrait of the poet, engraved from an admirable picture in 1848.

The April number of Demorest's Monthly contains an interesting and well illustrated article on "The Castle of Heidelberg." Other articles which will attract readers are "The Industrial Problem," by Jennie June; "The Checkered Apron," by Joel Benton; and "Stories Told by the Maya Indians." The prohibition article is on "The Irrepressible Conflicts." The number is well illustrated.

The current St. Nicholas opens with a continuation of "Stories of Art and Artists." "French Painters," by Clara Erskine Clement is illustrated by the frontispiece and reproductions of paintings by Claude Lorraine and Horace Vernet. "George Washington," Horrace E. Scudder's biographical serial, is as entertaining as fiction, and this installment is of special interest, as it tells of Washington's first campaigning experiences—against the French and Indians in 1754. Frank R. Stockton "Personally Conducts" his stay-at-home travelers to Florence and Venice, where with the aid of the abundant illustrations they can enjoy almost all there is to be seen. Edmond Alton concludes his series of pen pictures of Congress which has for some months entertained and instructed the eager young readers of the magazine.

Vick's Magazine is always so bright and cheery that the season's changes are hardly observable in its pages. Its correspondence, foreign notes, pleasant gossip, etc., are full of hints for the thrifty gardener and florist.

—It is stated that William D. Howells receives from $50 to $500 a page for his literary work in the Century Magazine and in Harper's Monthly, and his estimated income from his writings this year will be about $20,000. But what is the substantial value of all that this brilliant author has written? What has he added to the solid substance of treasures that enrich the world for all time?—Evangelical Messenger.

THE CHURCHES.

—Elder Rufus Smith writes that Salvation Hall, at Maryville, Mo., is a grand success:—1, because all classes of sinners are reached; 2, because salvation is offered to all; 3, when they obtain this salvation they know it; 4, as they know it others feel it; 5, God has all the glory; the devil is angry; the saints rejoice; poor sinners are sad; saloon men and gamblers know their end; 6, all supporters of saloons feel convicted, and care not to be seen around Salvation Hall.

—Rev. R. Stuart, of the United Presbyterian mission in India, reports that the total number of communicants is 2,176—just 500 more than last year; that is almost 30 per cent increase. Number of adult baptisms, 537; infant, 231. Total Christian population, 3,245, or thereabout.

—The Methodist Conference at Wilmington, Del., lately resolved in relation to temperance that "no minister or member of our church is loyal to it who does not stand for total abstinence as the ground of personal temperance, and complete and legal prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquors as the duty of civil government."

—The Baltimore Methodist Conference at their late meeting adopted a resolution, to be presented to the Maryland Legislature, protesting against the substitution of high license for local option laws in certain counties of that State.

—The Advance says its columns have never contained so large a list of churches receiving so many accessions as its last two issues. The whole number of additions reported at the March communion is 3,788, of whom 3,010 were on confession.

—The past year has been one of great progress with the Peoria Congregational church, Rev. E. Frank Howe, pastor. There have been 116 additions, of whom 94 were on confession. The church numbers nearly 600. The average yearly gain in membership during Mr. Howe's three years' pastorate has been 93. Under the free-seat system the contributions for church expenses have been $1,800 more than last year, and though it has involved a debt of $5,000, both pastor and people resolve to continue it. A debt of about $23,000 has been paid during the three years.

—A series of Gospel meetings at Tabor, Iowa, lasting three weeks, closed Feb. 28. The preaching for the first two weeks was by Rev. N. H. Whittlesey, of Creston. More than 100 adults, besides many children, expressed publicly their purpose to lead a Christian life. Many of them were students in the college, leaving less than ten who remain unconverted. Rev. J. W. Cowan is pastor of the Congregational church in Tabor.

—Union services began at Iowa City, March 7, under Evangelist A. J. Bell, with the house so crowded that an overflow meeting was held.

—In the year 1885 there were 292 Lutheran churches erected in America. This compares favorably with the record of former years, the number for 1881 having been 143; for 1882, 203; for 1883, 276; for 1884, 255—making a grand total of 1,169 new church edifices in five years, or an average of 234 each year. Of these 1,169 churches 670 were German, 298 English, 117 Swedish, 41 Norwegian, 25 Norwegian-Danish, 14 Danish, 2 Finnish, 1 Slawokian, 1 Icelandic.

—It is announced that from fifteen to twenty missionaries will sail from New York to join Bishop Taylor's force in Central Africa. The receipts for the Taylor fund for the year ending February 5th amounted to $45,148; the expenditures to $28,696, leaving a balance in hand of $16,451. The number of Taylor's missionaries in South America is forty-three preachers and teachers. Bishop Taylor says over twenty missionaries are required for Africa this year. It will cost about $250 per missionary for passage to the various fields, and an average of $250 more for tools, machinery, etc., for the farms and industrial establishments.

—The forthcoming annual report of the Methodist Missionary Society will show that there are in the foreign field 116 foreign missionaries, 72 wives of missionaries, 68 missionaries, and 334 native workers of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, 309 native ordained preachers, 400 native unordained preachers, 694 native teachers, 16 foreign teachers, 250 local preachers and other native helpers, 36,950 members, and 12,625 probationers. This shows a decrease in the number of missionaries of the parent society, and an increase of 3,168 members and probationers. Under the head of domestic missions, including Indians, foreign and English-speaking populations, 239,589 members and 39,130 probationers are reported. The English-speaking conferences report 2,010 missionaries, 1,950 assistant missionaries, 165,730 members, and 29,157 probationers.

—The East Pennsylvania Conference of the Evangelical Association, at their recent meeting at Reading, decided to erect a monument over the grave of of Jacob Albright, the founder of their church. The conference took the most decided stand against Sunday newspapers. An amendment was offered to the resolution in favor of the prohibition of Sunday newspapers, that all the members of the church be requested not to subscribe for a newspaper that advertised its Sunday issue in a week day issue.

—The clergymen of the Methodist Episcopal churches of New York will hold meetings to secure signatures to a petition asking the Legislature to submit the question of constitutional prohibition to a popular vote. The petition will be circulated among the congregations.

—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union request that ministers throughout the Union preach on April 4 on Sabbath observance, and that the subject at the prayer-meetings that week be the sanctification of the Lord's day among professed Christians, and the proper recognition of the day by government.

—Mrs. A. J. Bailey wife of the Congregational pastor of Lake View, Chicago's northern wing, gave a most interesting and inspiring address on "Life Among the Mormons" before the Women's Presbyterian Missionary Society. She had been a missionary teacher in Utah, and had a very clear comprehension of the work in that field and its bearing upon the solution of the pressing Mormon problem. She said that a person might visit Salt Lake City and think from what they saw there that they knew all about Mormonism; but the only way to see it as it was, was to go as she did, right away from the railroads and into the small places. In Hooper, the place where she taught, the population was made up entirely of Mormons and apostles, and they were determined to have no Christianity in the place, for the Mormons of course did not want it, and the sad state of those who see the falsity of the Mormon religion and leave it is that, unless Christ's followers are there with the Gospel, they drift into infidelity. She told of a young man who, in one year after she began to teach him, was prepared to enter the academy at Salt Lake City, and now is at Oberlin College receiving an education which will fit him to go back to his own people and tell them the old story of redeeming love. She stated that she believed that nowhere else was such rapid progress made in an educational way as among the Mormons.

—The Western Christian Advocate has reported 25,000 conversions since the beginning of the year.

—One of the most notable of recent deaths abroad is that of the Rev. Dr. Tulloch, principal of St. Andrew's University. He was one of the Leaders of the Established Church of Scotland, a divine of erudition, an author of reputation, and a Broad Churchman. He was born in 1823.

—Ten missionaries recently sailed from San Francisco for Japan and other missions beyond. The Rev. A. Cooper, of Hector, N. Y., has intelligence from them by way of his son, Rev. A. W. Cooper, who, with his wife, is probably by this time in Siam. They enjoyed the voyage, notwithstanding rough seas for the first half of the passage. They reached Yokohama December 12, and spent the day visiting at Tokio. All were in good health, and they anticipated spending Christmas in Canton, China.

—The Examiner has information that two Russian Baptists who were accused by Russian "popes" because of their religious belief were sentenced to death by the court. Their wives, children and relatives were also brought into court, and when asked whether they would give up their belief they said, "Do with us what you please, but we will abide by the same faith." They were sent to prison, but they read the Bible there to their fellow-prisoners.

LODGE NOTES.

—The Grand Lodge of Quebec, at its last communication, passed a resolution which had only two dissenting votes, to the effect, that unless the Grand Lodge of England withdrew the warrants of her three lodges located in Montreal by the first of July next, that an edict of non intercourse would be issued against the English lodge.

—A new Masonic monthly magazine called the Masonic Era and Analectic has made its appearance in New York. It is to be run in the interest of the A. & A. Scottish Rite, or that branch of it known as "the Cornean," in opposition to Albert Pike.

—The Supreme Council of 33d degree A. A. Scottish Rite, for the northern Masonic jurisdiction of the United States, assembled in Boston last September. There were present fifty-two active, three emerita and 200 honorary members, fourteen States being represented. In the evening session the 33d degree was conferred on fifty-seven men, who were proclaimed Sovereign Grand Inspectors of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite and enrolled as honorary members of the Supreme Council.

—Trinity Episcopal church, Pittsburg, was thrown open last December 26th for the celebration of its 100th anniversary, by lodge No. 45 of that city. "Rt. Rev. Courtlandt Whitehead, D. D., Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania" and Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal church, assisted by Samuel Maxwell the rector of the church, conducted religious services. The Bishop preached a sermon from the text: "Little children, keep yourselves from idols"—and the poor man did not know he was joking in a fearful way, either.

Relief is immediate, and a sure cure. Piso's Remedy for Catarrh. 50 cents.

Messrs. Lord & Thomas of Chicago, the well-known and popular Advertising Agents, are about to move into new quarters at Nos. 45, 47, and 49 Randolph street, between State and Wabash avenue. The building is one of the most striking in appearance and elegant in Chicago; built of sandstone, it is 70 by 174 feet, practically fire proof, and lighted on four sides. Three large elevators and two spacious stairways, give abundant facilities for passengers and freight.

Messrs. Lord & Thomas will occupy the entire third floor, giving them a superficial area of nearly 12,000 square feet. This beautifully lighted room is unbroken by partitions, save a private office in one corner, thus bringing the entire working force of about sixty clerks into one spacious room, certainly the largest office of any advertising agency in the country, if not the largest business office of any kind on the continent.

Our friends who wish to see a copy of the Cynosure when in Chicago, can always find it on file at the Agency of Messrs. Lord and Thomas.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, or the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

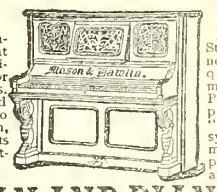
EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST.



"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

POPULAR FLOWERS.

The Cynosure readers should be acquainted with a plant that for usefulness for country churches cannot be surpassed. If planted in beds in front of village churches they give them an artistic and refined appearance, far more than expensive plants that give but little bloom. If the seed is planted in the latter part of April they will be one mass of bloom until fall. Most of your readers who cultivated flowers are aware of the existence of the old single zinnia, known as "Youth and Old Age." The present improved pompone zinnia, as grown by us, is twice as handsome, and they vary into all shades and colors in existence. They are an inch deep, filled up to the very top. In fact, they are so useful in any garden, that it would be hard to find a good substitute, varying so in color and beauty of bloom. We grew an acre of them last season, and they were the admiration of all visitors. Your readers will be surprised if they have never grown the improved zinnia, by testing them, even if they have but a box to sow the seed in, as they grow in almost any soil; only requiring plenty of sun and air. We have seen them grown to perfection in boxes on the roof of a neighbor. We find that the old varieties of annual flowers are becoming quite popular; we now see more marygolds, sunflowers, etc., than formerly, and it is a good step toward practical horticulture, as they can be grown in any handy situation. VIC KEEN, Floral Seed Grower, Philadelphia, Pa.

FLOWERS FOR THE GARDEN.

The catalogues of the florists set us thinking about next season's flower garden. We look into their fascinating pages and see so much illustrated and described there that we would like to have, that it proves a veritable case of the embarrassment of riches."

Let me give you a little advice. In the first place consider how much time you are sure you will have to devote to floriculture. Not how much you may have, but what you can depend on. Then look over your garden, and see how much space you can give up to annuals. You may also find it advisable to consult your pocket book. Seeds enough to stock quite a large garden do not cost a great deal, but these are "hard times," and a great many enthusiastic lovers of flowers will be obliged to consider economy.

Do not go into gardening on a too extensive scale. Have only as much as you know you can take proper care of. Do not aim to have a great many kinds, but let these be of the best and most satisfactory varieties, and see how well you can grow them.

Do not be in too great a hurry about planting your seeds. The sweet peas can be sown very early, as frost does not damage them, but the others will do much better if you wait until the ground gets thoroughly warmed through before planting them, than they will if you put them in earlier. If you sow seeds before the soil gets dry and warm, a great many will fail to germinate, and those that grow will not have the vitality that later sown plants have.

For a hedge, or as a covering to an old fence, there is nothing better than the sweet pea. It blooms all summer, and is beautiful enough to satisfy the most fastidious. If you want flowers for bouquets, for your friends, or for vases in the house, this is perhaps the most desirable of all annual flowers. For a bed in which you want brilliant color there is nothing better than phlox. You can have it in white, pink, purple, scarlet, and creamy yellow. It will bloom all the season, and requires but little attention. The best yellow flower for beds is calliopsis. Most varieties of this flower are beautifully marked with a rich dark brown, which has a strong suggestion of intense crimson in it when seen in sunshine. A bed of calliopsis is a "thing of beauty." It is very useful to cut from for vases, the long stems on which the blossoms are borne making it easy to arrange a group which is relieved of all stiffness and formality. This is not the case when short-stemmed flowers are used.

The balsam is fine for beds, if you clip off a good many of the leaves up and down the stalks, which, if left, will partially hide the flowers.

The petunia is a profuse and constant bloomer, and takes care of itself. A bed of crimson-purple and white varieties is very bright and showy, and always gives satisfaction.

For an edging, nothing is better than white candytuft.

For a brilliant screen, the nasturtium is good. The rich yellow and velvety crimson flowers contrast well with the pale green foliage. Nasturtiums are good for cutting, as they have quite long stems, and a few of them among less vivid flowers "tone" them up charmingly.

The very best fall flower is the aster. You can have it white, rose-color, blue, and purple, and some varieties are beautifully variegated. The best chrysanthemums are no better than some varieties of asters, which they so closely resemble that at a little distance it is difficult to tell "which is which," when you fill a vase with them. The aster is in its glory in September and will last until heavy frosts come.

Chinese pinks are excellent bloomers, and come in all shades of crimson and scarlet, marked with white, and a brown so deep in tone as to look almost black.

Ten-week stock is another fine flower, in white, rose color, and purple, very constant, and very sweet.

Mignonette you want for its fragrance.

Pansies every one admires, and no garden is complete without them. If your finances will admit of it, get packages of seed in which each color is kept by itself. Get a package of the blue ones, the yellow ones, and the black ones, and add one of the mixed varieties. These will give the best satisfaction in cool fall weather.

For growing about the windows you want the good old morning glory. This is a charming flower, which one never tires of. It will bloom all the season, and can be had in white, pink, and a deep, rich mazarine blue.

The above list includes as many kinds as most persons can care for well. They will give variety enough to satisfy any one.—Independent.

A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas, etc.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents, per dozen, $3.50.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by MRS. LUCIA C. COOK, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lehheus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

National Christian Association.
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual, domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees" [illegible]

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal: or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the In-ITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Ma-SONRY. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

IN BRIEF.

Family Physician: "I'm afraid that you have been eating too much cake and candy. Let me see your tongue." Little Girl: "Oh! you can look at it; but it won't tell."

One colored woman, Miss Caroline Bragg, is an editor, and her newspaper, the Virginia Lancet, is the single one known to be printed in the country under such editorial circumstances. Miss Bragg is highly educated, and has excellent business talent also.

A witty remark has been set down to the credit of Justice Chitty, the distinguished London jurist and author. In the middle of a case he was trying, a great piece of plaster fell from the ceiling, filling the court-room with dust. "Do not lose your composure, gentlemen," exclaimed the Justice, shaking his gown free from the lime. "Fiat justitia, ruat coelum! Let the counsel continue." And the trial proceeded.

In a certain small town the clergymen were very friendly. On the occasion of the Jewish rabbi's silver wedding he invited the Protestant clergyman and also the Roman Catholic priest. While the reverend clergymen were enjoying the good cheer set before them, the priest said to the rabbi: "I know that you are a very liberal-minded gentleman, but could you bring yourself to eat pork?" "Certainly, I could relish some ham, at least on one occasion." "And that would be?" "At the marriage dinner of your reverence!"

P. T. Barnum, who is always prepared to beat his record, has, since the death of Jumbo, been on the lookout for new and startling attractions for his museum. He lately made the proposal to the Italian Government to complete the excavations at Pompeii within two years, at his own expense, provided he be allowed the exclusive privilege, during the ensuing five years, of exhibiting any of the curiosities that might be found in the ruins. The Italian Government has not seen its way clear to accept the big showman's extraordinary offer, and Barnum will have to seek elsewhere for the new and greatest wonder of the world.

In no era of the world has wealth been created so rapidly as during the last thirty years. With our forefathers, land was the foundation of all riches, but in this modern era corporate ownership develops the largest accumulations. The telephone companies furnish a case in point. One of these, for instance, was organized with a capital of $1,000,000. The hundred dollar shares at first sold below $25, but they rapidly advanced to $1,000. Then an additional $9,000,000 was put on the market, and subsequently the capitalization was increased to $20,000,000. The hundred dollar shares of this company are now quoted at $175 which means that the possessor of one of the original shares for which $25 was paid has not only received in dividends many times the amount of the purchase-money, but actually owns stock to the amount of $3,500, or $140 for every dollar orginally invested. There are quite a number of telephone companies in which the stockholders have done equally well. All over the country will be found rich men who have made their fortunes in corporate investments of this character.

A plan for rendering paper as tough as wood or leather, it is said, has been recently introduced on the Continent. It consists in mixing chloride of zinc with the pulp in the course of manufacture. It has been found that the greater the degree of concentration of the zinc solution, the greater will be the toughness of the paper. It can be used for making boxes, combs, for roofing, and even for making boots.

The activity in railway building in other than civilized countries is really remarkable. England is hard at work on an iron route from the Arabian Sea to Afghanistan. The railway has reached the Quetta plateau through the Bolan pass. The Russians are working night and day on their trans-Caspian railway, which is approaching Merv, and will, in time, be carried to Buckhara and Tashkend. The transportation lines are to be in readiness for the tremendous conflict soon to take place for the possession of Herat. South Africa has now 1,562 miles of railway, all owned by Cape Colony, which pay a handsome revenue to the government. The iron horse has reached the diamond fields and is on its way to the Zambesi, which will open up the heart of Africa. If the Tory administration continued in England it would build the 280 miles which separate the Soudan from the Red Sea. South America is alive with railway projects; they are so numerous that it would be tedious to enumerate them. The Chinese are laying their plans for immense transportation lines. It has been found that caravan traffic is 150 times more costly than railway freightage.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this book.

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, every-day walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unraveling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions:" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

"THE WHOLE IS BETTER THAN A PART," AND YOU HAVE IT HERE IN A "NUT-SHELL."

SECRET SOCIETIES ILLUSTRATED.

Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc. of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite). Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen.

For sale by the National Christian Association, at Head-quarters for Anti-Secrecy Literature. 221 W. Madison St. Chicago.

A NEW

Anti-masonic Scrap-book.

A neat pamphlet, comprising forty-three tracts against secret orders, published by the NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. It contains some of the MOST POWERFUL ARGUMENTS put in brief form, written by men of distinguished ability, showing the evil nature and dangerous tendency of secret societies. Those who circulate tracts need the book to make their selections wisely.

Send for a copy to Anti-masonic headquarters, the NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO. Price, 25 cents.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Agricultural Department has issued a caution to farmers against the design of a lot of impostors who are engaged in a systematic effort to impose upon them by the sale of worthless seeds.

President Cleveland on Friday appointed General O. O. Howard to the Major Generalship recently made vacant by the retirement of General John Pope.

Rev Dr J G Butler, of the Lutheran Memorial church in Washington, was on Monday appointed chaplain of the United States Senate.

Direct upon the accession of President Cleveland's administration, Governor Murray, of Utah, signified through Judge Harlan that his resignation was at the disposal of the President whenever desired. Last Tuesday he received a telegram from Secretary Lamar that his resignation was desired. He promptly replied saying his resignation would be handed the President by R. N. Baskin, the delegate chosen by the non-Mormons to proceed to Washington to represent their interests.

General McClernand will probably be asked to accept the chairmanship of the Utah Commission which ex Governor Ramsey has just resigned.

Senator Morrill has introduced a bill to appropriate $[illegible] for the erection of an extension of the Executive mansion south of the present structure of equal and similar exterior character, and to be connected with the Executive Mansion by a corridor.

It is stated that the House Committee on Education have decided to report adversely the Blair education bill recently passed by the Senate.

President Cleveland has appointed John H. Oberly, a Democratic politician of Illinois, as Civil Service Commissioner. From Oberly's well-known character the President seems inclined to break down the Civil Service law.

COUNTRY.

Leading importers and breeders of Sussex cattle have petitioned the Illinois State Board of Agriculture that Sussex stock be admitted to competition, on foot, at the next American Fat Stock Show, to be held at Chicago, November 8th and 9th next.

An order was issued at little Rock Monday restraining the Knights of Labor from trespassing on, or interfering with, the property of the Iron Mountain Road.

Chief Mahedy, of the New York fire department, was killed last Friday while en route to a fire, his wagon being dashed to pieces by colliding with a fire engine. About a year ago the chief of the Cincinnati Fire Department was killed in the same way, and shortly there after the assistant fire marshal of this city lost his life under similar circumstances.

At a railway crossing at Orrville, Ohio, Tuesday, Mrs. Yachen was killed and her husband fatally injured. Their buggy was smashed to splinters and the horse destroyed.

Three working girls at St. Joseph, Mich., became insane Thursday over religion, and eight others are slightly affected. The Pentecost Band brought about their dementia.

Mrs. Abigail Bates died Wednesday at Scituate, Mass. In 1812, in company with another girl, she played a fife and drum so vigorously that the British left Scituate Harbor under the impression that a large American force was at hand.

In New York on Thursday afternoon, Alderman Henry W. Jaehne was arrested charged with having received a bribe, in consideration of which he voted for the franchise to build a street railroad in Broadway, after the resolution had been vetoed by the mayor. Jaehene was released in $20,000 bail. The affair created great excitement in the club circles, and rumors were afloat of the arrest of a number of other aldermen.

At Tiona, Pa., Thursday night, the dropping of a match caused an explosion of natural gas, one man being killed, while three others were shockingly burned.

Harry Morris, a Chicago boy, student in a college at Akron, Ohio, has caused the arrest of four students who "bounced him on a blanket" a few nights since. Morris's father threatens to carry the case to the highest court if necessary.

The pier-light at Frankfort, Mich., was relighted Wednesday night. Navigation is open, the harbor being clear of ice.

A scale of wages and rules, formulated by the Knights of Labor, were signed Thursday by the cigar manufacturers of Milwaukee. A general advance in wages is conceded, and after May 1st eight hours shall constitute a day's work.

Leaking natural gas exploded at Murraysville, Pa., Friday afternoon, fatally burning three persons and causing the destruction by fire of seven dwellings. The McWilliams well also caught fire, and at last accounts was burning fiercely, and fears were expressed that the flames would reach farther gas wells.

Lenham & Co., of Duluth, Minn., who own eighty elevators on the line of the Northern Pacific in Dakota, made an assignment Friday afternoon, with heavy liabilities.

The Illinois Supreme Court Friday refused a rehearing in the case of Joseph C Mackin, who is serving a term for perjury in connection with the election frauds in the Eighteenth Ward of Chicago.

The Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway shops at Milwaukee were flooded Saturday by an inundation, and 1,700 men were forced to quit work.

St. Paul on Saturday had one of the heaviest snowstorms of the winter. Street-car tracks were blockaded. The storm extended through Wisconsin to Illinois, and was the heaviest snow of the season, at some points being from ten to fifteen inches on a level.

A burning gas-main from a natural-gas well at Murraysville, Pa., caused much excitement through fear of a conflagration which may destroy the town. The flames are carried to a height of 150 feet. Later accounts tell of the death of several persons from the burning gas.

Jeff Davis, of Southern Confederacy fame, has promised to deliver an oration for the benefit of the soldier's monument fund at Montgomery, Ala., and to lay the corner-stone of the monument. The spot will be the one where he took the oath of office as President of the Southern Confederacy.

At Oshkosh, Wis., Friday afternoon, a sudden and thick darkness settled upon the city, causing consternation and stopping business. Horses ran away, and numbers of persons sought refuge in cellars, though not a breath of wind was stirring. After a lapse of ten minutes the phenomenon passed away, apparently traveling in an easterly direction.

FOREIGN.

Russia has informed Prince Alexander, of Bulgaria, that he will not be allowed to hold a life-title to the governorship of Eastern Roumelia, and that he must renounce that claim and content himself with the governorship for a single term of office.

Gladstone, in the House of Commons, on Friday stated that he hoped to be able during the coming week to name a day for presenting a statement of his Irish proposals.

Counterfeit coin to the amount of £500,000 has been put in circulation in Egypt.

Heavy snowstorms are reported in the north of England and Scotland. Many railroad lines are blocked.

During the year 1885 the number of Germans who emigrated to the United States was 84,680; to Canada, 692; to Brazil, 1,000; to the Argentine Republic, 726; to Chili, 628; to Africa, 294.

The London Daily News says that if Mr. Gladstone's scheme for home rule fails, the coercion act must again be enforced.

NEWS OF THE WEEK..... 16

The public renunciation of the tobacco habit last week by the Georgia evangelists, Jones and Small, was something new even to Chicago, and the demonstrations of sympathy and enthusiasm which broke out in all parts of the immense audiences were a reminder of the storms of applause that surged through the great national nominating conventions of 1880 and 1884. Many prayers have gone up in their behalf, and there has been strong faith that their piety was too sincere to permit them to leave us without this witness of the grace and power of the Holy Spirit upon them. We hope to hear yet from them that they are in respect to the lodge on the same ground with Moody, Whittle, Pentecost, Bell, Potter, Needham, Hastings, Davis—indeed, with about the whole company of evangelists, and above all, with the Lord Jesus Christ himself.

It is not presumption to believe that the agitation directed by the National Christian Association is affecting our national legislation, in the proposition of Senator Logan to discontinue the secrecy of the executive sessions of the Senate, which is a movement honorable, manly, American. He moved two weeks ago to open the doors, but finding few to favor it, withdrew the motion: but last week renewed it. The discussion may transpire this week and we shall see how well our Illinois Senator will champion a proposition so inconsistent with his lodge practice. Oh, for a Seward, a Stevens, a Sumner, or a Pomeroy!

The uproar lodgery is making in the business of our country should give occasion for a rousing speech on the whole secret lodge system, when Logan's open-door motion comes up for debate. The dispatches claim that the feeling in favor of abolishing the secret session is gaining ground. A majority will probably be against the measure, but it must soon carry. Our anti-secret leaven is working all through the lump. Fifteen or twenty years ago such a proposition would hardly have been entertained. But why should General Logan champion it. Does he want the American influence and vote? Does he carry water on both shoulders? We mistrust his Knight Templar Masonry. It has made him, we fear, a Jesuit. But what an argument he gives us! The secret sessions of the Senate are not secret; to maintain the idea is impossible. The papers publish next day everything, secret or open. So why longer keep up the pretense of a secret session? But no more is the lodge initiation secret. Hiram Abiff in all his vile and polluting nature is exposed. Why should not the lodge be thrown open as well as the Senate? Why, unless it is for the hiding of conspiracies against public weal?

Mention has occasionally been made in these columns of the assiduous cultivation of the lodges by Mr. Smith, late Treasurer, and now Licutenant Governor of Illinois. He has held the highest positions as a Knight Templar Mason, and as an Odd-fellow also; and is now traveling about the country getting up lodges ("cantons" they are called) of the new military degree of Odd-fellowship—the "Patriarchs Militant." This name might be interpreted as "warlike old men," or "old men on their muscle" in street language. Mr. Smith is drilling the lodges for war no doubt. No one who has observed his election to some of the highest public offices in the State can doubt that it is the array of lodge voters that has done it. He puts his old men of the orders on their muscle and gets the offices. As an evidence of the correctness of this view we quote the Chicago Daily News: "There is an impression abroad that Lieut.-Gov. Smith, while traveling over the State instituting cantons of Odd-fellows, is not forgetting for a moment that the more postholes he digs, the longer and stronger his fence will be."

The Reform Alliance has lately failed in a commendable effort to secure the enforcement in Chicago of the State law against liquor-selling on the Lord's day. Mr. Hood, the attorney of the Alliance, stated the other day to the Methodist ministers that he believed he did Mayor Harrison no injustice when he said he was looked upon as the tutelary deity of the liquor traffic in this city. In the City Council, composed of thirty-six members, there were eight saloon-keepers; on the County Board there were three saloon-keepers, and on every Grand Jury from three to seven. From these facts could be seen how difficult is the work undertaken by the Alliance. Every jury would be of the same complexion, and convictions in such cases were impossible. But the work of the Alliance must not be considered as lost. Such temporary failures attend every public movement of the kind. Let them go on. The work of the Southern evangelists is another wing of the army in the same battle.

The great strike in the Southwest is over. Jay Gould and Powderly, the chief of the Knights of Labor, got together last Sunday. After their talk was over, Gould, as president, sent word to the general manager of the Missouri Pacific road to resume the movement of trains, employing in preference old hands as far as needed, lodge or no lodge, except such as had injured the company's property, and retaining all who had been engaged during the strike. He saw "no objection to arbitrating any differences between the employes and the company." Powderly telegraphed the local representative of the Knights of Labor: "Order men to resume work at once." So the threats of the lodges to call out all their men in Chicago and throughout the country if need be, and of Gould to begin suits against individual strikers, were wasted breath, and the threatening clouds of a great labor war are dissipated. But suppose the man Irons, who ordered the Knights of Labor in Kansas City and East St. Louis to stop work, simply to vindicate the authority of the lodge, and without any just reason, had been the autocrat of the order. The struggle would have gone on till the business of the country would have been for a time paralyzed, and the loss and suffering entailed upon workingmen beyond compute. Surely, if they have a just quarrel with monopoly, much more have they with despotism.

"BE NOT DECEIVED."

(Gal. 6: 7.)

BY HELEN R. YOUNG.

"Be not deceived, God is not mocked:"
Oh! ye who plot from morn 'till night
To make the wrong appear as right;
Who watch the upright in his way,
And seek to make of him a prey;
Who strive the place of power to gain,
That ye as kings and priests may reign
Over God's heritage; know ye not
He knows your ways, your every thought?
The Lord of heaven his word will keep,
And what ye sow that shall ye reap.

"Be not deceived, God is not mocked:"
He whom the winds and waves obey,
To whom the night is as the day,
Who in the hollow of his hand
Holdeth the deep; at his command
Thy works of darkness, long concealed,
In his clear light shall be revealed.
The day of judgment draweth near,
And as thou art thou shalt appear.
The Lord of heaven his word will keep,
And what thou sowest thou shalt reap.

"Be not deceived, God is not mocked;"
Show mercy now, prolong thy days,
That thou mays't yet learn wisdom's ways.
The day of grace will soon be past,
The gate of mercy close at last.
God's Spirit will not always strive,
If still at evil you connive.
Soon will his edict make thee know,
Thus far, no farther shalt thou go.
The Lord of heaven his word will keep,
And what thou sowest thou shalt reap.

THE PROVINCE OF CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

There are two conceptions of civil government that enter into the theories of writers on political questions and that practically effect the affairs of nations. One of them is the Socialistic theory, the dream and demand of the Socialists. It assumes that it is the object and province of government to provide for the people. It holds that all land should be held by the government and allotted to the people as they need. It makes it the duty of the State to provide employment and secure remunerative wages for all. It assumes that manufacturing and all other interests shall be so protected as to secure an adequate market and fair profits. It holds that each country shall have a circulating medium for its own exclusive use which shall be a legal tender in all cases and consist essentially in the credit of the nation. It assumes that it is the right and duty of each government to exclude the immigration of all other persons whose labor may come in competition or whose presence may be distasteful to any of the people. It would prevent both wealth and poverty, and to do this would have a graduated income tax which, beyond a certain limit, would make all increase of wealth impossible. In short, it assumes that the only law of right is the fiat of the nation, and that this power is to be exercised for the exclusive benefit of its citizens.

The other theory is that the object of government is simply protection. It assumes that all men have inherent and inalienable rights and that to secure these rights governments as instituted among men deriving their just powers both from the Divine law of justice and the consent of the governed. It holds that to be a citizen of the world is more than to be a citizen of any nation and that all men have an inherent right to live any where and under any government, so that they are law-abiding and self-supporting. Beyond what is involved in the protection of inherent rights and an adequate provision for the public defense, it does not concern itself. It may indeed authorize a system of public schools, but only on the ground that ignorance and immorality are sources of imminent danger. It cares for the indigent and the insane, not only because humanity, but public safety demands it. For the protection of society it prohibits all business that is destructive of the public good; but so far as ligetimate commerce, whether domestic or with other nations, it recognizes the right of all men to buy and sell without restriction and in all markets. It protects all kinds of business by securing to it an open field and, as far as possible, a free market; but it grants no monopolies and subsidizes no special interests. According to this theory the government is no more responsible for supplying the people with money than with bread. True, it may coin money, if it has the means to purchase the bullion, and put a stamp on it equal to its commercial value in the market of the world. It may issue certificates of deposit which shall represent such coin; and in circumstances of extreme necessity it may emit bills of credit which shall be receivable for public dues. But it cannot create or give value to that which has not in itself some intrinsic value, nor can it commit to any individual or corporation the authority to issue any thing as money. As a just government it will protect its citizens in the right to earn their bread so it will give them equal protection in earning money, but in no case will it be bound to provide either.

Nor can a protective government concern itself with the quantity of money. A law higher than that of any nation will determine this matter. When our exports exceed our imports there will be an inflow of the world' scurrency; when our exports are less than what we buy the tide will flow outward. Doubtless in nations like our own, when gold and silver are produced in large quantities there should be free coinage, but always of a standard of value that will be accepted in the market of the world.

A nation that has for its primary object to protect the inherent rights of man will regard itself as one of the family of nations. It will regard the interests of such nations and that of their citizens as just as valuable and important as those of its own, and hence will in all international relations be guided by the Divine law of love. War with other nations would be as incompatable with its principles as is fighting between individual Christians.

It may be questioned if either of these conceptions of the nation and province of government is complete in itself, but it cannot be doubted that the latter corresponds most with the Divine idea of rulers being a terror to evil-doers and a praise to them that do well. To the socialistic idea it is objected, that it takes away individual responsibility and discourages individual enterprise by limiting its rewards. It sets at naught the wholesome doctrine that "if a man will not work neither shall he eat." It tends to the isolation of nations and destroys the common brotherhood in humanity. It sets aside the truth that all men have inherent rights and makes the privileges of citizenship the gift of the State. Its greatest objection is that it is not based on the natural law of justice but regards the will of the people as the absolute law.

Doubtless there is a debatable ground between these two theories. Whether the government should not only carry the mails, but own the railroads, the telegraphs and the savings banks, are questions which depend on how far it is the duty of the government to have a patriarchal instead of a simply protective care for its citizens. It cannot be doubted that the drift of public opinion, both in this country and in Europe is largely towards the socialistic theory and that there is great danger that it will become the controlling principle in our nation. The great network of secret and communistic societies have done much to educate the public mind in this direction, and our most imminent danger is that the socialistic outbreaks of London, Chicago and other great cities are but the premonition of a terrible overthrow of existing institutions and laws, and in the final result a practical anarchy.

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

There is a certain school of theology which teaches that if we will but walk worthy of ourselves, worthy of the noblest and best that is in us, we are all right for this world and the next. I am not a theologian, and do not propose to go into any examination of the doctrine,—only to put right over against it the Pauline idea, which is its exact antipode: "Walk worthy of the Lord."

There are many churches to-day of Puritan creed but very un-Puritan practice. They read Paul's command, but they substitute self for God. And as walking worthy of one's self generally ends in living on the level of the common humanity around us—to speak more concisely, the broad road—it is no difficult task. This kind of theology enters into and has an affinity for all man-made religions; of course, it requires no separation from the lodge. There is no end to its vagaries. It is now studying the doctrines of Buddhism in elegant parlors at the "Hub," and why should it have anything to say against Masonry, which boasts the same esoteric principles and claims to be even more ancient.

Here is the difference between the word of man and the Word of God:—All the difference there is between the shifting, weather-cock standard of self and the standard of Eternal Unchangeableness. And what is "the highest and best that is in us" of which the prophets in this school of theology make so much account? Even to him who has cultivated the closest acquaintanceship with his own heart the term can only express an unknown quantity. He never knows what is in him. He may fall miserably, like Peter, in the moment of greatest self-security. He may admire goodness and long after Truth, and be ready to kiss the hem of her garment when she appears; but how can he tell whether this spiritual instinct is part and parcel of his nature, or a spark out of the divine, and in reality no part of himself at all? I do not wonder that disciples in this particular school of theology are apt to use expressions that nobody understands, to veil from others the fact that they don't understand themselves.

But to "walk worthy of God" gives us firm ground beneath our feet, an infinite Beyond always beckoning; heights we have never scaled, depths we have never sounded. And yet the so-called "liberal" Christianity of our day would send us all back into our little soul-shells and tell us to walk worthy of ourselves! That is its evangel to the world.

What is it to walk worthy of God? To have continually before us Himself—the wisdom that never errs, the strength that never tires, the love that never changes. It is to walk on the same heights that the apostles trod, and the noble army of martyrs, and all the uncounted multitude of devout and humble souls that the world knows not of. That is the glorious liberty of the children of God.

THE PRODIGAL SON AS A PENITENT.

BY ELDER A. SIMS.

Let us notice the cause of his repentance. It is worthy of notice that the very means which the prodigal used for the purpose of obtaining happiness, became, when they were gone, the occasion of his repentance. "And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land, and he began to be in want." To his bitter sorrow, he soon realized the wretched destitution which inevitably follows a course of wastefulness and debauchery. He became conscious of his beggarly condition and the alarming scarcity of food at the very time when he needed it most. To obtain a livelihood, probably, he chose to degrade himself still further by joining himself to a citizen of that country, who put him to the base, degrading work of feeding swine; which, of all kinds of employment, was the most disgraceful and vile in the eyes of a Jew.

What a striking illustration is this of the shame and dishonor to which man stoops when he starts on the down grade of disobedience, and wishes to relieve himself of the trouble into which his transgression has brought him! Because he has done one wrong deed and suffers in consequence of it, to rid himself of his grief, he willingly commits a sin at which he would have shuddered before his disobedience began. So it was with this wandering youth. Before he left his father's home and entered upon his career of dissipation, he would have abhorred the very thought of serving swine. But now, having fallen into the mire of sin, he consents unblushingly to sink still further. Pinched with the pangs of hunger, he desired to appease his appetite with the swine's food; but no man gave unto him. He had found many upon whom he could lavishly spend his substance; but now, in his extreme necessity, no one gives him a morsel of bread or any other kind of food. O, what a sight is this! What wretchedness! How forlorn his condition! Come here all ye that think light of sin, and are indeed fond of it, and see what it did for this youth. It made him a wreck, an outcast, ragged, dirty, hungry and thirsty, homeless—stripped of his true dignity and all respect.

Truly, of all unsatisfying, disappointing, deceiving things in the world, sin is the worst. It allures very strongly; it glitters for a moment; but when the soul craves most for solid enjoyment, pleasure and bliss, it is found to afford nothing but misery and woe. But miserable as his condition was, it became a blessing to him; it brought him to his senses. Hitherto he had been acting the part of a madman; but now, when brought face to face with poverty, we read, "He came to himself." Here we have the first dawn of a gracious change in his mind. He began to consider and seriously to reflect upon the bountiful provisions which even his father's servants enjoyed, and upon his own famishing condition. "How many hired servants of my father have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger!" Well enough might such a consideration as this lead him to resolve on repentance. He realized that the weight of evidence against his continuance in that course of misery was more than he could bear, and from the deep sorrow of his heart he exclaimed: "I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him: Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants."

This was the expression of a truly penitent heart—of an earnest desire for reformation. He saw and felt that he was not only physically wretched, but that he had done a most grievous and aggravated wrong to his father. His chief concern was not only his personal unhappiness, but the base ingratitude and disobedience of which he had been guilty towards his loving parent at home. "Father, I have sinned." Though shriveled with famine, he was more anxious, he was more earnest to obtain forgiveness than to get food. It was the godly sorrow he felt that moved him. Thus it was that his poverty and degradation, though brought about by his own egregious folly, led to a blessed change in his mind.

Yes, it is often the case that God uses the very misery into which we plunge by sin as an instrument in opening our eyes and then our hearts. The sorrow and trouble which we bring upon us by wrong-doing God turns into a medicine that restores us to a sane state of mind.

Mark well the change in his conduct. The resolution formed in the mind of the prodigal was soon carried into effect. "He arose and came to his father." By thus abandoning his sinful ways and turning homewards, he evidenced the genuineness of his repentance. Earnestly desiring his father's forgiveness for what he had done, he was determined at all hazards to make application to him. He was willing to take the meanest place in his father's house, if thus he could obtain his father's favor. In no other part of Scripture, I think, are the marks of true repentance more accurately shown than in this parable. It shows most conclusively that every impenitent sinner—in a moral sense—is beside himself. It points out that if he will but seriously ponder over his disgraceful, miserable, undone condition, will consider what he is losing, and the dreadful crime he is committing against so infinitely merciful and benevolent a Father; such a consideration, I say, will lead him to resolve on forsaking sin and turning to God. It shows, too, that a resolution made must be at once carried into effect.

This young man not only said he would go, but he went. So must every one that desires pardon do likewise. He must not only acknowledge before God his guilt—"Against thee, thee only have I sinned"—but he must actually turn from evil. Thousands resolve to do better, but that is the end of the matter with them. Such resolutions only increase their guilt and woe.

Who, like the prodigal son, are found penitent as their eyes scan these words? Who is breathing out this determination: "I will arise and go to my Father?" Present action you must perform; not next year, nor to-morrow, but now. God calls you to arise; it is for you to bestir yourself and to leave off your sins, and go for pardon direct to the cross with your rags and filth. Will you arise now?

THE PERFECT WORD.

BY REV. ISAAC BANCROFT.

The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul. Psa. 19: 7.

The law of the Lord is God's Word, the whole of it. Nothing can be taken from it and nothing added to it; that is, everything needed to convert men from sin to holiness, from Satan to God, is in it. It is perfect, nothing wanting, nothing lacking; and this text shows the only object for which the Bible was written—to convert men from Satan and his service to God and his service; or in other words, to save men. All the ways and means needful for this are provided for in the Word of God. Jesus came to this world to seek and to save them that are lost, and we are to be workers together with him; then we must work as he directs and in no other way. His way is the best, for he knows everything, and he says he will teach us all things. Now that is just the kind of teacher. All men make mistakes; Jesus, never.

Now will all my readers resolve with me now, that from this onward forevermore we as Christians will cease to take for God's commandments doctrines of men, and from this time onward forevermore we will take the Word of God alone for our guide and will test all the teachings of men by this standard and hold them to this standard forevermore.

I have had my thoughts turned to this subject by seeing so much said about preachers and how to support them. I think God has plainly taught us how to have both in abundance. My next paper will be how to get money; and my third, how to get preachers.

THE SONG OF THE WORKERS.

I sing the song of the workers, the men of the brawny arm,
Who give us our daily bread, and keep us from hunger,s harm;
Who labor afar in the forest, who leaven the fields with toil,
Who take no heed of the sunshine, and mind not sweat or toil.

I sing the song of the workers, who harvest the golden grain,
And bind it, and thrash it, and sift it, nor eare for the sting and stain;
Who load it in creaking wagons, and stoutly their oxen drive,
And bid them good-bye as they go, like the bees flying home to the hive.

I sing the song of the workers, the men who struggle and strain,
Who give us their musele and nerve, as they guard the loaded train;
Who give us their sinew and brain, as they watch the prisoned steam,
And run the risk of their lives, as they pass the perilous stream.

I sing the song of the workers, the men who labor and thrive,
Who handle for us the honey that comes to the human hive;
The patient and tireless workers, with museles as tough as steel,
Who earry the heaviest burdens, and lift, and trundle, and wheel.

I sing the song of the workers, demanding for every one
His just and rightful due for all the work he has done;
For all the work of the workers, no matter whom or where,
To each from the grand result, his honest proportionate share.

THE CHURCH FOR THE POOR.

A correspondent of the Chicago Daily News having asked if Mr. Moody "would not be doing his Maker and himself a greater service by, instead of soliciting money to erect missions and churches for the working class, applying that money to alleviating the pangs of hunger and cold which hundreds, I almost can say thousands, are suffering even to-day," the editor replies:

"No! It is a principle as old as history and as unquestionable as the blue of heaven, that he who disseminates truth and the teachings of Christianity does better for mankind than he who merely alleviates physical needs. The influence of an active church or mission in a community is incalculably more truly beneficial than the distribution of alms among the cold and hungry. Just as surely as the whole is greater than any part, so is the religious influence that begets material beneficence superior to it. You might take the whole of Vanderbilt's $200-,000,000 and distribute it among the poor of America and before the end of a year they would be none the better for it. Indeed, they would be worse off, for they would be less self-dependent. They would be looking for the next rich donation, and would starve or freeze rather than go forth and earn their food and clothing by honest, hopeful, cheerful, labor. All our correspondent has to do to assure his mind that we are right in this estimate of the relative value of founding missions for workingmen and material charity is to travel and see how church spires smile upon the prosperity of the communities in which they abound, and how poverty huddles and shivers in the shadow of charitable institutions.

"Moreover, a mission or church society is forever a center from which relief is always going out to help the needy and comfort the distressed. It is a perennial fountain of good works. We are speaking of a live mission—of one in which the spirit of the Gospel, as preached by Mr. Moody and every minister worthy of his calling, is not a dead, soulless, inhuman mockery. A church may be as cold and unprofitable to its neighborhood as the stones in its walls. That is not the kind of a church that such a man as Mr. Moody contemplates. He believes in a church that has its roots in men's hearts and which calls all who are weary and heavy laden, hungry, naked, and footsore to take shelter under its spreading branches, there to receive what is good both for the body and the soul."

LABOR AND WAR.

The most sensational events of the past month have been the Socialist riots in London and in several of the chief Provincial towns.

In the Metropolis, on Monday, February the 8th, the chief police authorities, at Scotland Yard, appeared to have become paralyzed, and the mob took matters into their own hands; they proceeded along Pall Mall, St. James's street, Piccadilly, Upper and Lower Audley street, Grosvenor Square, and Oxford street, smashing the windows of clubs and mansions, ransacking shops, looting jewelry and other valuable wares, insulting ladies, stopping vehicles, and pillaging generally. The next two days saw an extension of panic throughout the Metropolis. From Kennington to Stock Newington, and from the Tower to Hamstead, shops were closed, and in many cases barricaded with thick boards. The police shared in, and indeed helped largely to extend, this panic, which it took several days to allay.

The lessons of the whole affair are manifold. The mischiefs of socialism and of the leadership of cunning and selfish demagogues furnish but a portion of the instruction to be derived from these events.

They are reminders, though in a minor degree, of the far greater terror and destruction occasioned by actual warfare.

There is, at least, one lesson which these events should really bring home to the English people, and especially to the middle-class voters and ratepayers. It is the costly pressure of the spirited foreign policy which both parties in the State have indulged in for many years past, without any effectual resistance on the part of the great majority of the people. This policy has led to wars and armed interferences with other nations, which have imposed enormous burdens upon the British taxpayer, and which have had a very material influence in increasing the severe depression of trade, manufactures and commerce. The employers of labor have first felt the pressure. Then the reduction of wages all round has brought wide-spread distress upon the working classes, both in town and country. And although the recent riots were but little, if at all shared in by the working classes, yet there is no doubt that these disturbances were largely and immediately the result of the prevailing poverty. The socialist demagogue finds his occupation gone when times are prosperous.

It is the hungry and the unemployed who swell the ranks of the agitation in less favorable times, such as the present. If the scores of millions of pounds squandered in war and intemperance of late years, or even a tenth part of them, had been saved, how materially would this have tended to obviate the pressure of existing discontent!

It is especially the middle class taxpayers who more immediately feel the pressure; for they are being ground, as between the upper and nether millstones. They have to pay the taxes for the costs of aristocratic wars, and they also have mainly to find the rates for the support of distressed paupers. The lower classes pay no income-tax, or scarcely any, though these feel the pressure in the lowering of wages.—Herald of Peace.

JOSEPH COOK ON THE LABOR QUESTION.

SELF-HELP, STATE-HELP, AND CHURCH-HELP FOR WORKINGMEN.

Labor is ascending the throne of politics. The age of the workingman has dawned for the whole English-speaking world. Universal suffrage gives even Lazarus a ballot. He is not likely to rest contentedly at the gate of Dives, without attempting to employ his political power for the amelioration of his condition. Face to face with the London riots, with vast national and international societies of workingmen, and with a breadth of suffrage which is at once the glory and the peril of modern civilization, it is hazardous to commit one's self to definite public positions on the topics of capital and labor; and yet it becomes every year more imperatively the duty of thoughtful citizens to have clear and very sound opinions of these vexed themes. For one I hold the following industrial creed, some years ago given here in extended form, and not yet abandoned in a single syllable. (See Boston Monday lectures on "Labor" and "Socialism.")

1. A fair day's wages for a fair day's work ought to be at least twice what the laborer must pay for his food.

2. Fair wages, thus defined, tend to increase rather than to diminish fair profits. For

3. The chief mischief in the industrial world is not over-production, but under-consumption. Fair wages broaden the market; starvation wages pinch it.

4. The most effective church-help or state-help for workingmen is that which leads to self help.

5. Neither capital nor labor, neither church nor state, has a right to impair freedom of contract.

6. When rich and poor, under republican institutions, easily change places from generation to generation, the cause of the poor man is every man's cause, and the cause of the rich man is every man's cause.

In another generation, if you are a rich man in this, your children may be poor; or, if you are a poor man is this, your children may be rich; so that I claim here a right to utter the whole truth in support of the just demands of both wealth and labor. The extension of the suffrage, and of republican institutions in modern times, the abolition of privileged classes, the overturn of the right of primogeniture, the opening of careers to talent, has made society mobile; men go up and down; and when property is widely distributed and distributed in a different way from generation to generation, it is very difficult to maintain class prejudices from period to period, making them hereditary feuds. It is to be hoped that our republic never will have permanent classes, either wealthy or poor. The mobility of American society, and of all society governed under republican fashions, is the best ground of hope that justice will be done both to Dives and to Lazarus.

Under Ricardo and Malthus, and even as late as the time of John Stuart Mill, the central word in political economy was wealth; to-day it is man. Bismarck, as is well known, is now inclined to defend highly philanthropic positions on the topic of the relations of labor and capital. He has gone far over toward what is called professional socialism. The leaders in the discussion of political economy in the German universities are more and more uniting political economy with social economy. The greatest good of the greatest number, and not the largest accumulations of wealth, is coming to be regarded as the supreme object to be sought in a right industrial arrangement of society.

Political economy, except in the Manchester school, has given us the see-saw theory of wages, or the idea that industrial funds must be divided between labor and capital, and that, therefore, as wages increase, profits must diminish. All that you now find discredited by leaders in political economy, and by no one more than by Professor Walker, of Yale, or Professor Roscher, of Leipsig, or Professor Wagner, of Berlin.

Fair profits are the surplus after capital has paid interest on the money invested in an enterprise, insurance, wages and the cost of superintendence. The margin depends on a number of circumstances, and not on the single fact of the amount of wages. The margin is broad or narrow according to the rate of interest on capital, according to what you must pay for insurance and for superintendence, as well as upon what you must pay for wages; and it is ridiculous to maintain that there must be forever a war between capital and labor because the wage fund must be divided into two portions. The old theory of Ricardo and Malthus has been given up in the progress of discussion on political economy, and we have now come to the conclusion that fair wages and fair profits may both rise together. They have done so repeatedly in the steady trades. In the fluctuating trades, there occurs, of course, every now and then, a period of depression. There will be times when the interests of capital and labor seem to conflict, and it is in connection with this most difficult portion of the subject that it is important to adopt correct views as to the duties of class to class, and of each class to itself.

1. What ought the church to do for working men? It ought to secure Sunday to the laboring class; and the laboring class should assist the church in doing so. It ought to go from house to house, visiting the poor. It ought to organize associated charities, so that those who are in temporary distress may be efficiently relieved. It ought, above all things, to carry religious education into all quarters of society; for it cannot be often enough proclaimed that safe government under universal suffrage can result, not from the diffusion of liberty, not from the diffusion of intelligence, not from the diffusion of property merely, but only from all these together with a diffusion of conscientiousness. I hold that the preachers of the land ought to be the foremost friends of the poor. The great organized body to which workingmen of every class ought to be able to look for assistance in the time of real need is the company of those who follow Him who went about from house to house doing good, and who once had not where to lay his head.

2. As to state-help, it has been my fortune in previous years on this platform to dissuade workingmen from following Carl Marx and Lasalle, and to recommend to them such institutions as those founded by Schulze Delitzsch. The former made state help almost everything; the latter believed in no state-help that did not lead to self-help for workingmen. This great reformer has passed away since last socialism was discussed on this platform. He was born in Delitzsch, in Saxony, in 1801. Educated at Leipzig and Halle, he had much experience in provincial and imperial legislation. He died in 1883. He was the founder of the famous People's Bank in Germany, and these are institutions depending not on the State, but on the self-help of the laboring-class.

Co-operative credit is what workingmen want; for credit lies at the basis of co-operative consumption and co-operative production. If laborers are to compete with capitalists, if organizations in the fearful rivalries of modern industrial life are to stand erect in conflict with organizations of employes, workingmen must have money. Labor reformers may profitably study these institutions called the People's Banks in Germany; for they are so successful that they are able to borrow millions and to hold industrial enterprises together without the slightest assistance from the State. Let workingmen lay firmly the corner-stone of co-operative credit in people's banks, and on that they may place co-operative consumption, like the Rochdale stores, and on that co-operative production. Heaven knows what a pillar of prosperity may be raised up if only this corner stone is made firm. Do not depend on the politicians to give you money by nationalizing the land and by equalizing the distribution of property in a way such as the socialists demand.

One of the foremost socialistic editors of Chicago, Mr. August Spies, lately addressed, by invitation, the preachers of that city, and not a little amazed his audience. He began with the assertion that morality has nothing to do with the social problem, and that there is no such thing as morality or moral obligation. The scientific, socialists, anarchists, internationalists, he affirmed, are, without exception, either atheists or agnostics. He maintained that land-ownership is at the bottom of all our industrial and social troubles, and that property is only another name for robbery. He affirmed that the main thing aimed at by the socialists is the extinction of all property right; that marriage is a species of property right, and that therefore marriage is to be abolished and the public commune put in place of the home. All this is not to be effected by political action, but by a kind of universal riot and raven

Dr Gilbert, who reports these facts and was present when this speech was delivered, says that when this strange dreamer was asked what would happen when God has been quite forgotten, conscience extinguished, property rights abolished, marriage lost sight of, he seemed to lose self-control, became visibly confused, the glibness of his speech forsook him, and "he, with us, was standing at the mouth of a pit, and was forced to look down into it and see that the interior was black, and lurid, and bottomless.

Why should workingmen be warned against union with socialistic societies? Because in this country universal suffrage will tend to induce all classes of workingmen to affiliate in order to get political power. The Knights of Labor are not socialists, but in our closely-compacted centres, when the Knights wish to carry through their object, they will be under great temptation to affiliate with the socialistic bodies of the land. Secret societies in the fields of labor and politics, in a Republic like ours, are unnecessary and perilous. They may easily become intolerant, and the public know little of the fact. In the trend of modern republican institutions there is a tendency to throw together all classes of workingmen socialists and conservatives. If American workmen talk themselves too much with socialists of the European pattern the certainty is that they will lose the confidence of the sounder portion of the working class in the United States. Property is too widely diffused here for property to be abolished. You cannot here make the socialistic spark fire the powder of the workingmen's discontent. We have too much at stake. The middle class, which, as John Stuart Mill says, makes up the whole American population, owns the land, substantially; owns the middle portion of property everywhere. And socialism here will certainly go to the wall as soon as it takes off its mask. Therefore, I ask workingmen to beware of the followers of Lassalle and Carl Marx, but to welcome the followers of Schulze Delitzch.

For me I do not care to have you go quite as far as Bismarck himself goes. This leader said not long ago in the Reichstag in Germany, "If you will give the laborer the right to labor as long as he is in health, secure to him care when he is sick, and his support when he is old, the social Democrats will blow their whistle in vain." When Eugene Richter called Bismarck to account for propounding this novel and startling doctrine that workingmen should have labor furnished to them when they cannot find it themselves, and be supported in sickness and old age, by the State, Bismarck replied: "I recognize the right to labor without qualification, and shall maintain it as long as I am in this place. In this I do not stand on the ground of socialism, but on that of the municipal law of Prussia."

Germany is not under universal suffrage. Germany has such political arrangements that Bismarck may possibly feel that Christian principles justify positions like these. He defends them in the name of Christian statesmanship for the poor. But let workingmen here generally ask to have work provided for them by the State when they cannot find it for themselves; let workingmen here ask to be supported by the State when they are sick, and in their old age; and very soon they will be called paupers. Very soon public sentiment at large will turn against them. You must not put yourself into Bismarck's attitude, if you wish to make your workingmen's party a success in a country that believes in self help. The Republic supports self help. It does not support drones or paupers, and still less does it support anarchists and communists in the industrial field.

The Republic must set fashions ultimately for the world because the world is drifting into republican institutions, and if we here solve the problem of the right relations of labor and capital, we shall solve a problem that has importance in all advanced populations. The world is watching us, not Germany, not France. It is watching the foremost free country in the world to know whether in our advanced populations we can unite labor and capital so that the interests of both will be advanced according to the principles of political economy on one hand, and of social science on the other, with Christianity it self underlying both.

In the direction of self help let workingmen study Industrial Partnership which is so successful in Germany. Savings banks in this country are, of course, to some extent a substitute for the German people's banks; but I would rather you would follow the lead of Edmund Quincy, and found banks of your own, than depend exclusively on savings banks. Let me recommend building societies, such as have been so successful in Philadelphia. Let us have Trades Unions, but let them not attempt to tyrannize over non-Union men. Let us recommend co-operative stores of the Rochdale pattern. More than an hundred establishments in Europe are now working prosperously on the basis of profit sharing between the employed and employers. Let us ask workingmen to insist on natural wages, become capitalists themselves, and then be content with natural profits.

It was thought that a slave was always worth twice his maintenance. Every laborer ought to be paid at least twice what his food costs. Ask your bureau of labor statistics what the necessary expenses of families are in our manufacturing towns. I have gone through on this platform, in previous years, large masses of statistics, and I have found that the professors of Germany are right when they claim that if a family is not paid about twice what its food costs, the children do not usually go to any advanced school, nor commonly to church, not regularly to any place, even of elementary instruction. A family earning less than twice what its food costs sinks little by little in the social scale, and in time it is found that wages lower than this will not reproduce the population. The dwindling of the supply of laborers becomes the ghastly response to this starvation scale of prices.

The definition of value is not the cost of production, but the cost of reproduction. A building is worth not what it costs, but what it would cost to build it again. We must pay labor such a sum as to enable it to continue in existence. We must support industrial populations in such a way that they will not dwindle either in numbers or efficiency, by death or disability; and less pay than what I have called natural wages does end in such a dwindling of the industrial population all over the world. I do not regard it as a position at all extreme, certainly not radical or rash, that a workingman when paid the least should be paid twice what his food costs.

Let workingmen avoid strikes and support every scheme for arbitration.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

ORDER OF THE IRON HALL.

The obligation, which though not in the customary form of an oath, is made to answer the same end, by being made to read "in the presence of the Most High," having been taken by the candidate, the initiation proceeds:

(The officers and members dress in masks, after which the hood-wink is removed from the stranger's face.)

W. C. J.—Herald, you will conduct the stranger to this chair.

(The stranger is presented to the Chief Justice, who will arise holding in his hands the petition of the applicant and ask the following questions.)

C. J.—(Looking at the applicant.)—What is your name?

S.—(Gives name.)

C. J.—Did you sign this petition for membership?

S.—(Answers.)

C. J.—Did you carefully consider its requirements?

S.—(Answers.)

C. J.—What is the amount of your benefit?

S.—(Gives amount.)

(Here there is a loud rap at the door, causing a halt in the proceedings.)

C. J.—What means this disturbance?

Watchman—(Answers in a loud voice.)—One of our members demands admittance at once, having a communication to present in person to the Chief Justice.

(The members shall rise hastily and demand the admittance of the friend.)

Members.—Admit him.

C. J.—Yes, Friend Watchman, admit him.

(The door is open and the member, hat in hand, walks directly, in a hurried manner to the Chief Justice and hands him a sealed envelope, containing the following communication, which that officer tears open and reads to himself after which he shall rise and slowly say:)

C. J.—I am indeed sorry that we cannot proceed with this ceremony.

V. J.—I demand to know the reasons why this stranger cannot be further advanced.

C. J.—I have just received the following:

The Chief Justice shall read as follows:—To the Chief Justice of Local Branch No.——, of the order of Iron Hall: Having been informed that Mr. —— is about to unite with your Order, and it being necessary that all should make truthful statements as to their physical condition, and having information satisfactory to myself, I demand that he shall not receive the rights and privileges of this Order. Fraternally Yours,

A Friend of Fraternities.

V. J.—Let him be re-examined.

C. J.—The Medical Examiner will please make the necessary re examination.

(The physician will go to the applicant, ask him to take off his coat, and proceeds with the examination, giving such tests as expansion, contraction, lifting, blowing of whistle, to test the lungs, etc., as he may deem suited to the party. The friends gather around the stranger; some object to his going further, while others offer protection, and demand that the ceremony proceed, which is finally consented to, and the Chief Justice continues his charge.)

* Rap.

C. J.—My friend, the scene you have just witnessed, the trial of your faith and the protection received, will, I trust be a reminder to you as you shall advance in life, to ever be ready to protect and to defend a brother in danger, and thus you will honor yourself and your order, and protect the rights of others. Herald, you will conduct the stranger to the Vice Justice for the closing charge.

V. J.—My friend, you have thus far traveled well the circuit of our Branch. The lessons of our Order are to be plainly presented and their importance must be impressed upon all who enter here. The various fraternities composing the Order of the Iron Hall have one common object—which is protection to those we love and have promised to protect. The expensive experiences of the past have taught us the value and worth of our noble Orders, thus grouped together in unison of purpose to extend to all worthy members, coming from all parts of the world, a material protection, a life blessing, and sure reward. Let me impress upon you as you love and admire the motives, to remember your obligations and protect its principles.

Such child's play would seem to be beneath the character of self-respectful men, to say nothing of the falsehood and hypocrisy. We would think that one lesson of this sort would be quite enough for the candidate and far too much to be repeated by men who make pretensions to gentlemanly demeanor, to say nothing of Christian propriety; and yet, after giving the candidate a long roll of instructions as to details and presenting him with the secret ritual of the order he is again brought before the Chief Justice and the following scene is enacted.

C. J.—Herald, conduct the stranger to this chair for further advancement.

C. J.—My friend, the following instructions will enable you to work your way into a Branch hall:

Approach the outer door and give an alarm thus. * The Vidette will respond to whom you will give the number of your Branch. This is No. ——. He will admit you to the ante-room, where you will invest yourself with the Emblem of the Order, which is to be worn in a conspicuous place on your person. Then approach the inner door and give one blast on the ——, which hangs on the door within sight and reach. The Watchman will present himself at the wicket, to whom you will communicate in a whisper the pass-word, which is ——, when you will be admitted to the hall. You then advance to the centre of the room, facing the Chief Justice, who will recognize you by poising the gavel perpendicularly in his hand, hammer uppermost —— in this manner. You will about face and be recognized in the same manner by the Vice Justice, stationed at the opposite end of the room, after which you will be seated.

Should you wish to retire during the evening, arise in your place and advance the sign to the Vice Justice, which is made in this manner ——. If in order he will answer by poising the gavel, when you can retire. In visiting another Branch you will give your name and the number of your Branch to the Vidette, who will admit you to the ante-room, and report the same to the Chief Justice when that officer will appoint a committee to retire, examine and introduce you in proper form.

My friend, we hope you will remember these instructions; that you will endeavor to be present at all our meetings; and that you will ever have in mind our motto*: Union, Protection, and Forbearance. I now present to you the secret work and laws of the Order, that you may become familiar therewith.

(Presents Ritual, Constitution and Laws.)

Herald, retire to the ante-room with the stranger and instruct him how to enter the hall.

(After salutation both will face the Chief Justice.)

C. J.—Herald, you will present the stranger to our Past Chief Justice for the closing charge.

P. C. J.—My friend, you have passed through our significant ceremonies so far and consented and affirmed to all requirements made of you. That you may prove yourself worthy of membership in the Order of the Iron Hall, it is necessary for you to be faithful in complying with the Constitution, Laws and regulations thereof. Be firm, steadfast and immovable, and be careful, at all times and in all places to consider the solemnity and biuding force of the obligation you have voluntarily taken upon yourself. It is essential that you always keep your dues and assessments promptly paid, that you may be kept in good standing for while forbearance is one of the words of our motto, justice to our membership demands that you, as well as those who have preceded you, should be prompt in the payment of all money due the Branch of which you may be a member.

C. J.—Herald, you will now present your friend to the Accountant's desk and see that he signs the roll-book of membership, after which you will conduct him to a seat.

* * Raps.

C. J.—The members will now proceed to the Cashier's desk to receive their relief.

(The members will pass from right to left past the desk, each one taking a check as he passes. The Cashier will give the stranger a wrong amount.)

Cashier.—Chief Justice, there is an error in my account, and some one of our friends has received more than the amount to which he is entitled.

C. J.—Friends, you will again repair to the Cashier's desk and deposit the sums paid you that the account may be put in proper shape.

(The C. J. takes position beside the Cashier, and when the initiate deposits what was given him, the C. J. will seize his hand.)

C. J.—Here we have him, Herald; you will take charge of the offender and present him to the Adjuster.

Adjuster.—Sir, it is necessary in order that we may know where we will land to be very careful in our advancement, consequently it is my duty to question you. Will you answer? Why did you act in this manner? Do you not recollect your promise to the Chief Justice and Vice Justice of this Branch? Did you not promise that you would not take any of the secret work of this Order unless as an officer? Did you not promise that you would not, under any circumstances, take more than justly belonged to you? Did not the Chief Justice caution you as regards these instructions? This is but a commencement of your journey in this order. Now, should you fail to get further admittance, will you solemnly promise that you will not reveal any of the secrets so far imparted to you? Do you want the privilege of making a statement or explanation of your actions this evening? If so, I am ready to hear your pleadings.

(The Adjuster will suspend reading for a few moments and give the stranger a chance to explain, and should he succeed in giving satisfactory explanation, it will not be appropriate to read the following, and he should at once be received by the C. J. and members.)

Adjuster.—Chief Justice, the prisoner having violated his obligations by receiving benefits before he has been a member for thirty days; and also by taking into his possession a portion of the secret work of the Order, which he solemnly pledged himself not to take except as an officer, for all of which he has made no satisfactory explanation, I demand that he be expelled from the room, his name stricken from the roll and that the severest penalties prescribed be inflicted upon him.

V. J.—Chief Justice, it is a fact that the stranger has a Ritual in his possession.

Prelate—Let him surrender the Ritual.

C. J.—What say you, friends?

The Members. (After the Ritual is surrendered)—Forbear! Forbear!

C. J—My friend, the members of this Branch having decided to forbear, I now hail you as a member of the Order of the Iron Hall, and may this test impress upon you the importanee of being true, in all particulars, to your obligations, and also teach you the meaning and value of our motto: "Union, Protection and Forbearance." The Herald will conduct you to a seat.

C. J.—Members, advance the sign, let business be resumed.

The reader who is familiar with the Mark Master's degree in Masonry will see here a striking resemblance. Further comment is needless. Its folly and wickedness is obvious. The ceremonies of the installation of the officers has in it nothing remarkable, if we except the charge to the Prelate which is as follows:

Supreme Justice.—Herald, conduct the Prelate to his station.

Supreme Herald.—Prelate, you have been elected by the members of this Branch as a superior officer, and as such, to you the Branch will look for such instructions as are needed and for prayers that are to be offered up to the Deity. I now present you with the badge of your office. Let it ever remind you of your duties.

It will be seen that the Order looks to the Prelate for instructions and do its praying. Surely there is great occasion; for while the members of such an order need praying for, they can hardly be supposed to pray for themselves. Considering the kind of prayers offered we can judge how effective they will be, and what kind of religious instructions such a "Prelate" would communicate. When will Christian people awake to the danger of these multiform systems of false religion that are duping and distroying the young men of our land!

A SERMON TO WORKINGMEN.

Rev. Charles F. Goss, pastor of the Moody church in this city, preached an earnest and excellent sermon, Sabbath evening, March 21st, to a large audience, from the text, "The destruction of the poor is their poverty." Prov. 10: 15.

The following report is taken, with some modifications, from the Daily Herald: Two ways there are to help men and lift them up—one is to better their individual life by helping them bodily. This is what Christ did. The other way is to influence men's environment, and this phase was perhaps never better understood than by the present age. The ministers had a great deal to do with the environment of men. As plants in a garden must be protected so as not to be trampled upon by cattle, so society must be surrounded by a kind of a fence. However, he thought that in the labor question the wage-worker had to grapple with it and solve it. There were many steps already taken by labor to help itself. Such, for instance, was organization by which a relation between capital and labor had been established never thought of before. Co-operation was another right step, and so was arbitration, the latter being the direct result of organization. The strike had in it essential principles of justice, said the speaker. He would say so despite the knowledge that this assertion would cause a great difference of opinion. But then the strike was a dangerous weapon, and strikers should remember that a man might strike his neighbor in self-defence—that would be right. But he must not strike him in revenge—that would be sin. So were there essential principles of justice in boycotting. Did not the speaker himself boycott certain merchants when he refused to trade with men who handled intoxicating liquors?

[Mr. Goss here mistakes the character of the boycott entirely. As first practiced in Ireland, and generally with us, it has hardly a single redeeming feature.—Ed. Cyn]

He quoted from a circular in which the Central Labor Organization advised the local association to take an eight-hour price for eight hours' work. That would be one of the grandest steps ever taken, if the demand would rest there. Eight hours of manual labor a day is enough for the human system.

There was many a justifiable point in political national economy in favor of eight hours. There was now an overflow of products in the store-houses of the country, and the lessened production under the eight-hour system would diminish the supply, while the demand would remain the same. Business would readjust itself and wages would come down to a normal basis. Fair wages in turn would produce an active market, and the great products of ndustry would be consumed, because at the bottom of the whole question, was not over-production but under-consumption. Immigration would be increased, but that was a question that must be dealt with separately.

Machinery had been permitted by Divine Providence to lighten the labor of man. There was much talk of labor-saving machinery, but on the face this was an untruth. Where was labor saved only in the direction of lessening the hours of labor? Otherwise, a blacksmith who hammered all day at his anvil would not be more tired than a man running a machine in a shoe-shop, for it was just as absorbing and tiring to watch a machine all day as to do manual labor. Machinery, in shortening the hours of labor, gave men more time for home life, for recuperation, for development of his intellectual faculties, for communication with his fellow-beings, preparing them anew each day for the battle with life. Now, the wage-worker was worn out and tired, and he went to his work wearily. It was not at the forge or the trip-hammer where men developed their intellectual faculties, but by studying books and reading papers at home. It was said by the opponents of the eight-hour movement that the laborer would squander the two hours gained in debauchery. This was an unjust imputation. If the only way to keep man from debauchery was to keep him at work, then ten hours would be better than eight, twelve hours than ten, and fourteen than twelve. The fact that some men would misuse liberty could not and should not be a reason why liberty should not exist. It was a patent fact that men who were driven hardest and were imposed upon by unscrupulous employers would go on the wildest debaucheries.

The speaker then turned to the other side of the question. There was great danger that men would ask too much. That should not happen in great social adjustments. Another danger was that of intolerance. Hs saw it in the air now. Here he referred to an incident that happened to him in West Twelfth Street Turner Hall, when it was broadly stated that the men assembled would not listen to anything they did not like to hear. Was not that intolerance? Then there came the danger of tyranny. It was a two-edged sword, and the consequences could hardly be estimated as labor was grandly marching on to political power.

In conclusion, Mr. Goss spoke of two wrongs committed by the workiugmen, wrongs which alienated from them a great many sympathies. Sabbath-breaking, he said, was one. Labor meetings should not be held on a Sunday. The workingman would do better in worldly progress if he would bring his boy to godliness, instead of attending labor meetings. The other wrong was the habitual use of intoxicating drinks. In this connection a bewildering array of statistical figures as to the money spent in the United States for tobacco and drink was read, and then Mr. Goss concluded with a warm appeal to the workingmen present to begin with a reform of their own habits in their great struggle for reform in the social relations of the world.

THE WAR AGAINST LABOR.

THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR CHIEF.

We have a good king, and we may be grateful to Divine Providence for that degree of grace. Some of us may retain the old prejudice in favor of individual liberty, but that is now getting to be a thing of the past. Now men do not work when they want to, nor stop when they want to; they work when they are ordered to, and they stop when they are ordered out. Men who want to work are told that they will work at their peril, and employers are forbidden to give employment to labor. There is a whole series of provinces, with their satraps, many of them foolish as well as domineering men, who give the orders which their underlings have to obey. Over the satraps is the king, whose name is Powderly.

We are very thankful that King Powderly rules so geutly; but we must say that he has about him a number of wicked partners on the lower steps of his throne whom he ought to deal with. If they can, without fear of their grand master, inaugurate such an unreasonable strike as that which has disorganized trade in the Southwest, can stop the traffic and travel of railroads against which there is no grievance, just to punish or coerce one against which there is a fancied but not a real grievance, why, what is the use of being a king? King Powderly's sentiments are very good; but why does he not carry them out.—Independent.

Workingmen and the Sabbath.—Workingmen are beginning to see that there is danger of the total abrogation of the day of rest, and a Chicago Jew proposes the formation of a "World's Day-of-Rest League." The mover says that human rapacity is becoming so great that unless the workingmen take measures to preserve a uniform day of rest they may lose it altogether. He proposes to his own brethreu that in the year 1900 a representative convention be held, and the Jewish Sabbath be then authoritatively transferred to the national or international day of rest. He presents the case not as a religious question, but rather one of physical need.

We hope and wish the Jews will then also make proper use of the world's day of rest, aud seek the eternal day of rest by abandoning their unbelief and stiffneckedness and uniting with the Christian church.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REV. W. W. DOWNS AND THE BOSTON "POST."

Boston, March 22, 1886.

Dear Cynosure:—The Boston Post, a Democratic daily, which has made for itself an unenviable notoriety by means of the scorching epithets it has hurled at Rev. W. W. Downs, the renowned pastor of the Bowdoin Square Baptist church, has recently retracted certain statements or insinuations which, when first published, created a decided sensation in this city, and caused many to think the stalwart clergyman must sink beneath them; but, like truth itself, to the surprise of some and chagrin of others, he came speedily to the surface and, metaphorically, sent his assailants to the bottom instead. The said retraction, which I quote exactly as published in the Boston Globe, one of our most reliable journals (not having procured a Post), reads as follows:

"From evidence which has been placed in our hands, we are satisfied that we may have done an injustice to Rev. William W. Downs in publishing certain articles—three in number—entitled respectively: 'She Knew Downs,' 'Lured to Ruin,' and 'Downs as a Trader.'

"We are further satisfied that the reporter who worked up and wrote the articles referred to used means for getting information that we cannot indorse, and should not have permitted used in behalf of the Post had we been fully informed of them. Finally, we are led to believe, from the evidence above mentioned, that the reporter may have been acting for others than the Post."

In commenting upon the article, Mr. Downs, in his usual frank and undisguised manner, pronounced the Post's humility as most honorable, but sadly deplored the seeming unwillingness or negligeuce on the part of both the secular and religious press to publish this or any other authenticated good point concerning him, while apparently ever ready to circulate scaudalous rumors. Still protesting his innocence, he boldly challenges the courts to try his case, which has been so long and mysteriously postponed. Vindication or prison bars, with the Bible under his arm, is his favorite motto. There is little doubt here that he is the object of a villainous conspiracy, augmented, it is vaguely rumored, by the machinery of the Secret Empire. Whether he hinted at this when he declared himself to be "in the grasp of a devil-fish, of which Taber and Dillingback the reporter were only two arms," I can not say. He intends to triumph animo et fide. D. P. Mathews.

REFORM LITERATURE IN ARKANSAS.

Lonoke, Ark.

Editor Cynosure:—The weekly visits of your paper are telling blows ou associations in this section. The blast from your trumpet and your waving light fill with consternation many among the Midianitish host, till their hands are turned against their fellows and the slaughter increases, and, like as in slavery times, they turn their eyes to the North Star in fleeing from this modern bondage. May its light be steady and true, a worthy Cynosure for every eye that turns to it for guidance. Let the Pole Star shine!

You will, no doubt, hear encouraging news from some in these parts who have grown so bold as to leave the lodge and now openly denounce them. This will, no doubt, strengthen your hands to see your work prosper.

Not long since I spoke to a crowd among whom were some colored Quaker Freemasons who had taken the oath!—quiet, clever, industrious men who exercised the jewel of silence under criticism—and after a little talk they felt out of place in the lodge. I hope a few copies of your paper may reach them; it may do them good. There are some students here belonging to secret societies, aud others debating in their minds with which to unite. I have not failed to give advice when it was solicited. I promised to have some sample copies of your paper sent them, and may they save many of them from the lodge!

We have some thirty-one colored lodges in our city, and six colored churches. The Knights of Wise Men and Immaculates are not.

Not long since in Bible class a young man, Mr. Harrison, read Eph. 5: 11, and through mistake made a splendid comment on the same against secret societies by changing the last word; "but rather remove them," he said, instead of "reprove them." It came with telling effect on the class.

If some N. C. A. tracts were scattered broadcast over this whole South, what a harvest would be gathered. These people long for light, and to break the yoke they must look to you as God's agent in this matter. Shall they watch and wait in vain? It seems that missions and reform associations, churches and societies all shun Arkansas, but here is the camping-ground and the flow of the colored population to this section. It is only a question of time when the leading state in the South will be west of the Mississippi river. And it is strange, indeed, that this State has been neglected under every circumstance. Its climate, soil and water courses are most desirable, and yet it is despised. Land is cheap, and plenty of it, homes to be had for $10, consisting of from 40 to 160 acres. It is without doubt God's providence, reserving it for the oppressed of the Eastern States, who are coming by the thousands. Let them be met and made friends of the cause of truth.

(Rev.) L. Johnston.

A SEVERE EXPERIENCE.

Brookville, Ind.

Ed. Cynosure:—Five years ago I framed a query, to be sent through the Middle District of Indiana to the Annual Meeting of the German Baptist church, requesting that body to require all members of said denomination who had ever been initiated into the Masonic lodge to disregard their Masonic obligations. The Spring Creek congregation, through which I expected to send the query voted it down and said it could not go, the whole congregation, with the exception of a few members, virtually voting in favor of the lodge.

During the preceding fall I had been visiting friends and relatives in Ohio, and the next spring moved to Franklin county, Ind., where I now reside. I had been here but a short time when I heard that some one had published in an Ohio paper that, while there, I had hired a livery rig and, after using it, driven back to the stable, hitched the horse and left without paying for it. I then published in another Ohio paper that I wanted to know the name of the proprietor of the livery stable from whom I obtained the rig, and in case I was not apprised of the name, that of the owner of the stable and the man who published the thing in the paper (he writing, as I was informed, under a fictitious name). I should have to conclude that the whole thing was invented under the supervision of the Masonic lodges. I have as yet had no reply although nearly five years ago. About the same time I made application to teach a country school near here, but was defeated by a report being circulated that I was crazy. I then applied for a village school, and by the aid of some friends, although strangers at the time, I succeeded and taught in the village. Since then I have made no effort at teaching, thinking that I would prefer a different work, although not physically calculated for hard manual labor. I concluded that by not applying to the public for any favors, but depending upon my own debilitated body for sustenance, I would be less offensive.

In January last I found my only mare dead one morning, having been well as usual the evening before. Not long after this some of the neighbors complained of their dogs having been poisoned, and one of them asked me whether I did not think it possible that the mare was poisoned, and that the dogs became affected by eating the flesh. I told him that the mare had been undisturbed the morning before. "But," said he, "the dogs were sick since yesterday morning." So we proceeded to the spot and sure enough, we found that the dogs had been there and eaten the flesh from the nostrils, and also the blood which the morning before had been seen emanating from her mouth.

Now, Mr. Editor, I want to know whether you think that the Masons would be so inhuman as to poison a man's animals? If you do, whether there would be any danger of their giving some of us a dose, after becoming tired of killing dumb brutes?

Very respectfully, E. Umbaugh.

We have known several cases of animal poisoning or killing like the above, where no reason could be assigned but the hatred of the lodge inspiring its members to such acts of brutality.—Ed.

COMPLICITY IN MURDER AND ROBBERY.

Dear Cynosure:—We have collected a few facts in this region which may be of some use to you in your work of exposing the secret workings of the lodge system. We have recently learned that we have, for a year and a half, been living within two miles of a man who formerly belonged to a Masonic lodge in Canada, but who renounced his connection with the lodge for the following reasons:

A member of the lodge to which he belonged committed a murder, and directly his lodge brethren set themselves to work to devise some plan to rescue him from the hands of the law. They at length hit upon the plan of charging the murder upon an innocent person and of proving it against him, as the lodge knows how to do. When the gentleman of whom we are speaking learned their plan, he was so horrified at the thought that he told them, if they persisted in their plan, he should quit the lodge. Finding them inflexible, he and a number of others left the lodge forever. The circumstance needs no comment.

Not long ago I was providentially thrown, for a few hours, into the society of the wife of a zealous Freemason. The husband's Masonic chart was suspended from the wall of the room where we sat, which made it easy to introduce the subject of Masonry—which we very often do for the purpose of eliciting something to help our cause. She expressed herself, though not very strongly, as unfavorable to the system, and told me her husband was trusting to his Masonry for salvation. She further said that he claimed that he was regenerated at his initiation; that God interposed during his initiation and regenerated his soul, or words to that effect. I told her I knew Masonic writers taught that the candidate was regenerated at his initiation, but that I had supposed Masons generally did not so understand it. She expressed the opinion that numbers of the lodge to which her husband belonged were also trusting to their Masonry for salvation.

The following circumstance was related to us by a near neighbor of ours. It occurred in the vicinity where he formerly resided: Two men, brothers-in-law—one a Mason, the other not—were guilty of purloining some fattened cattle. They either drove them away and sold them, or shipped them to some point on the railroad. It was the one who was a Mason that projected the robbery and invited his brother-in-law to join him. Now see the great advantage of being a Mason. The man who owned the cattle was a Mason, and when the robbery was discovered he prosecuted the non-Mason, procured his conviction and had him committed to prison, though the less guilty of the two; while his Masonic brother was allowed to go scot-free.

When we came to this place we found here, residing with his daughter, an old gentleman who at the time of the abduction of Morgan was living in the State of New York, on or near the route the abductors took in conveying their victim from Canandaigua to Fort Niagara. The old gentleman knew a young man who was living at a hotel on that route, who was the owner of a colt—probably the only property he possessed—which he kept there with him on the hotel premises. When a new relay of horses was required, the Masons took this colt without even asking his consent and pressed it into their service, and the young man never saw or heard of his colt again, nor was any compensation offered him. Honorable! E. C. Andrus.

Bible Lessons.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON II, April 11, 1886.—The First Disciples.—John 1: 35-51.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus.—John 1: 37.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Christ's first disciples. vs. 35–39. Our lesson shows that several things are necessary for successful labor with souls. (1) There must be an utter putting away of self, and perhaps the great mistake of modern revival work is that self is not put entirely away. There is too much rivalry between churches—not for holier living, but merely to add to their membership roll; and so the pressure is proportionately great on the pastors to seek the conversion of men for lower motives than the love of souls or the Master's glory. (2) Simplicity and directness in personal effort. John wastes no unnecessary words. He simply says, "Behold the Lamb of God." He who would convert men must not only point them to Christ, but, as another has aptly said, not stand in the way himself. (3) Love to souls. Doubtless these two disciples were very near and dear to the heart of John. Perhaps they were the first fruits of his ministry, but he freely gives them up to the charge of a greater Teacher. (4) The earnest seeker after Christ has only to "come and see;" and though we hear no more his audible voice, yet still speaking for him, the Spirit and the Bride say, "Come."

2. The way to convert the world. vs. 40–46. Andrew may be fairly claimed as the first Christian missionary, though all he did was to find his own brother Simon. Many lament their lack of opportunities when the opportunities are all around them; when one honest, individual effort with a friend or relative may bring forth results that shall echo through eternity. Again, we see Phillip leaving all at Christ's "Follow me," yet not content to follow him alone. He finds his friend Nathanael, but Nathanael's nature is a cooler and more philosophic one than that of the ardent Peter. He is skeptical, doubting. "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Phillip's answer, in the calmness of assured knowledge, "Come and see," is a model for all succeeding workers, who must often meet with Nathanaels. It is an unanswerable answer, and worth tons of theology or elaborate rhetoric.

3. Christianity is a thing of small beginnings. vs. 47–51. These few disciples were the nucleus of the church—of the thousands who turned to the Lord at Pentecost, and all that increasing host which, at the end of time, is to be a multitude that no man can number. So those reforms against evil which are the life of Christianity have their origin in the day of small things—the divine fire in the hearts of a chosen few. Truth is ever small and weak in its incipient stages. As Christianity triumphed over the gods of Greece and Rome, so it will triumph over the paganism of the lodge.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

To what passage did Phillip refer? Deut. 18: 18. What is the strongest argument a Christian can use? Neh. 5: 19.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"Behold the Lamb of God." Not only pure and innocent as a lamb, but the atoning sacrifice for sin, fulfilling the sacrifices appointed by God, especially that of the lamb sacrificed at the Passover and daily in the temple. In ver. 29 it is said that he "taketh away the sin of the world," (1) by making the sacrifice through which pardon could be freely offered to all; and (2) by the love of God manifested in him, which would touch and inspire the heart to goodness; and (3) by the gift of the Holy Spirit, by whom the heart is renewed, thus taking away sin.

"Where dwellest thou?" They are timid and dare not, or at least do not, express their whole desire.—Abbott. They have more to ask than can be answered on the spot.—Cambridge Bible.

"He saith unto them, 'Come and see.'" It almost seems as if this "come and see" call of Jesus were emblematic not merely of all that followed in his own ministry, but of the manner in which to all time the "What seek ye" of the soul is answered.—Edersheim.

"His own brother Simon." The peculiar expression here seems to imply that each one went forth to find his own brother—Andrew to find Simon Peter, and John to find James. And Andrew found his brother first.—Godet, Westcott, Schaff.

"Which is by interpretation, a stone." The sense would perhaps be given better by keeping the equivalent proper name—by interpretation Peter, that is a stone, or rather a mass of rock detached from the living rock.—Westcott. Peter is Greek for a stone or rock. This was a prophecy of Peter's future life and career. "Hereafter thou shalt win the name of Cephas." This promise received its fulfilment (Matt. 16: 18).—Westcott. Peter was to be a rock, because (1) he was to be one of the foundation stones of the church Jesus was soon to institute. (2) He was to be firm, reliable, strong. "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—P. There is no discrepancy between this and Matt. 16. 18. Here Christ gives the name Peter; there he reminds S. Peter of it.—Cambridge Bible.

"When thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee." Jesus replies to Nathanael's question by referring to a previous, probably recent, incident in his history. It was probably at his own garden at his home in Cana of Galilee, at some distance from the place where he met Jesus, "and not now in sight, nor had been." Fig trees, on account of their luxuriant shade, were a favorite resort of the family, and especially for private meditation and rest. No doubt Nathanael was there for meditation and prayer, pondering over the Messiah foretold by John and expected by the Jews. "I saw thee." Both outwardly, as by prophetic vision, and also his heart, his thoughts, his spiritual being.

"Thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel." These two titles together describe the Messiah, (1) in relation to his divine origin; (2) in relation to his earthly kingdom. Nathanael, in applying these terms to Jesus, recognized and confessed that in Jesus he had found the expected Messiah.—P. For these titles, as existing in the Messianic expectation of the day, comp. chaps. 11: 27; 12: 13, 15; Matt. 25: 63; Mark 3: 11; ver. 7.—Ellicott.

"And the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man." The figure is drawn from the vision of Jacob (Israel), the ladder between heaven and earth, and the angels ascending and descending on it (Gen. 28: 12). There are three interpretations: (1) Some suppose the reference to the angelic appearances to Christ, and the divine signs given in attestation of his mission (ver. 32; Matt. 4: 11; Luke 2: 13; 9: 29-31; 22 43); (2) others suppose that it refers to "the series of glories about to be unfolded in the person and work of Jesus;" the God of heaven, the realities of heaven, the truth and love of heaven shall henceforth be seen by men, and there shall be communications between earth and heaven through Jesus Christ—love, salvation, blessings, coming down to men. (3) A third interpretation connects Christ's words here with his analogous declarations in Matt. 25: 31; 26: 64, etc., and refers it to his second coming. Dr. Lyman Abbott well says of these three interpretations: "I believe that these three views are congruous and consistent, and are all embraced in the promise."

OBITUARY.

Abner Boyle was born in Bedford county, Virginia, Nov. 19th, 1808. When he was about three years of age his family moved to Todd county, Kentucky, where they remained until the fall of 1828. They then came to Danville, Ill., and, after spending the winter in that place, moved to Ox Bow, Putnam Co., Ill., and settled the old homestead, which the family still retains. On the 24th of November, 1831, he was married to Miss Matilda Wilson, but in consequence of the Indian troubles connected with the Black Hawk war they were unable to settle for a year or two; so they spent a part of the time at his father's and a part in the fort. Mr. Boyle enlisted in the army under the command of Capt. Wm. Haws, and was out until the close of the war. On returning home, he made a claim in Bureau county some six miles north of Princeton, which city contained at that time but one house. He obtained a title to his land and remained on it three years. Selling his place, he moved to Hennepin, where he spent the winter keeping boarders. At the close of the winter he purchased goods, returning to Princeton, where he was engaged in the mercantile business for two years, during which time he was quite successful financially. He then sold his stock of goods to his brother Oliver and moved back to Ox Bow, purchasing and settling the place formerly owned by his father. They remained on the farm until about four years ago, when they moved to Lostant.

Mr. and Mrs. Boyle, as the fruit of their union, had six children born to them, two of whom preceded their father to the spirit world. Two are still remaining under the parental roof with their aged and infirm mother. Mr. Boyle was industrious and provident, and has left ample provision for his family. He was very conscientious and upright in all his business relations, and was ever trustworthy. In 1830 he received his commission from President Jackson as the first postmaster in Ox Bow, and under the old organization he assessed and collected the taxes of Putnam county for two years, and rode on horseback with the State tax to Springfield. He was supervisor of Magnolia township for two years, and in the discharge of his duties he looked after the interests of the widows and orphans whose husbands and fathers had died in defense of their country.

Mr. Boyle was in a state of decline for the greater part of the winter, and on the 28th of February he became evidently worse and continued to fail rapidly, yielding to the power of disease until Saturday, March 6th, when he calmly resigned his spirit to the God who gave it. The funeral obsequies were largely attended, both at Lostant and at the grave on the old homestead, where he was laid to rest until the resurrection. R. N. Morse.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile hands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will he just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 1886.

THE LABOR QUESTION is presented in some of its most interesting phases in our columns to-day. There will be more to follow soon, especially about the Knights of Labor, of which we hope to secure some valuable information. Next week we are also to promise our readers a fine portrait of JOHN B. GOUGH, the great apostle of temperance. April 11th is set for a great public demonstration to his memory. Finch has proclaimed to the Good Templars to drape their lodges in mourning!—for a man who despised their secrecy and lodge stuff. The Cynosure will expose the "creature of bombast."

THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR AND THE GREAT STRIKE

The yardmen and switchmen of the Iron Mountain, the Texas Pacific and Missouri Pacific lines of railway, generally, have been ordered by the unknown superiors whom they have sworn to obey, to quit work, and several thousands have complied and obeyed their invisible rulers. The strikers have not only quit work, but seized on the property of the roads, side-tracked the freight cars, run engines into round-houses; and in many instances, when attempts have been made to move freight, the men have been ordered, and, in some instances, dragged off and beaten, and the trains disabled; and a general stagnation of business produced in the Southwest, without a supply of coal, kerosene, and other necessaries of daily life; grain and provisions are blocked. Threats are freely made by prominent Knights of Labor that unless their order is "recognized" and grievances redressed, "the strike will be extended from ocean to ocean," and society be reduced to stagnation and chaos.

The Cynosure subscribers, who read the dailies, will see that the above is a brief statement of the case. The trepidation of course extends every way beyond the strike. "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which shall come on the earth."

The Cynosure has this to say to our readers:

1. The press states that the mass of the strikers are not influenced by grievances, real or supposed. A multitude of statements are given from men who say, "We were ordered to quit and we have quit. This is all we know about it."

2. A secret circular from the head Knight, Powderly, has been obtained and published in St. Louis (March 26th), in which he says:

"One of two things must take place; either the local and district assemblies of the order must obey my laws or I must be permitted to resign."

"Strikes must be avoided. Boycotts must be avoided."

"Threats of violence must not be made. Of our members we require secrecy, obedience, assistance, patience and courage. If with these aids you strengthen my hands, I will continue in the work. If you do not desire to assist me in this way, then select a man better qualified to obey your will and I will retire in his favor."

He continues: "Assemblies of Knights must not strike for the eight-hour system on May 1st. Out of sixty million people we have possibly three millions. Can we mold the opinions of 57,000,000 in favor of the short-hour plan before May 1st? It is nonsense to think of it."

3. This circular from head-center Powderly shows that the strikes are precipitated by district assemblies, ruled by madmen, loafers, and desperadoes, whom the honest masses are sworn to obey, and who fear the vengeance of the order which these desperadoes can bring down on their heads.

4. This class of wretches have joined in and spoiled every movement for popular rights and redress of grievances in Europe for the last 100 years. Notably that of the Chartists in 1840–3.

5. If the labor unions were open, American organizations, no corporation, however wealthy or powerful, could refuse to redress any real grievances or stand against the opposition of such unions. If Abolition societies had been secret, with oaths, ritual, and sworn obedience, slavery would be ruling this country to-day, as it did under Van Buren, Pierce, Polk, and Buchanan. They were open societies and slavery fell.

6. The demand of these deluded and deluding men that sworn secret orders shall be "recognized," and treated with as legal, legitimate bodies, is abhorrent and absurd. They are what Samuel Adams called, "That solecism in government, an Imperium in Imperio, a government within a government." If railroads begin this folly and stupidity, where is it to end? How many such extemporized secret "orders" must they recognize and pay tribute to? And when these secret rivals of our American government conflict with our courts, which shall the railroads obey? The demand for such recognition is treason, the secret order is treason.

7. The sympathies of mankind are, and should be, with the laboring classes, and one thousandth part of the money drawn from laborers by secrecy and sorcery, paid to keep up three or four central offices, say in Boston, New York, Chicago, and San Francisco, with a newspaper or two to reflect the sentiments of these tribunes of the lodge, would correct abuses, redress grievances, and save the country from such cyclones as are now blowing from the secret caves of Æolus.

8. Our duty is clear: to dismiss such men as John B. Finch from the Prohibition party; unite every sound reform upon the American platform, and vote for that platform in 1888, and for the man who stands square on it, St. John, Fred Douglass, or even Grover Cleveland, if he adds to his other measures the banishment of liquor from his National dinners, and the suppression of saloons and lodges.

A CHICAGO SEMINARY VISITED.

One seldom meets grouped together a brighter and better set of faces than were seen in the ninety-eight students of Chicago Theological (Congregational) Seminary, met in their beautiful Carpenter chapel for evening prayers last week. The institution was in mourning for one of the Faculty, Prof. Hyde lying dead, and a heavy shadow was on the chapel. After prayer by ex-President J. Blanchard, President Wilcox requested the students to remain while the Faculty retired to complete the funeral arrangements, and the following proceedings were had:

REMARKS OF THE EDITOR OF THE "CYNOSURE."

Young Gentlemen and Brethren in Christ:—By permission of your honored Faculty, I come to present to you some copies of two papers—one issued in Washington, D. C., the other in Dayton, Ohio,—and to explain to you, briefly, the nature of the papers and the reason of my coming.

The country is deeply agitated and its entire business threatened by the strikes of secret societies. The Inter Ocean to-day gives the speech of one man who says that unless the demands of the Knights of Labor are complied with he, this one man, will cause the stoppage of the freight department of the whole railroad system in the United States! And every newspaper shows us that such threats are not empty threats. There can, therefore, be no one topic on which you, who are soon to be guides and advice-givers to some 100,000 American people as to their temporal and eternal interests, should be more thoroughly awakened and informed than on the nature of the societies which are threatening the bread and business of these United States.

I have just returned from travel through eleven States, and have spoken in six, beside the District of Columbia; and I have received caresses and honors where twenty-five years ago my life would have been taken in any twenty-four hours. I spoke in Memphis, Tenn., in a church whose pastor, Rev. R. N. Countee, now carries buckshot in his person—shot by members of his own congregation because, having been a Mason, an Odd-fellow, a Knight of Pythias, an Immaculate, and member of another secret order, this faithful pastor, having learned their nature, he came out from them, though without revealing their secrets, and warned his people that they were ruining the church of Christ. And I was equally delighted and surprised to see my speech in that wounded minister's pulpit printed in the leading political journal of the city, the Memphis Appeal.

By the procurement of the Hon. Frederick Douglass, I addressed the Bethel Literary and Historical Society in Washington, D. C. The crowd would have filled four such chapels as this. My exordium was in these words:

"Ladies and Gentlemen:—By public notice, I am to speak against secret societies; and I am assured that nine in ten, if not nineteen in twenty, of my audience belong to such organizations. If therefore I fail to please, to profit, and to convince you, I shall fail, as Phaeton did when he undertook to drive the chariot of the sun, 'in a lofty undertaking.'"

I was listened to with applause throughout, and received a handsome vote of thanks for my speech.

I bring you a report of that speech.

As soon as I closed, the representative of this great daily, the National Republican—the organ of the Republican party in Washington, and the organ of our government during twenty-four years, came to me and asked my manuscript for insertion in that paper. You have his report here. But I bring you this national organ of the Republican party for another object also. You see here (holding up the paper,) a whole half page of it, in spread headings and the largest capitals, devoted to "Whisky" and "The Maryland Club." This grand page of its organ will show you whether, as claimed, the Republican party is "the true Prohibition party."

This other print, the Christian Conservator of Dayton, Ohio, contains a lecture which I delivered in two theological seminaries, at Cincinnati and at Dayton. You will be interested in looking over what those two schools of the prophets, faculties and students, listened to with apparent satisfaction.

This, young gentlemen, is all I have to say; but to thank you and your respected Faculty for giving me this audience. I yesterday gave copies of this Lane Seminary lecture to the Faculty of the Northwestern Presbyterian Seminary in Chicago, and regret that there are not quite enough to give each of you all one. I hope you will accommodate each other with the reading, if desired. One of the Presbyterian professors proposed to lay the subject before his Faculty and, perhaps, secure from me a general lecture on this grave national subject. And it may be that your Faculty will think proper to indulge you with a lecture from the author of these papers, at some convenient future time.

Again thanking you for your polite attention, I dismiss you.

—Secretary Stoddard does not visit Bloom and Crete, in this State, until April 4th and thereafter.

—A meeting is announced in the court-house at Wheaton, Ill., for Wednesday evening, to be addressed by President J. Blanchard and several of the pastors and others of the place. It will be an important meeting for the place.

—The popularity of the address before the Bethel Literary Association in Lincoln Memorial church, Washington, D. C., published in the Cynosure March 4, is well attested by its republication in the Birmingham Free Press, and the fact that the American has received many orders which it can not fill. The Cynosure and the Free Press can doubtless spare fifty copies for distribution. But some think the seminary address at Cincinnati and Dayton is better. Copies of both sent from this office for 6 cents, 4 cents for single paper.

—Those who read Joseph Cook's eloquent addresses on the labor question, will be surprised that he says, "Let us have Trade Unions," when elsewhere he condemns secret labor lodges. He evidently means such legitimate unions as open farmers' clubs and mechanics' societies, and the trade unions of England which we understand are open societies. Legitimate organization of the trades for useful purposes is the measure he advocates.

—Law and Gospel, Paris, Ill., edited by Bro. W. H. Bauser, notices the struggles of the Tabernacle Baptist church, Memphis, and says: "The influence of Bro. Countee is reaching out. A number of his brother ministers have already left the lodge. May the Lord speed the day when there will be an entire separation between the church and the lodge, North as well as South."

—It is a pleasure to read from far-off lands such a testimony for Christ and truth as this by Bro. C. B. Ward in his paper, the India Methodist Watchman of Secunderabad: "A contemporary speaks rather severely of us and Presiding Elder Williams, whose letter against Masonry appeared in a late Watchman, and supposes Bro. Williams is ignorant of what he exposes. Bro. Williams was for years a Mason in good standing, and knows whereof he speaks. For our part, we can not see why Freemasons are so ready to deny their own oaths and blasphemous performances, and berate the man whom the wickedness of the institution in itself has compelled to walk out for conscience sake. We know men whom the editor of the contemporary in question looks up to who have for conscience sake left the lodge within the last two years. Be it known, once for all, Masonry has no secrets in these days. Every one of them can be bought in a book-store for Rs. 2-8 0. Freemasonry, which will not acknowledge Christ Jesus, has the promise of the Lord himself that it will never be acknowledged by him in the judgment."

—Dr. W. W. Scudder, of the Arcot (India) Reformed mission, writes of an unusual event in Madnapalle, which has caused a great stir among the natives, not only in that town, but in the surrounding towns. He has baptized a young man of high caste (Bulgee). It is, says Dr. Scudder, the first invasion of the high caste ranks. Every effort was made to persuade the young man not to break with his caste, but he proved deaf alike to entreaty and threat. He was formerly an atheist. A lad of seventeen, of the same caste, has also broken caste, and is receiving Christian instruction.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

The Electoral Count Bill.—The Fight against Liquor becoming National.—The Trials of the Pall Mall Gazette Bearing Fruit.—General Ingalls on a War Horse.—Ship Railways and Canals.—Lodge Pranks in the Senate.—The Washington Churches.

Dear Cynosure:—After more than three months of talk the two houses of Congress are settling down to honest work. The passage by the Senate of the Electoral Count and Scientific Instruction bills are two important steps in the mareh of progress. The first was a much-needed measure that would have saved us immeuse trouble in the winter of 1876–7, and for want of which we came to the verge of revolution. The latter, which provides that in the public schools of this District, in the Territories, and in the Indian schools, instruction shall be given in reference to the physiological effects of alcohol aud narcotics, has been adopted by about half the States and several of the Territories. It is perhaps the only measure that will properly educate the children of foreigners, who are flocking to our shores and whose drinking habits are the greatest obstacle to the enforcement of temperance laws. This meas ure has been mainly the work of the W. C. T. U., and is a marked triumph of temperance principles. There is little doubt that both of these bills will pass the House.

Kindred to this is the growing agitation for social purity. Numerous petitions are being sent to either house asking for legislation on this matter, and Mr. Frye's bill, which raises the age of consent to eighteen, seems likely to be adopted. This, too, is the work of the W. C. T. U., and indicates the power and beneficent influence of woman as a factor in legislatiou. An important meeting was recently held in the First Congregational chureh of this city for the promotion of this measure.

Not all speeches and measures of Congress are for the promotion of public virtue. Mostly they are for "buncombe." Among the latter, is that of Mr. Ingalls, the prince of demagogues, to organize the militia of this District. It provides that all able-bodied males, except idiots, insane and criminals, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, shall be enrolled, armed, and drilled in the arts of war. No measure could be more needless, and few more pernicious. Those who remember the militia system of fifty years ago,—how training days were not only a serious loss to the farmer and mechanic, but were the oceasion of much of the drunkenness and crime of the times; how people gradually grew weary of it, protested against, and finally abolished it—will be somewhat surprised that such a measure should be suggested. We have already far too many holidays and military parades in this city for the good of the people. When all the world are becoming awake to the burdens as well as the wickedness of war, and are devising means for its avoidance, it is most absurd to turn back the dial half a century.

The Ead's Ship Rail-way, of which a model has for some time been on exhibition in the Capitol, will stand small chance of getting the appropriation asked for. If the Panama Canal is ever completed (and it is probable that national pride will come to its aid) no such railway will be needed, and it is altogether probable that the $37,000,000 asked for will be but the first outlay, which will need to be constantly added to. If the work is needful and practieable private enterprise will perfect it.

The Senatorial war of words that was begun with such flourish of trumpets seems likely to end in the discomfiture of both parties. Whatever else may result, there will at least be one good accomplished. It will convince the people that in all matters of public concernment neither the President nor the Senate, nor anybody else has the right of concealment. Obligations of secrccy made in violation of a supreme regard for the public good, are not only void but criminal. In the little episode between Senators Edmonds and Beck, the former charged Mr. Beck with revealing the secrets of the executive session, which in honor he was bound to keep. Mr. Beck had repeated nothing but what had been published in the newspapers, had been sold for two cents, and read by the million. This Mr. Edmonds knew very well, and in insisting that Mr. Beck should pretend that these were profound and inviolable secrets was simply asking him to be a perpetual liar. It is not strange that the Kentucky Senator felt indignant. The Star of this city says sueh proceedings are a farce. The Post calls them eontemptible, and yet it would be difficult to tell wherein they differ from what is demanded of every Freemason. He must pretend that the so-called secrets of Masonry are inviolable, when he knows that every school-boy may, if he will, peruse them at his leisure. Masonic dissimulation is a bad school in which to educate U. S. Senators.

On the 21st the pulpit of the First Presbyterian church of this city was filled by Rev. Dr. Withrow of Boston, who preached two very able sermons. The only criticism that need be made is that they were over the heads of the unlearned. Rev. B. F. Bowen of Cleveland, Ohio, occupied the First Congregational pulpit. He has for some time been associated with Francis Murphy in his temperanee work, and is here on a temperance campaign. He expects to be followed by Mr. Murphy. Rev. Dr. Newman preached to his old congregation in the Metropolitan, and is to be their pastor. The Salvation Army, yesterday, commenced a five days' drill under the lead of Commissioner Smith. They are enlarging and pressing their work. Though not an admirer of their methods, I am sure they are doing much good, and are a standing rebuke to the churches, who accomplish so little. I was much interested to find that in the public services held in the jail, several prisoners rose and testified to the power of redeeming grace. Manifestly the mission aud jail work has not been in vain. H. H. Hinman.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Lectures in Northeastern Indiana.—Traces of the Morgan Abduction.—A "Quiz" Points a Lecture.—Personal Mention.

Angola, Ind., March 25, 1886.

I have spoken six times since coming to Ray on Friday last. Meetings thus far have been fairly attended, and quite an interest already appears. I hope to be remembered when I am gone, and have little fears of being soon forgotten by the lodge "brethren" at Hall's Corners, or Montgomery, where the lodge element was well represented at my lectures. Rev. R. C. Wylie, pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian ehurch at Ray, and his entire membership have been kind to me personally, and have done everything possible to help on the work; and as they are a wide-awake, intelligent people, posted in reforms, I have no fears that the cause will suffer from neglect or want of friends when I am gone.

Hall's Corners was named for the man who kept the jail at Canandaigua, N. Y., at the time of Morgan's incarceration there. He came to Michigan soon after the murder of Morgan, and both husband and wife are buried in Branch county. They have children still living, though not in the immediate vicinity; and a number of the remote relatives were at my lecture last evening. After listening to my remarks for two hours, when an opportunity was given for a reply or questions, an Odd-fellow arose and said: "All you have said about our order is true; but never having been a member, you don't know it," etc., etc. A Mason followed with a similar statement of what I had said about his order. Both seemed to be honest men, but hard put to it for means to justify their orders. Of course I had in reply only to call the attention of the audience to the admissions of these men and ask that their statements be accepted, which called out a hearty response. Another brother denied that Odd-fellowship was a Christless institution. He seemed honest but ignorant. I gave him a few "pointers," and hope he will investigate. Evidently, what the people need in these parts is light. Bro. H. A. Day's sowing has borne good fruit, and he is kindly and gratefully remembered by many at Ray, where he spoke.

I came to this town to obtain bills for a meeting in Miehael's Hall, Fremont, to-morrow evening, and write while waiting for my work. This afternoon my appointment is with Bro. Martin, in the United Brethren church at Sugar Grove. By a little special effort I have secured ten new readers for the Cynosure, and hope to add more to the list before leaving. Bro. Hendry, our old friend at this point, is away from home on one of his farms, but may return in time for a meeting and greeting before I take the train, at 1 p. m. The school which he was starting when I was here three years ago, and of which he is still the financial and managing head, is, I am told, very prosperous. Mrs. H. and her interesting children give to me a cordial welcome.

CENTRAL INDIANA.

Bro. Hawley has Liberty among the Friends and Wesleyans—He Knocks down a Foe by Argument who Escaped the "Setting Maul."

Dear Cynosure:—From North Marion I went to South Marion, and attended the Friends' quarterly meeting. By invitation of their minister I spoke on Sabbath evening, after a young brother from Canada had occupied a little time.

From there I went to the Missionary Friends' meeting-house, which is a little out of Marion. Friend Isaac Elliot, a staunch reformer, and an elder in that meeting, had arranged for me to give two lectures there. Jacob Ring, an old veteran anti-slavery reformer, and now an earnest Anti-mason, was a deeply interested hearer.

At the conclusion of the second lecture a noble young Quaker, who has but just assumed the responsibilities of manhood, came to me and, grasping my hand, said: "I am in agreement with every word thee has said:" Then he added, "We are working to get thee in to lecture at the Friends' meeting-house in Marion."

The day after my lectures was their regular meeting, whieh they hold on fourth day. Being iuvited by one of the elders to sit with them, I went; and being informed that any communication I might have to make would be acceptable, I preached to them as the Lord gave me liberty. The elder who sat at the head of the meeting said to me at its close, "I am in accord with what thee has said."

I then left my pleasant home at Isaac Elliot's, and was conveyed by him to Fairview Wesleyan Methodist church, some seven or eight miles distant. There I also lectured twice. This is on the line of the "underground railroad." There was a depot in this eommunity. Though the route has long since been abandoned, yet the memories of those days still live. The leetures at this Wesleyan Methodist church were attended by members of the M. E. church, the Methodist Protestant church, the Christian church, and the United Brethren. If they were not all in agreement with what I said, like the young man from the Friends' meeting in Marion, they were not heard to dissent, save in a single instance. One Freemason was heard to say that he was not knocked down with a "setting-maul" when he was made a Mason. Whether this man had ouly taken one or two degrees, and so had never personated "Hiram Abiff," or whether he judged that they did not strike him hard enough with the leather setting-maul to have knocked him into the blanket, if the blow had not been supplemented by a push, aud so judged that he was tumbled into the blanket and Masonically killed by the push he received rather than by the blow, I can not tell. But in either case, I suppose they played they mashed his skull, and he played he was dead; and they played that he rotted and stank, while awaiting his mock resurrection.

A minister of the Gospel, with whom I was acquainted when I resided in Western New York, who was seduced into Masonry, felt so humiliated over his efforts to keep his Eutered-Apprentice oath that he burst into tears and confessed that in his effort to conceal what had already been revealed he had told lies enough to sink a commonwealth. The man who said he was not knocked down with a setting-maul when he was made a Mason had no excuse for resorting to a falsehood to conceal that which he knew had already been revealed; for I had just shown, by unanswerable argument, that the Masonic covenant (which those who teach by authority of the Grand Lodges declare to be irrevocable, and hence perpetual, and of such binding authority that no law of the land can affect it, no anathema of the church weaken it,) has no legal or moral force whatever—not even the force of a bond of honor; and that, therefore, a Mason may repudiate his Masonic covenant without transgressiug either civil or moral law, or dishonoring himself.

Under these circumstances, to be guilty of prevarication or falsehood in order to keep the Masonic covenant to "ever conceal," was a wanton as well as wicked act.

The Sabbath after these lectures I preached twice in the Fairfield chureh, and enjoyed the sweet fellowship of saints. While here, my home was with that devoted Christian and veteran reformer, Christopher Sears, whose Christian love and hospitality will be long remembered. C. F. Hawley.

Mennonites and United Brethren.—No Questions asked.—A Report of sad Hypocrisy.

Georgetown, O., March 25, 1886.

Dear Cynosure:—To-night finds me at the home of Rev. Mr. Lambert, pastor of the Mennonite church of this place. We have been calling on friends today and inviting them to attend a lecture to-morrow evening. On our calls we found five who were willing to assist in our work by giving their subscriptions to the Cynosure for one year; several others added their names for a less time. Our meeting at Fair Haven was all that we could have hoped. The evening was pleasant, the attendance good, and all seemed interested. I was told that the Odd-fellows here boasted that they would ask some questions

CHRIST'S SYMPATHY.

[illegible] earth again,
[illegible] and to toil in field and street,
[illegible] pain
[illegible] feet;

[illegible] and leave the lute,
[illegible] on the shelf,
[illegible] wring, mute,
[illegible] Lord himself!

[illegible] with care o'erworn,
[illegible] with grief o'erladen,
[illegible] with woe forlorn,
[illegible] fainting maiden,

[illegible] earthly prize
[illegible] earthly weak endeavor,
[illegible] eyes,
[illegible] forever!

[illegible] the cool, the shade,

[illegible] he feeds.

[illegible] he went would go,
[illegible] where the path might lead;
[illegible] here below
[illegible] with God, indeed!

[illegible] O Lord of mine,
[illegible] thy love forgot:
[illegible] when I walk, repine,
[illegible] thee not!

[illegible] this be thus,
[illegible] poor prayers still reach thee, Lord,
[illegible] are weak, once more to us
[illegible] living word!

[illegible] in the dark
[illegible] hours, one moment stand,
[illegible] keener eyes to mark
[illegible] of thy hand.

SPIRITUAL GUIDANCE.

Our holy caution against fanaticism may switch [illegible] disbelief of the actual leading of the Holy Ghost. Our very orthodoxy about the inspiration and sufficiency of the Scriptures may lead us to forget that the Holy Ghost has other teaching offices beside that of an inspirer, and many misguide us as to their sufficiency and use to the Bible which it does not claim for itself. In our zeal to consider what the inspired writers said, we may overlook what they did. "The Lord give thee understanding in all things."

There is now an inquiry in many sincere hearts, not as to whether there be any Holy Ghost or not," but whether there are any leadings of the Spirit distinct and separate from the light he throws upon Scripture and upon Providence. Does the Holy Ghost guide the soul personally and directly? It is [illegible] that while this question falls from the lips of those who love their Bibles and esteem them most, nevertheless it arises from a felt need of just such guidance. The occurrence of fanaticism is not so much a demonstration that there is no such thing as a genuine Divine guidance as an evidence that there is a valuable something in that [illegible] Satan is busy in counterfeiting. Because the [illegible] sanctified judgment tells us that the [illegible] is withdrawn from the church, it [illegible] us to believe that we are left to the [illegible] such misleading light as our own fallible understandings.

May we not force many of the promises to make room [illegible] any medium between the teaching Spirit and the taught soul? "I will instruct thee and [illegible] the way which thou shalt go." "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and He will show them his covenant." "When he the Spirit of truth is come he will guide you." "God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." "We have received the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." Now, it seems that these texts (with a hundred others) meet the sense of need which the earnest and studious soul feels as it reaches out its hand hoping to find the aid of a stronger hand for guidance, as it cries (Psalm [illegible]) "O Thou great Jehovah!"

And, blessed be God, Christian testimony comes to the aid, and notwithstanding the prejudice with which fanatical error has obstructed its way, it declares: "We speak the things of God." "He leadeth me." "He makes every path of duty straight and plain before my face." And, indeed, the fruits of the Spirit will [illegible] challenge the doubter in multitudes of cases to show that these witnesses are mistaken.

I do not hesitate to say that such guidance is necessary, no matter how complete a knowledge we may have of the Scriptures. Let me show this by a point of experience. The Bible is very complete and explicit upon the matter of gifts and calls to the ministry, and yet all the Bibles in the world could never have satisfied me that I was called to the ministry. What devout Christian has not, in stepping from the general revelations of God's Word to the personal application in their own case, felt the need of something more than their own sanctified judgment or the opinion of their brethren?

We say "the Spirit never leads us farther than the Bible;" true, but he often leads us far beyond our previous knowledge of it. "He never leads in conflict with revelation"—never; but he sometimes leads us right across our biased interpretations of revealed truth. "He never leads us out of harmony with Providence;" no, but he does lead us to anticipate Providence, and to detect it where we were unconscious of it.

Let us, beloved, while thankful for all the lesser and reflected lights, be not cheated of our privilege of having "God himself shine in our hearts!" Let us be "led of the Spirit," and thus enjoy the title and heritage of the "sons of God!"

But "I am so afraid of running into extremes." You will run a whole eternity before you reach the extreme of Divine love and infinite wisdom. You are now in the extreme shallows of this ocean because you refuse to go beyond the bounds of sense and reason. But "have not many run into fanaticism?" Not here. Spiritual guidance is only promised upon certain heart conditions: Meekness, entire conformity, walking in present light, and a firm intention to obey. What you get on other terms is not the leading of the Spirit, and these very conditions are in themselves the requisite safeguard against fanaticism.—Christian Standard.

FAITH THE ORGAN OF INWARD SEEING.

Faith, in its complex character as an exercise of the intellect and heart, the reason and will, a joint product of the whole man, intellegential and sentient, is the main-spring and father of all the graces. By rendering the apprehensions of eternal things vivid and tenacious, through them it impresses the affections and sensibilities, determines the will, and governs the conduct and life.

In reference to God and divine things, faith stands for sight, being itself, as it were, the spiritual organ of inward seeing, so that what seeing is to those that walk naturally, faith is to those that walk spiritually. Faith is to a man, in his navigation for eternity, what sight is in the daily walks of life—a pilot, a lookout, a guide.

Faith, therefore, may be called the soul's sense, whereby it perceives and apprehends spiritual realities, just as the eye is the bodily sense by which acquaintance is made with what is visible; the one being to things unseen and eternal what the other is to the seen and temporal. The eye is the inlet of the soul to the natural world. Faith is the inlet of the soul to the spiritual world. It transmits, so to speak, to our conscious being the truths of God and eternity, heaven and hell, eternal life and eternal death, just as the eye informs the mind of light and shade, trees, rocks, hills, vales, rills, lakes and seas, and moving forms, sun, moon and stars, and human face divine.

It is faith that spans the great gulf between the known and the unknown, the visible and the invisible, the present and the future, with a bold bridge over whose springing arches there is a walking to and fro of the faithful soul, like the angels ascending and descending upon Jacob's ladder. Without faith, indeed, as deep a night broods over the soul and its pathway into eternity as that which hangs like a pall before the eyes of the blind. And all the torches of philosophy and reason will be as vain to enlighten it as to set an electric or a Drummond light before the rayless eyes of a man that has lost the sense of seeing.—Correspondences of Faith, by Henry T. Cheever.

STAY GOD'S TIME.

Be not earnest, in times of affliction, to use inordinate means to speed deliverance. Jacob was too nimble in bending his knees for his father's blessing; it cost him twenty years' exile and a shrunk sinew before he obtained it fully. Stay God's time, and mercy will ripen more kindly. It is not wisdom to break prison unadvisedly; our troubles will end more auspiciously when angels are sent from heaven to open the iron gate as they did to Peter, and led him to the house of prayer. When God intends a salvation, the shackles will fall off easily, and the gates will fly open at night; and you shall be like them that dream, when God turns your captivity like streams in the south.—Christian Conservator.

MODERNIZED TEXTS.

Being made free from sin, judicially, but not morally, ye shall have your fruit, not now, but prospectively, unto holiness.—Rom. vi: 22.

Whosoever the Son maketh free, the same is free indeed, except from the power of sin.—John viii: 36.

Reckon yourselves to be dead, indeed, judicially, unto sin; but not morally, for that would prove you perverse.—Rom. vi: 11.

That He may present you, faulty, before His presence; yet, for the sake of His own merit, with exceeding joy.—Jude 24.

Having spots and wrinkles and all such things, but all covered up by His robe of righteousness; and thus justly winked at by, or concealed from, Omniscience itself.—Eph. v: 27.

Called to be sinners saved by grace.—1 Cor. i: 2.

If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, but He cannot cleanse us from all unrighteousness.—1 John i: 9.

Know ye not that your body is the temple of the flesh?—1 Cor. vi: 19.

Be filled with all the fullness of God; but not now with His holiness.—Eph. iii: 19.

The very God of peace sanctify you wholly, but not in this life; faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it; but not possibly, until He takes you to a world where temptation is less potent than His grace.—1 Thes. v: 23.

Deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom and the power; except in this kingdom of Satan.—Matt. vi: 13.

Whosoever abideth in Him, sinneth every day.—1 John iii: 6.

Whosoever is born of God committeth sin, for his fleshly seed remaineth in him, and he cannot but sin, although he is born of God.—1 John iii: 9.

My little children, these things have I written unto you, that ye sin not any more than ye cannot help.—1 John ii: 1.

He that saith I know Him, and I keep all His commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him.—1 John ii: 4.

GOD'S WORD.

But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life.—Rom. vi: 22.

If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.—John viii: 36.

Reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Rom. vi: 11.

And to present you faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy.—Jude 24.

Not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blame.—Eph. v: 27.

Called to be saints.—1 Cor. i: 2.

If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.—1 John i: 9.

Whosoever is born of God, doth not commit sin; for His seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.—1 John iii: 9.

My little children, these things I write unto you, that ye sin not.—1 John ii: 1.

He that saith I know Him, and keepeth not His commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in Him.—1 John ii: 4.—Times of Refreshing.

"GIVE HIM ANOTHER CHANCE."

John B. Gough in his lecture, "The only Remedy," tells this instance of a Cornwall miner:

Two men were sinking a shaft. It was a dangerous business that they had to do. Their custom was to cut a fuse with a knife; one man then got into a bucket and made a signal to be drawn up. The other one got into the bucket when it descended, with one hand on the signal rope, and one on the fuse. When he touched the fuse he made a signal and was at once hauled up. One day they left their knife up above, and rather than ascend for it they cut a fuse with a large stone. It took fire. "The fuse is on fire!" they both exclaimed, as they leaped into the bucket, but the windlass would not hold but one at a time—only one can go on. One man instantly leaps out and said: "Up with ye, I'll be in heaven in a minute." With lightning speed the bucket was drawn up and the man was saved.

The explosion took place and they descended, expecting to find the mangled body of the miner; but the fact was the charge had loosened a mass of rock, and it lay diagonally across the shaft, and, with the exception of a few bruises and a little scratching, the man was unhurt. When asked why he urged the other man to escape, he gave a reason that skeptics would laugh at. If there is any being on the face of the earth that I pity, it is a skeptic. What did he say? "Why did you insist on this other man hastening up?" In his broad dialect he said: "Because I knowed my soul would be safe, for I've gi'e into the hands of Him of whom it is said that 'faithfulness is the girdle of his loins,' and I knowed what I gi'e Him He'd never gi'e up; but t'other chap was an awful wieked lad, and I wanted to gi'e him another chance." All the infidelity in the world cannot produce such a single act of heroism as that.—Exchange.

TWO BRAVE CHILDREN.

This story is told by a Western paper: The sky at night in the vicinity of Apple Creek, in Dakota, was red all around the horizon, and people knew that prairie fires were burning. Every eveni g as darkness fell, the farmers saw the glare becoming more and more distinct, and during the day the smoke increased until it got to be almost suffocating. Not far from Apple Creek is the little village of Sterling, and near Sterling lived the Stevens family. Mr. Stevens was away from home on the day that the fire approached his house, and it so happened that his wife was sick in bed. Their children were a girl of eight years and a boy of eleven. The boy had heard that it was a good thing to plough a furrow across the path of the advancing flames, and about noon of the day in question he tried to protect the property in that manuer. With the two-horse team and the plough he cut a trench around the house and the sheds, and then another trench around the stacks of unthreshed wheat. He was not strong enough to plough the trench to a great depth; but the wide line of damp earth thrown up would be hard for the flames to leap across, especially since his little sister followed him around, carrying away all trash that would add to the fury of the flames. That night the fire was so near that the poor woman thought of getting out of bed with the purpose of attempting to escape, but she was too ill to try such a thing. Moreover, she knew that if her husband could reach the house he would come, and she watched and prayed as the light came into her room from the crimson skies without. When the flames, running before the wind, came down upon the Stevens place, they licked up the fences in a jiffy, swept away the shocks of grain and stacks of hay in the fields, and then rolled suddenly up to the furrows ploughed by the boy. The wheat stacks fell a prey, and numberless sparks were scattered around the house; but the brave boy and his sister ran all about, trampling out the fire wherever it caught. The little workers were desperate, for they knew that should the house burn their poor mother surely would perish in her bed. They fought with brooms, shovels, and water. Wherever they could they dug up fresh earth, and for a quarter of an hour they did not pause a single moment. Once the house caught, and the wood began to add its crackling to the rush and roar of the vast prairie fire; but the children dashed bucket after bucket of water upon the burning spot, and so put it out. They carried the day. The great fire swept past, and in its wake came the father, half frantic with joy, to find that his little hero and heroine had saved their mother's life.—Selected.

BE TRUTHFUL.

"Harry," said little Annie one day, after working a long time over her slate, "won't you tell me just what this means? I forget what Miss Acton said about it."

"I can't," replied Harry. "I've got lots to do to get ready for my lessons to-morrow. I shall not have a minute to myself all the rest of the day."

"Oh, dear!" sighed Annie, as she bent her little tired head over the slate again.

Just then Edward Ellis eame rushing into the room.

"Come on, Harry," he said; "we're all going off to Mr. Jones' woods for nuts. You've got time to go along, haven't you?"

"All right! Of course I have time," cried Harry, springing up and flinging his book aside. "I'll put off studying my lessons until this evening;" and within five minutes he was on his way to the woods.

Should you call Harry a very truthful and generous little boy that afternoon?—Christian Intelligencer.

LEARNING TO BE A MAN.

Boys, look out! Only a few days ago I heard of four boys who were off in a secluded part of the town, smoking cigars and drinking beer!—boys whose parents had not an idea what they were doing. These boys had the best of training from Christian parents, and were members of the Sunday-school. I would not have believed it if I had not had the information from the best authority. When they were asked what they were doing and remonstrated with for such conduct, they said they were "learning to be men!"

Oh, what a mistaken idea! Not a man who is addicted to these habits but will tell you, if he speaks what he knows, that such habits are a hindrance instead of a help to manhood.

It seems a strange coincidence that, while I was pondering over this sorrowful tale I had heard, a letter came to me from a young man away out on the Western frontier, and this is what he wrote: "I feel that some of the best years of my life have been, in a measure, wasted. I thought, when I was a boy, that being a man was to learn to smoke and drink; and unknown to my parents I acquired these habits, which soon took a strong hold upon me. Tell your boys that smoking and drinking never made a man, but have made many fools of men."

Don't touch a drop of liquor, boys. If you only knew the misery that comes from intemperance! How many men have been wrecked by it! How many hearts have been broken because the loved ones were slaves to the accursed cup. It is the first step that tells; remember that. Don't do things that you would be ashamed to have your mother know.

Ah, my boy, you will find that your mother is your truest, best friend. As the years go on, you will find this assertion to be a true one. A boy's mother ought to be his counselor and his confidant and his judge in matters that he is incompetent to decide for himself.

Don't do anything in an underhanded manner. It will teach you to be unreliable and dishonorable. Cultivate those traits of character that enable you to attain to a high and noble manhood. Stand firm. Be decided. When you are asked to do those things which you know are not right, say "No." Don't be afraid of the jests and scoffs of your companions. Although they will not admit it, yet in their hearts they respect you all the more for your refusal. Besides, your decision on the side of right will be the cause of others of your companions saying "No." One straightforward, fearless, manly boy will have a great influence for good over a large community of boys. Try it for yourselves.—Evangelist.

A teacher was explaining to her class the words concerning God's angels, "Ministers of his who do his pleasure, and asked, "How do the angels carry out God's will?"

Many answers followed.

One said, "They do it directly."

Another, "They do it with all their heart."

A third, "They do it well."

And, after a pause, a quiet little girl added, "They do it without asking any questions."

TEMPERANCE.

TOBACCO FOR MINORS.

(THE INTERLUDE TO JOSEPH COOK'S ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-THIRD LECTURE.)

"Can a good man with a cigar in his mouth talk effectively to a boy with a cigarette in his mouth?"

A hundred times, No! As to the tobacco nuisance, public opinion is rising in both intelligence and sternness. It is doing this under the progress of scientific investigation, and especially under the impulse of notice which has been turned lately upon diseases caused by tobacco. It is now very well ascertained that delirium tremens may be produced by excessive indulgence in narcotics. The facts known to the medical profession as to lip and tongue cancers caused by tobacco, are too horrible to be recited before a public assembly, especially over the grave of that great soldier whose death has made Mt. McGregor a sacred height.

I have no patience with the low white's mouth disease, which is the name I give to the habit of chewing and expectorating tobacco. I must say that if I had a dog that had a habit of chewing and expectorating tobacco, or even of smoking it here, there and everywhere, I should shoot him. As this audience does not seem to be in perishing need of instruction or exhortation on the tobbaco habit, I refrain from going further, except to commend a volume which has just dropped from the press in this city, on "The Tobacco Problem," by Meta Lander, and published by Cupples, Upham & Co. I wish this excellent volume might be scattered wherever the tobacco nuisance prevails, that is almost everywhere, in the highways and by-ways of travel and trade, and in many legislative halls, not excepting one at Washington.

In the Massaehusetts legislature a bill for the prevention of the sale of tobacco to minors has just passed the lower house by a vote of three to one.

A gentleman long in a public position of honor and responsibility, sends me in writing a very suggestive illustration. A lady from the country came to Boston to do shopping. On her way to Boston a gentleman occupied half the seat with her on the cars. Half his time was spent in the smoking car and the rest with the lady. When she arrived in Boston, she was sick and was obliged to send for a physician. He examined her case, and informed her that she had been made ill by tobacco. She paid the doctor's bill and went home without doing her business, and wondering whether non-smokers have any rights which smokers are bound to respect. Another lady says she cannot come to Boston to do business an account of the ever-present fumes of tobacco in the street and shops.

No doubt tobacco blunts the sense of propriety. The narcotic nosegay is as unconscious of the odors he exhales as is the eater of onions and garlic. "Indifference or apathy with regard to the comfort of others," says the London Times, "is one of the most remarkable effects of tobacco. No other drug will produce anything like it. The opium-eater does not compel you to eat opium with him. The drunkard does not compel you to drink. The smoker compels you to smoke; nay more, to breathe the smoke he has just discharged from his own mouth."

A lady coming from the South for her health was kept in the state-room of her steamer during all the voyage, on account of tobacco smoke on every part of the vessel, and lost the whole effect of the voyage because she could have no fresh air. Her husband, a lawyer, thinks that in equity she could bring a suit for damages against the steamboat company.

The new State-house in Des Moines, Iowa, will not allow smokers to enter its portals. An edict has just gone forth that tobacco must not be used in the halls and corridors of the White House in Washington. Our military and naval academies do not allow their pupils to use tobacco. Several colleges in the West prohibit the use of tobacco by their students. Germany has excellent laws forbidding the sale of tobacco to minors. Eighteen States in the American Union are now teaching children to abstain from alcoholics and narcotics, and my proposition is that the churches, both preachers and members, should rise at least to the the secular level of the State legislatures on both these subjects.

It is said that Mr. Cyrus W. Field became a total abstainer through the influence of Archdeacon Farrar, who was his guest while in New York.

By a unanimous vote of the Board of Evanston, Ill., beer wagons are prohibited from delivering beer in this village under penalty of $100 to $200.

It is proposed by the Executive Committee of the National Temperance League to hold during the month of July a British and colonial temperance Congress in London.

Switzerland is now adopting very rigid restrictive temperance measures. For ten years they have had free trade in liquor, and governmental reports show the result to have been terrible.

A society has been formed in England having for its object the establishing and furnishing of temperance coffee-houses. A great many of sueh houses are being suecessfully carried on in all the larger cities in Great Britain.

Dr. B. W. Richardson, the eminent seientist and President of the British Medical Temperance Association, contemplates visiting America next season, and will speak on the subject of temperance in a number of the larger cities.

—Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage is a close observer of the signs of the times. In a recent address he declared that one thing was settled, viz., that no political party would go into power after this administration without the eonsent of the prohibitionists. He coincided in the opinion of the late John B. Gough that the temperance forces were never so well organized and so powerful for good as at the present moment.—Advance.

and show that I knew nothing about them; but for some reason no questions were asked, although I gave an opportunity and rather urged that they do so.

On Monday evening I addressed a fair audience in the Otterbein U. B. church, near New Madison, and on Tuesday evening a similar audience in the Friendship U. B. church, near the same place. There is a very strong U. B. element in this part. A colony of Germans from Maryland settled here in an early day, and formed a nucleus around which several churches have been built. Prominent among these are the Horine family. Samuel and his brother George Horine, with many others, extended us a hearty welcome and assisted in arranging for meetings.

I learned while here that one of the Brethren preachers, a Rev. Bushong, who is now preaching in Arcanum, induced an adhering Mason to join what is known as the Calvary church, telling him that it made no difference whether he belonged to the lodge or not. I hope some of the brethren will take it in hand and find out the preachers who are living a lie—professing to uphold a rule which they are trying to break down. I think, judging by what I can hear, that a majority of the Brethren churches in this section will stand true to the principles on which the church was founded, when it comes to a test.

W. B. Stoddard.

The Churches.

—The national superintendent of the Sabbath observance department, W. C. T. U., has sent forth a request asking all Christians to observe the first week in April as a season for special work and prayer for a better observance of the Sabbath. All pastors are requested on the first Sabbath in the month to make the fourth commandment the subject of their discourse.

—The Constitutional Convention of the United Brethren at Eaton Rapids, Mich., will be held April 13th instead of 12th, as noticed in these columns last week.

—Prof. J. T. Hyde, D. D., for sixteen years professor of Pastoral Theology in Chicago Theological Seminary, died March 21st, at his home in this city. He had filled many and influential positions in the Congregational denomination.

—The death in London of Rev. W. E. Boardman, for some time associated with Dr. Cullis in his evangelical labors in Boston, and the author of the "Higher Life," is announced. He has been for some years past an evangelist in England, working with Dr. Asa Mahan. He has been a special teacher and defender of the "faith cure." He was a devoted and eminently useful Christian minister.

—The Rev. Dr. Edward Judson, of this city, wishing to raise $50,000 toward the $190,000 which the Baptist Missionary Union needs to push its work into Upper Burmah, now open to the Gospel, asks for an average ten cents from each member of the Baptist Sunday-schools.

—The Chinese Recorder states that Rev. J. R. Wolfe, of the Church Missionary Society, with two Chinese Christians sent out by the Foochow church, sailed from Shanghai, November 1st, to begin a thoroughly Chinese mission in Corea. Mr. Ah Hok, the wealthy Chinese Methodist, gave $1,000 to start this mission, and went with them to Corea to help settle them in the work.

—It is a suggestive fact that at Locknow, India, there is a native press employing nine hundred workmen, which issues largely the sacred writings of the Hindoos and Mohammedans. But this is not the worst. A native publishing firm at Lahore translates European infidel publications as fast as they appear, and disseminates them in the various languages of India. The truth is, anti-Christ was never more on the alert and active, knowing that his time is short.

—Rev. J. A. Richards, of Ft. Scott, Kansas, who has been laboring for some weeks in Wisconsin, returned home last week. Revival meetings in which he assisted at Oshkosh, Fond du Lac and Byron, were all owned of God in the salvation of sinners.

—A conference of mechanics, laborers and business men recently held in Berlin condemned all work on Sunday.

—As a result of the revival at Drury College, Springfield, Mo., every college student save one, every girl in Fairbank's Hall, and even the servants, have all become Christians.

—Lord Selborne's retirement from public life has not been caused by political reasons, but from a desire to spend his remaining years in close personal communion with God.

—The Church of England has nine mission stations along the Panama canal.

—Mr. Spafford, a former attorney of Chicago, who was active and successful as an evangelist after the great Moody meeting in this city in 1876, is now at the head of a Christian colony in Jerusalem, who spend their time in giving religious instruction and in acts of charity.

—Major D. W. Whittle has returned to Chicago after his prolonged and successful work in Kansas.

—The labors of Moody and Sankey in Galvestou, Houston, and San Antonio, Texas, and in Mobile, have stirred up those communities as never before in religion. The largest available buildings are crowded day by day, and the churches are greatly quickened. They are now in Atlanta, Georgia.

—The labors of Rev. L. W. Munhall, of Indianapolis, on the Pacific coast continue to be attended by wonderful results. He is now holding a two-weeks' meeting in San Francisco. A correspondent of the Independent thus describes him: "The Doctor is a second John the Baptist in the fearlessness with which he denounces all forms of sin, and a veritable Finney in the vise-like grip of his logic and convincing power of his closing appeal. His discourses, notwithstanding the terrible truths presented, are intensely interesting, being illustrated with pictures of travel from nearly all lands, and interspersed with incidents coming under his wide observation, and which are delivered with great dramatic effect.

—The conferences lately held at Xenia, Ohio, and Monmouth, Ill., by the United Presbyterian churches, were well attended and of great interest and profit.

—In addition to mission halls, there are now 500 places in London where the Gospel is preached in the open air on Sunday.

JONES AND SMALL.

The work of the Georgia evangelists has been widening and deepening the past week. Farwell Hall is filled every noon five days in the week, and the rink every evening but Saturday, and many seekers after the new life are reported; while the proof that church members are being effectually benefited is shown by the renewing of their vows by thousands. The pastors testify that they never before were able to preach so freely and earnestly, and a strong effort, but ineffectual, was made to have the evangelists hold a two weeks' meeting on the West side. They will remain a few days longer than their engagement, which closed on the Sabbath. The fact that both have publicly given up tobacco has been a most powerful testimony for their sincerity, which no scoffer can answer. Space forbids printing more than the interesting fact this week. Their severe labors tell upon both, and Mr. Jones has been obliged to give up all but the evening meeting. Their engagements after leaving Chicago were sent by Mr. Jones to a pastor in Jackson, Miss., and printed in the Clarion of that place:

Columbus, Mississippi, April 18th to 25th.
Baltimore, Maryland, May 2nd to 23d.
Indianapolis, Indiana, June 6th to 20th.
St. Paul, Minnesota, June 23d to 27th.
Lansing, Michigan, June 29th to July 2nd.
Concord, Massachusetts, July 5th.
Chautauqua, N. Y., July 7th to 11th.
In Missouri, July 15th to 25th.
Loveland, Ohio, August 1st to 6th.
Columbus, Ohio, August 7th et seq.
Toledo, Ohio, September 5th to 19th.
Toronto, Canada, October 3d to 24th.

POINTS FROM JONES'S SERMONS.

Christ comes in and takes possession where he finds the open door. Christ is always a waiting guest where he is welcome.

"When I began preaching, I was afraid I would hurt somebody's feelings. Now I'm afraid I won't."

"I have let my bucket down so deep that I have stirred up your mud; but it's my bucket and your mud."

"Some fellows say: 'Don't mix politics with religion.' When you hear a fellow talk that way, you may know he hasn't any religion to mix."

"The liquor traffic ought to be made so odious that nobody but an infernal scoundrel will sell it, and nobody but an infernal fool will drink it."

"I have kicked the bushels off the lights, and then the owners would get mad, and say that I had put out their lights."

"God bores through the top of a man's head to his heart, and then on down to his pocket."

"Some preachers never run up on a sinner until he is on his death-bed. About all they are fit for is to marry the living and bury the dead."

"God will put the barkeeper and the legislator in hell together."

"What is a ball-room? It is the ante-room to a german. And what is a german? It is the ante-room to eternal disgrace."

"Dancing is hugging, set to music."

"I would put my children into the coils of the worms of the Nile before I would put them into the hands of a dancing-master. I wouldn't wipe my feet on the rotten rascal."

"Very few women have any conscience, when it comes to a trade. You will hire a woman to cook for you at four dollars a month, and then brag about how cheap you got her. You will go to the store, and give four dollars a yard for a piece of goods, and then you will go over to Sister Brown, a poor, good woman in your church, and give her half a dollar for making it."

"A leading business man in Nashville said, the other day, that no woman should be paid over fifty cents a day for her work. That man ought to be in hell."

I like a just man. Brother, you hear people say, "You had better be just before you are generous." It's a great deal harder to be just than it is to be generous. I could pull out ten dollars and give it to a poor woman, and I don't miss it and it don't bother me. But to be just to all mankind, that's another thing. I tell you what it is, it is a great deal easier to give fifty dollars to an orphans' home than it is to be just. I hurt my little boy's feelings and take little Bobby in my lap, precious little fellow, and say, "Son, forgive your father for hurting your feelings." It is a great deal easier to be generous than it is to beg your little boy's pardon for your harshness and meanness.

It is impossible for any one man to look after five hundred men. That is impossible, and, as I have said many a time, the most disgusting sight I have ever seen is to see a poor little old preacher between the shafts of a wagon and all his church on the wagon, and some cursing and some dancing, and others playing base-ball; all the whole congregation up on the wagon, while the poor little old preacher is between the shafts, with his tongue lolling out as he hauls them along. This is the most disgusting sight in the world. And you can see that sight in Chicago every day in the year. It is wrong. Let us get out of that wagon and go and help the preacher to hitch up, and let him drive yourselves for a while. It is a heap easier for five hundred people to pull one preacher than for one preacher to pull five hundred people. And there you sit in the wagon, and now and then one of you says, "Start him up!" And you feed him on wheat straw, and expect him to make 2:40 time on wheat straw, and there is no force in the universe that will do it.

Sister, if Christ does not live with you in your home it is because you have no room for Christ; if Christ does not live with you in your want it is because there is no room in your heart for Christ. Brother, if Christ does not live with you in your store or in your office, it is because you have no room in your store or in your office for Christ. Blessed be Christ. If I am an engineer and show room on my engine for Christ he will come with me. If I am a shoemaker and have a little room only eight feet by ten feet, he will sit there with me if I want him. If I am a mother, with the cares and duties of home and children, if I have room in my house for Christ he will be there. And what I want in this universe is a heart big enough for Christ to live in, and he will live with me; and Christ will not live anywhere where there is not room enough for him and his principles. I want a room big enough for Christ, and then I have room enough for all the rest of mankind.

"Who is Christ?" He is my brother; he is the Maker, the Creator, the Upholder of this universe! Oh Christ, thou dost fill the bowels of this earth with the purest gold, and spread out the richest, broadest acres of land; thou who dost cause all things to work together for the good of men, how art thou toward me? When Jesus himself came among among us he never claimed this rich valley of the Mississippi, or some of the beautiful valleys of the eastern country for himself; he never built him a magnificent residence and let the world be houseless; but when Jesus came he took his simple breakfast at the home of Mary and Martha, and walked out in the streets of the community, and he gave sight to a blind man; he unstopped the deaf ear of a man there; and when he met the poor widow going to the tomb with her only son he lifted the boy back into life and his mother's arms; and he went on and on, and late in the evening he sat down by the roadside, alone, and resting his poor head on his tired arms, he said: "This is the first time I thought of myself since I got up this morning. The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but I have not where to lay my head."

A 4 CENT POULTRY BOOK.—F. D. Craig, North Evanston, Ill., has issued a 36-page (72 columns) book, with colored cover, describing his Folding Incubator and Brooder, to which is added a large amount of information on poultry. Besides a full description of incubators how they are built, operated, etc, instructions are given for building the best brooder ever invented, at a trivial cost; also illustrates a model hennery in four pictures; shows how 1000 per cent can be made yearly from 100 hens; describes all breeds of fowls, over 75 varieties; vocabulary of over 60 terms used in scoring fancy fowls; tells all about caponizing; how to make eggs pay; small hen houses; winter laying quarters; incubator chicks; secrets of artificial hatching; Egyptian hatching ovens; poultry dogs; "Profitable Home Industry for Women," by Helen Wilmans; a number of inquiries; eggs without roosters, and other matter. No books sent except for 4 cents; stamps taken. See advertisement of incubator in another place.

THE TRIBUTE OF THE PUBLIC!

THE SLOANE MEMORIAL. 24 PAGES. SECOND EDITION.

Price, 10 cents. Stamps received.

The Memorial Number of the CHRISTIAN NATION was scarcely one week before the public when the entire edition, although more than double the usual size, was entirely exhausted, and orders were still pouring in. THE PUBLIC DEMANDED A SECOND EDITION, and we are glad to give it. It will be ready March 29th. The 2d edition will be a 24-page paper, and in addition to all the contents of the first edition relating to Dr. Sloane—viz: Memorial Sermon by the Rev. David Gregg, contributions from Prof. Willson, President Hodge, President Scovel, Dr. George B. Cheever and Oliver Johnson, and two original poems—will contain much new matter, including a thrilling account of the great John Brown meeting written by Dr. Sloane himself on the 25th anniversary of that event, and published in the CHRISTIAN NATION, Dec 17, 1883, additional Tributes, and the full-page portrait of Mr. Sloane, retouched and with a richer finish.

Added to this, it will contain the usual weekly contents of the paper, which include in this issue a SKETCH AND PORTRAIT of the eminent preacher, REV. DR. JOHN HALL, of this city.

In response to many inquiries, we have printed on elegant heavy plate paper, 14x11, suitable for framing, our portrait of Dr. Sloane, which we are selling at 50 cents per copy, and which will be mailed, securely wrapped, to any address, on receipt of price, in stamps or otherwise. But in order to place a portrait of the loved features in as many homes as possible, we will send the portraits in clubs of five at 40c. each, or in clubs of ten at 30c. each.

Or we will send a copy of the Portrait FREE, postage paid, to any one, not a subscriber for the CHRISTIAN NATION, who will send us their subscription for one year, $2. Address,

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People!

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of GEORGE W. CLARK, the Minstrel of Reform, a forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages. Price 10cts, postpaid. Address

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this book.

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movemeut as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unraveling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much abont the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1 00

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen. $3.50.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen. $2.00.

National Christian Association.
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

FARM NOTES.

WEANING CALVES.

Every animal upon the farm should be subjected to a course of training as soon as it makes its appearance. This is desirable, and indeed indispensable for the best results, with all live stock, from the chickens to the colts. Docility involves ease of management in every way, and this saves labor and increases the profits from the use of the animals. In a dairy, docility is one of the most important characteristics of the cows, and the dairyman who has experienced the advantage of it will always give his most careful attention to the training of the calves. Weaning is the first lesson to be given. A calf should never be permitted to suck the cow. This enforced habit changes—in time—the disposition of those young cows which, never having suckled a calf and never having been nursed by a dam themselves, make no trouble over the removal of a calf. They never hold up their milk, and are rarely troubled with garget, or have the common vices of cows which grow out of their natural affection for the calf, after they have been habituated to its company and have nursed it. My practice has always been to remove the calf as soon as it is dropped, watching the cow until she has been safely delivered. The calf is taken to a pen provided for it at a distance from the cow stable where it is out of sight and hearing. The calf is rubbed dry, and is comfortably bedded in this sheltered pen. The cow is tied in the stable and given a mess of warm bran and linseed-meal slop, and is milked. The milk is then given to the calf, which is taught to drink by giving it two fingers, separated about an inch, through which the milk is easily sucked. Three meals a day are given. This is continued until the fourth day, when the milk is fit for use in the dairy. After this skimmed milk, warmed to 90 degrees, is given three times a day, and no more than three quarts at a meal during the first month. The calves are kept alone; a small bundle of clean, fine hay may be hung in the pen, and they will soon begin to eat it. By perseverance in thus weaning the calf, not only from its dam, but from its natural inclination to suck, much future trouble will be avoided.—American Agriculturist.

ANIMAL COURAGE.--The sagacious horse soon learns to despise a timid rider. The confidence of a horse in a firm rider and his own courage is great, as was conspicuously evinced in the case of an Arab possessed by the late Gen. Sir Robt. R. Gillespie, who, being present on the race course at Calcutta during one of the great Hindoo festivals, when several hundred thousand people assembled to witness all kinds of shows, was suddenly alarmed by the shrieks of the crowd and informed that a tiger had escaped from his keeper. Sir Robert immediately called for his horse, and grasping a boar spear which was in the hands of one of the crowd, rode to attack his formidable enemy. The tiger was probably amazed at finding himself in the midst of such a number of shrieking beings, flying from him in all directions; but the moment he saw Sir Robert he crouched with the attitude of preparing to spring, and that instant the gallant soldier passed his horse in a leap over the tiger's back and stuck the spear through his spine. The horse was a small gray, afterward sent home by him as a presena to the Prince Regent.—London Society.

MINUS HORNS.—And now it is proclaimed that horns, so long the annoyance of dairymen and terror of milkmaids, can easily be eradicated from young animals. A writer on live stock asserts that, at the age of ten or fifteen days, the matrix of the future horn is a small, hairless, movable prominence, which, with one eighth of an inch of skin, can be removed by one sweep of a strong, sharp pocket-knife, and forever after the animal will be hornless. This operation causes very little pain, and the loss of not over one ounce of blood, and will be sore only a day or two. Our authority adds that he first tried this in 1868, has performed it annually since, and that such cattle mature earlier, grow larger, and never injure each other.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

Hundreds of Bottles Prescribed.

Dr. C. R. DAKE, Belleville, Ill., says: "I have prescribed hundreds of bottles of it. It is of great value in all forms of nervous disease which are accompanied by loss of power."

A Man Comes From Alabama to Express His Gratitude to an Atlanta Man.

"Is this Dr. Walter Taylor?"

The speaker was an elderly man, of fine appearance, and evidently a stranger in the city. The question was addressed to Dr. Walter A. Taylor, who sat in his office immersed in the correspondence of his immense business.

"That is my name, sir," he replied, looking up inquiringly from his work.

"My name is Austin. I live at Culman, Ala. I have come to see you, Dr. Taylor, to express to you my gratitude."

Dr. Taylor smiled and inquired as to the occasion of his gratitude.

"You have saved my life, sir, and I come to tell you that, and to shake your hand. About a year ago I was taken with pneumonia, and it developed into a very ugly case. I was in my bed for nine months, and was harrassed and weakened with a cough that was almost constant. Nothing would relieve it. I had physician after physician, and tried remedy after remedy. I have studied medicine myself, and now in the jewelry business. I was almost worn out, and had about given up my case as hopeless. One day I staggered out of bed, to have a consultation with all the physicians, to see if I could not, as a last resort, obtain some relief from my ills. The physicians in consultation told me that they could do nothing for me, and, hardly able to walk, I made my way to a drugstore, and while in there I spoke of the consultation just held in my case to the druggist, and he said; "Here is a remedy that I hear very highly spoken of. I know nothing of it from personal experience, but it has a great reputation, and my customers like it." The remedy handed me was Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein. I took it with about the same spirit that a drowning man would catch at a straw. I had little hope of its efficacy, but I thought I ought to try everything, and therefore took the bottle. I was barely able to get back to my bed again. It was an effort for me to walk down stairs. I was dispirited, hopeless and weak beyond expression, and continually growing weaker. With the very first bottle of Sweet Gum and Mullein my condition improved. It has been less than five weeks since I began on your remedy, and now I walk and travel without the slightest inconvenience up stairs or down stairs. My cough has left me, my health almost is restored, and I am in good condition. It is my earnest conviction that Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein saved my life, and I felt that I wanted to look you in the face, and take you by the hand and tell you so. I want to tell it also for the benefit of thousands of others who are suffering, and who are growing weaker and weaker from the use of inefficient remedies."

The above is the exact statement of this remarkable case. Mr. Austin insisted on seeing Mr. Taylor's laboratory, press rooms, packing rooms, and every part of his immense establishment. He wanted to see where Sweet Gum and Mullein was made. He took the greatest interest in every part of the process, and having been a physician, was enabled to look at it intelligently and to testify to the correct curative principles involved in the materials out of which the remedy is made, and the manner in which it is compounded. After a half hour's pleasant sight-seeing, and conversation he took his departure, saying to Dr. Taylor as he went out of the door, "I am satisfied now that I have seen the man that saved my life, for I tell you Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein is what stopped the progress of my disease, when everything else had failed, and hope had almost gone." This is the testimony borne by thousands of others by letter and otherwise, but it is seldom that the proprietor of a medicine finds a man who gets on the train and rides hundreds of miles to see him that he may express his appreciation and gratitude.

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

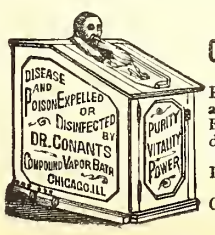
THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."



E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The session of the Cabinet Mar. 23rd, was devoted to the consideration of measures designed to secure a more rigid enforcement of the Chinese restriction act, particularly with reference to preventing the landing of Chinese laborers on fraudulent certificates.

Secretary Manning was seized with vertigo on his return to his office from the Cabinet meeting. He had been working all day without taking any nourishment and was feeling very weak. He walked up the two flights of stairs and on reaching the top was attacked with vertigo and partly fell and partly sat down. His sudden illness alarmed his friends and he was taken home.

The Senate Friday adopted Mr. Edmunds' resolution on the relations between the President and the Senate in respect to removals and suspensions from office.

COUNTRY.

At Cincinnati Monday a witness swore in court that there was a communist society in the city which regularly practiced drilling and rifle shooting; that there are 500 such organizations throughout the country, and that no record of the membership is kept so as to prevent identification in case of arrest.

Frank Mulkowsky, the murderer of Agnes Kledzeick, expiated his brutal crime on the gallows. He was hanged in the County Jail in this city Friday noon. Mulkowsky protested his innocence to the last moment.

A company of United States troops were en route for St. Louis Saturday to be on hand in case labor riots take place. The Wabash yardmen at that point struck Friday morning, but were informed by their Chairman they had no just cause, when they again resumed work. At East St. Louis the strikers prevented, as much as possible, the departure of trains, but two freights were sent out, however. The Missouri Pacific also dispatched a train of eighteen cars. Under orders from Judge Treat, the United States Marshal left Springfield, Ill., for East St. Louis, to see that traffic on the Wabash was not interfered with. That road like the Texas Pacific is in the hands of the U. S Courts. Two strikers were found guilty of contempt of court at Palestine, Texas, but others derailed an engine while the trial was in progress. The statements of Chairman Irons that the strike is liable to spread throughout the country are repudiated by high officials of the Knights of Labor, who seem to be anxious for a speedy settlement. It is reported that the strikers derailed an accommodation train at Pacific, Mo.

A Communistic arsenal was found in a room at No. 231 Twentieth street, Chicago. It consisted of a book on the "Science of Revolutionary War," by Johann Most; an infernal machine, nitroglycerine, hand grenades, pistols, a Springfield rifle, etc. It was found while the police were searching a would be assassin.

Mr. Ansel N. Kellogg, President of the Kellogg Newspaper Printing Company of this city died in Georgia on Monday. He was the original projector of the "patent inside" for local papers.

The Iowa Senate passed a bill Tuesday making bribery a misdemeanor punishable with severe penalties.

The presidents of the anthracite coal companies met in New York and unanimously agreed that the total output of coal this year should not exceed 33,500,000 tons; also that the output for April should not exceed 2,000,000 tons, and that prices should be advanced 25 cents.

The great strike of the 4,000 workmen at the National Tube Works, in McKeesport, Pa., ended satisfactorily. The trouble was settled by the workmen accepting the proposition of General Manager Flagler to restore the wages ruling in 1884 and to advance the wages of laborers to $1 25 per day. The increase will range from 7 to 20 per cent.

The Peoria County Almshouse, situated about six miles south and east of that city, was burned to the ground at 10 o'clock this morning. At the time the building burned it was occupied by 115 inmates, all of whom escaped amid the wildest excitement. The building was a two-story brick, valued at $40,000.

A cyclone swept through the nothern section of Allen County, Ind., Sunday night, wrecking the Methodist and United Brethren churches at Williamsport, and damaging a number of dwellings. Many barns were blown down, and several head of cattle were killed.

Near Galesburg, Mich., Harry Seymour placed ties on the railway track near a neighbor's house, hoping to direct suspicion against the latter, with whom he was on bad terms. Seymour, however, was arrested, promptly confessed, and in two days was sentenced to twenty years in the penitentiary.

The belief is now expressed that the steamship Oregon was wrecked by collision with the schooner Charles R. Morse, of Boston. The latter has not been heard of since the Oregon disaster.

The population of St. Charles, Iowa, turned out en masse, with guns, clubs, and dogs, for a rat-hunt. They harvested 480 dead rats, besides killing many that could not be found.

All the drivers and conductors of nine street-car lines in Pittsburg, Pa., have gone out on a strike, and operations on the lines have been entirely stopped. Three lines in the city are running as usual. The cause of the strike was the refusal of the officials to advance wages.

A large barn on the Hopkins stock farm at East Providence, R. I., was burned and sixty five Jersey and Ayrshire cattle perished in the flames.

Diseased cattle to the number of 106, valued at $16,000 were killed last week at and around Cynthiana, Ky. It is now believed that pleuro-pneumonia does not exist in the State.

At Penargyl, Pa., Saturday, Hernwood Martin lifted a weight of 600 pounds, but so strained himself that death resulted in a few hours.

Three negroes who had attempted to assault a young woman at Auburn, Ky., Tuesday morning, were taken by a mob and hanged to one tree.

FOREIGN.

Mr. Gladstone appeared in the House of Commons Friday afternoon, and said the statement he would make April 8th would take the form of the introduction of a bill for the future government of Ireland. This announcement produced a sensation. It is now believed the Premier has, in deference to the opposition in his own party, decided to abandon, temporarily at least, his scheme for buying out the landlords of Ireland, and make home rule in some form, pure and simple, the basis of his Irish proposals.

It is reported that Queen Victoria has accepted the resignations of Joseph Chamberlain and G. O. Trevelyan, members of Mr. Gladstone's Cabiuet, and that the office of Secretary of Scotland will be tendered to the Earl of Dalhousie.

John Bright, the Pall Mall Gazette says, has viewed Mr Gladstone and is in favor of the Premier's scheme of Irish Government. He was struck with its ingenuity and originality.

The African steamer, which arrived at Plymouth Mar, 23rd, brings news of desperate fighting between the French and Hovas in Madagascar. About the end of February, the Hovas, under General Willoughby, attacked 3,000 French troops, routed them with heavy loss and pursued them to Tamative. The French houses and stores in Tamative were shelled by the Hovas and destroyed. The Hovas then returned to the capital. Their losses were small. A few days later General Sherrington surprised 4,000 Sakalovas preceded by 250 Frenchmen and three machine guns. The Sakalovas were routed, forty being killed and many wounded. This is the first news of a fresh rupture in Madagascar and has created a great sensation.

Emperor William reached his 89th birthday on Monday, and the event was celebrated in Berlin and throughout Germany with great ceremony.

Strikes in France and Belgium culminated in desperate riots. The damage done to property by the striking miners in Charleroi alone already amounts to $2 500,000. The strikers threaten to destroy the gas works, and strong re-enforcements of troops have been sent to help protect the city. The glass works have been looted and destroyed, involving a loss of $1,000,000 and throwing thousands of persons out of employment.

The massacre of twelve colored men in the court-room at Carrollton, Mississippi, has been deprecated and even denounced by Southern papers, but that seems to be the extent of their desire for justice. The apathy of the local government has been mentioned to President Cleveland by a delegation of colored men. But, under the Democratic State-rights doctrine, they might have gone out with the dogs at night and told it to the moon. The Jackson, Miss., Clarion, a strong Democratic paper, charges the blame of this awful murder upon the whites; and had this class been the sufferers instead of the blacks, blood-hounds would next day have been baying in their tracks, and the utmost dispatch of the courts would have been too slow for the rage of the people. Yet some of the Southern papers condone the crime! If human courts shall fail to punish it, there yet waits a final Bar; but even now there are some retributions. The emigration of the blacks, which has gone on steadily for years, will have a powerful impetus from the massacre, and thus the whole South must suffer for the crime of a community.

The House of Representatives has passed a bill to secure and regulate the arbitration of labor difficulties, by a strong vote of 195 to 29. The bill was strenuously opposed by a number of Congressmen for its lack of force, providing merely for voluntary arbitration. But there are cogent reasons why it should be a more effectual document for this very reason. The very soul of arbitration is its voluntary character. An enforced arbitration mends nothing, heals nothing. It is no better than the law courts already existing. If Mr. O'Neill of Missouri, the author of the bill, has therefore devised a measure that shall lead to a fair, equitable and voluntary settlement of labor difficulties, his work is to be commended. Similar to this is the "Court of Peace" devised and established by Napoleon early in this century, which is continued, with slight modifications, to the present day, amid all the political changes of kingdom, empire and republic—a demonstration of the justice and excellence of the system. (See the current Century.)

The free, unforced arrangement of all questions of the length of a day's work, of the division of profits, etc., is become more frequent, and must be attended with happy results to all parties concerned. A number of establishments have agreed on eight hours a day, with ten hours' pay. The labor unions have asked for less hours with less wages; but everyone knows that in a year they would demand the full present rate. Other manufactories have agreed on a sliding scale of wages, depending on the market price of the product. In others a rate of profit-sharing has been adopted, the dividends being divided between stockholders and workmen equitably. Such individual attempts at co-operation are hopeful, and will prove far more effectual than if enforced by rigid laws which would bear unjustly upon many enterprises while assisting others. Let employers continue on this Golden Rule line, remembering that their engagements are with men and not machines; and let the workingmen give up their secret, conspiratorial lodges: then we shall hear of these fratricidal wars no more.

The discussion of this arbitration bill was not without its scandals. Frank Lawler of this city is the representative of the Second Illinois district, elected by the Democrats. His business when at home is killing men—with his saloon on Clark street. As a "business man" he is the enemy of the laborer; as a demagogue politician in Congress he patrouizes him as a friend and champion. He began to learn this role as alderman from the eighth ward. The sight of this horny-handed whisky-dealer poising as the representative of the toiling masses was a joke to the other members of the House, but such scenes disgrace the nation, lower our self-respect, make us forget the honor of the American name, and dread the day—which God grant may never come—when our workingmen shall accept such men as champions.

In an account in the New York World of Mr. Powderly and the Knights of Labor it is said that the Detroit convention of the order he urged the abolition of its oaths and the obligatious of secrecy. It is a great mistake that his advice was not followed. If his organization is strong in numbers, and if its demands are just, it is yet weak in its methods. Secrecy and obedience to unknown superiors are principles that can never with safety be allowed to dominate American institutions. Mr. Powderly's course in connection with the great strike in the Southwest has been as honorable as his advice to his lodge. He gave the order to return to work a week ago Monday, and repeated it a day or two later, without urging the foolish demand of his underlings that their lodge must be recognized or they would lay an embargo upon the traffic of the whole country. Had his advice been followed there would have been no strike; the railroads, the laborers, and the Southwest would have been saved immense loss. Let the secrecy and false swearing into the hands of petty despots be broken up and the labor societies, no longer lodges, will stand like Americans and men before the world and their appeals will be heard.

A long letter from Judge Cook of Texas to the Galveston press indicates the judicial severity which will be visited upon the Knights of Labor lodge if it ever gets into court upon the merit of its character and methods. After a careful analysis of the strike he denounces the boycott measures and pronounces the Knights of Labor an illegal organization because it seeks to enforce demands which are not maintainable or recoverable in law, and that by methods which are entirely unknown to the remedial branch of the law.

The report of building department in this city speaks of an unusually large number of permits taken out lately for small houses and cottages, to cost from $400 to $1,200. The report goes on: "There are a great many people who are getting little homes of their own, and every building permit for a cottage makes one less communist, for the man who owns a $1,000 house is just as much afraid of socialism and anarchy as the millionaire who lives in a mansion on the boulevard."

KING ALCOHOL AND THE DOCTORS.

BY REV. J. D. GEHRING.

To fight an enemy successfully we must know him. It is not enough to know that he is dangerous, unscrupulous and malicious; we know all that of the devil, and yet God's people would not thereby be enabled to combat him victoriously.

Many good but deluded Christian people—among them not a few D. D.'s and M. D.'s—believe that alcoholis a good thing in its place, and has a good place. In that they are "in one boat" with brewers, distillers and saloon-keepers, who are fighting to keep the children in our public schools from learning wherein the "good" in alcohol consists. But not only our children should learn all they can on this subject, but we, the parents, teachers or guardians should learn how to give an intelligent and comprehensive answer to the question—

WHAT IS ALCOHOL?

Proceeding to discuss this question, I say, emphatically, it is a deadly poison. As such it ranks third in the list of poisons. Now, let us see if we can prove this assertion. Taken in large doses and in undiluted form into the human stomach, it destroys life almost as surely as a dagger-thrust through the heart.

Alcohol is knowu to have great affinity to water, which is proved by the fact that it is composed of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen. This poison destroys the vital functions of the tissues by absorbing their constitutional moisture. The human body is composed of a large proportion of water. The whole machinery of physical life and health is largely dependent upon this fluid present in the body, just as a steam-power machine is dependent upon the necessary supply of water.

Now, let a man take at frequent intervals a small quantity of alcohol into his system, and the result will be thirst. Let him repeat the dose, and there will be more thirst. Lovers of alcohol, in its various dilutions and adulterations, make much sport at the expense of "cold-water fanatics," forgetting at the same time that no class of the human race is more in need of cold water than these devoted subjects of "King Alcohol;" for, when they get "on a drunk," what do they sober off on? Water. When they are kicked out of a "palace saloon" for beastly conduct and roll over a few times in the gutter, what is used to wash the blood from their bloated, disfigured faces, and the mire of a dirty street from their garments? Beer? No! Water.

Alcohol is a robber. It robs the poor victim of sense, decency, honor, self-respect, property, health, life and salvation. It dries up the tissues, impairs digestion, softens the liver, and deranges and impedes the circulation; it weakens the will, debases the conscience, and destroys the judgment.

"But a little does no harm, and is often beneficial," says Dr. Learnslow.

Are you quite sure of that, doctor? Let us investigate the matter a little. You must acknowledge, on scientific principles, that alcohol is a poison. You own that you would not dare to drink a quart of it at once. Now tell me, if you please, in what way is the nature of the poison changed when you drink that quart gradually and in diluted doses?

"Don't know!" Of course you don't; but you ought to know. Without this knowledge you are a dangerous man as a physician, and there ought to be a law to compel you either to acquire this knowledge or to get out of the ranks of your profession. Let me enlighten you just a trifle on this important subject.

You know that opium is a deadly poison. You wouldn't take a large dose of that drug for a fortune, for you are well aware that it would kill you. You would not use it in small doses, habitually, for you believe that it would injure your health and kill you eventually. The same is true, as you well know, of arsenic, stryehnine, and other dangerous poisons. But you are not ready to apply the same rule to the medical use of alcohol. You are unwilling to admit that if alcohol is a poison in large quantities, it is also a poison in small doses.

Now let me apply your opium and arsenic logic to the alcohol for you; and, as a man who understands physiology thoroughly, you will have to admit the truth and fairness of the application. Suppose you take a drink of whisky—"good old rye whisky"—in the morning to "tone up" the stomach; another before dinner to aid digestion; another in the afternoon to stimulate the flagging energies, and another as "a nightcap." As a professed temperance man (high license), you believe in the moderate use of "a pure article," and you retire at night with no less than five drinks, say one pint, of whisky in your system. Some of it is in your stomach, some in your blood, and not an insignificant part of it in your brain.

Very well; so you see you took, in one day, into your system 61 per cent of poison of the whole quantity drank! And, what is yet more astounding, you dare to claim that it does you no harm, because you are not sick, or crazy, or dead!

"But," says Dr. Learnslow further, "if the moderate use of alcohol is injurious to health, it must as a consequence shorten the duration of life; and that such is not the case is proven by the fact that many men who drink moderately all through life live to a good age and enjoy a remarkable degree of health."

Your argument proves nothing, doctor. Alcohol injures the body, and those injuries shorten life, as a rule. The extraordinary cases you mention are not denied, but they are exceptions to the rule. Your illustration reminds me of a remark I heard a few years ago from a physician of high standing for ability and intelligence. His father was then a very aged man—near eighty, I believe—but feeble in body and almost blind. The doctor argued very ably and pointedly against the use of tobacco, and claimed that it injured health and shortened life; to which the old man laughingly replied: "Take me for an example—have used tobacco ever since I was a boy." To this the doctor replied: "You don't know how much your chewing is to blame for your present condition and your suffering."

Now, doctor, if your father was a moderate drinker and lived eighty years, how about your mother? Did she also drink moderately and enjoy health and live a sweet, happy life up to four-score years? You shake your head, which means, "She didn't drink at all." And you are proud to say that of your mother. Why, then, do you so freely speak of the tippling habits of your father? If the moderate use was good for your father's health and did not at all injure his morals or his temper, would the same use have injured your mother? Why didn't she drink? And why do you not follow her example rather than that of your father? Did you ever know a woman to use alcoholic liquors as a beverage and live to a very old age? Did you ever know a woman to drink freely and often to excess, and live far beyond middle life? Did you ever know a man who became a hard drinker late in life to live to an advanced age? Did you ever know one who drank to excess habitually before the age of 25 years to live and thrive fifty years beyond that?

But I am not through yet with this examination, doctor.

Much depends upon the habits and pursuits of men, no less than upon their ancestry and physical constitutions. For example, a man who works with his brain and is confined indoors most of his time will feel and show the effects of alcoholic stimulation much sooner than the man who labors six days in the week and from ten to sixteen hours each day on his farm.

Again, the son of a moderate drinker will not have the same degree of physical vigor as his sire. The imperative law of nature and of nature's God, when violated, is sure to begin the penalty when the transgression begins, and to continue it, not only so long as disobedience is persisted in, but even to the third and fourth generation. This truth is clearly taught in the Decalogue, and abundantly established by individual and national experience.

But we will suppose that the son of such a father begins early in life to imitate his example, will he live as long as his father lived? No, for he does not possess the constitutional vigor of his father. Why not? Simply because he inherited from his father certain physical imperfections; and these same imperfections will be transmitted to his own posterity, who will have them in a two-fold or four-fold measure. The last scenes in these daily appearing tragedies of human life are seen in our well-filled prisons, poor-houses, and asylums for the insane.

"If the use of alcohol as a medicine is so dangerous to life and health, why do nearly all of the medical fraternity prescribe it? Some of them are noted for their ability, sound judgment, and success in practice. Such men as these do not only prescribe alcoholic stimulants when the conditions of a case seem to demand it, but they show their confidence in the efficacy of such stimulation by taking the prescription themselves occasionally."

If I were a "Yankee," Doctor Learnslow, I should answer your question by asking another—or two of them. But I am a "Dutchman," and shall have to give you Dutch logic in answering your question, as well as your statement:

There was a time, not very far back in the history of medical practice, when the "best doctors" believed in the efficacy of "bleeding," "blistering," "purging," etc. Now the best doctors only smile when we speak of these things, because they have "outgrown" such like follies. It is also a well known fact that some of the most eminent and successful physicians of to-day are emphatically opposed to the use of alcohol as a stimulant, unless when administered as other medicines are.

You are right, I am sorry to say, when you admit that nearly all of your profession prescribe alcohol; but I am not ready to say you are right when you claim that such a practice is therefore wise and good. On the other hand I am willing to allow you the full benefit of the last clause of your argument. It is only too true that many, very many, of our foremost physicians are in the habit of making this extraordinary exception to the standard rule: "A doctor never takes his own prescription," and use the favorite stimulant themselves—"moderately," of course. But, happily, there are two sides to this question, and I shall mention a few facts on "the other side:"

The army of the Potomac, in 1862, was subjected to great hardships, and exposed to the extremely wet and malarious regions of the Chickahoming. There was, consequently, much sickness and suffering, and the ranks of the army were thinned daily and rapidly, by deaths. Observing this and thinking thus to counteract the evil, the commanding general issued an order on the 19th of May allowing every soldier a gill of whisky each day; half of it in the morning and half in the evening. It was soon observed that the results of this extra-medical treatment were conspicuously injurious to the sanitary condition of the army, and the commanding general had sense and humanity enough to counter mand his order in thirty days from date of issue.

Concerning this experiment Dr. Frank Hamilton, one of the most eminent surgeons then serving in the army of the Potomac, says: "It is most earnestly desired that no such experiment will ever be repeated in the armies of the United States. In my own mind the conviction is fully established, by experience and observation, that the regular use of alcoholic stimulants by man in health, is never useful. I make no exceptions in favor of cold, or heat, or exposure and fatigue; nor in favor of old drinkers, when considered as soldiers."

Indeed, it would be easy to quote page after page of such testimony, and there could be produced volumes more, bearing on the same point, from army witnesses whose testimony would be equally true, though perhaps, less authoritative; all to show that the use of intoxicants in the army during the late war, was detrimental to the health, efficiency and morals of the soldiers. To such an extent, indeed, is this true that I do not fear the charge of "slander" for asserting that several important battles were lost, thousands of our best men sacrificed, and millions of money wasted just because of the unfitness of some prominent officer caused by the too free use of that famous malaria antidote—Whisky.

CHRIST'S LAW OF GIVING.

BY REV. ISAAC BANCROFT.

This, my second paper, will tell how to get funds for the support of the church of Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ is the head of the church. Now, I go to the Bible and search it through, and I can not find a single place where he has told us to resort to fairs or sociables, fish-ponds or grab-bags, or lotteries, or the putting up for public sale the virtues of our wives and daughters, and thus exposing them for an hour or more to the close and intimate social relation of the vilest and most licentious men in the community. These are none of them the ways Christ has ordained to obtain money to carry on his cause, but they are the devil's own ways. None need be deceived, for Christ has given us a very plain way, and easy and just; and if we follow this way we shall always have an overflowing treasury.

Now for God's way. In Lev. 27: 30-31-32 you have God's plan for raising funds. The very smallest amount that men were required, year by year, to pay into the treasury of God was one-tenth of all a man's income. Beside the tenth, men could give as much as they chose as a free-will offering to God. In Matt. 23: 23, Jesus tells the scribes and Pharisees that it was right for them or that they ought to pay tithes, and so of course he transferred by his own word and authority the old method of collecting money from the old dispensation to the new, so that it is now just as binding on us as on the Jews of old.

Now, as one-tenth is the least that anyone can pay into the treasury of God yearly, the greater limit is, "Go and sell all that ye have and give to the poor, and come and follow me;" and I thank God that some are obeying this command. Let all leaders and teachers practice these rules of Christ and teach all Christians to do the same, and they will not have to resort to any of the devil's methods, which are a shame and disgrace to nearly all the churches of the present day. God's methods never fail. When we work with God and adopt his ways we can never fail, for he has said that he will supply all our needs by Jesus Christ; so if we ever get out, let us ask him for more. He will not fail us.

TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION.

Providentially I spent a late Sabbath, March 13, 1886, in a little Illinois town named ———. Meeting Christian friends, and being desired to remain and preach, I did so with pleasure, and, I trust, with profit to those hearing. The village has about 1,000 people, and contains three churches, all of them weak and two of them without pastors. There are three lodges, the Masonic, the Odd-fellows and the Knights of Pythias, their aggregate membership being about 130. There are five licensed saloons, and for a number of years the question of prohibition has hardly been raised.

Opposite the home where I was entertained used to live a Mason, who had been saved (as was supposed,) from a life of dissipation by the Masonic lodge. Years ago it was one of the boasts of the lodgemen: "See what we have done for ——!" He introduced a mistress into his home, and finally his father-in-law sent for his wife to come home. She turned to her husband and said, "After all that has gone, if you want me to stay I will." He replied, "I don't care nothing about you." So she went home. He is now by his vices killing himself as fast as possible.

In this same village, years ago, a Good Templar lodge was started. A farmer's daughter became one of its members. There was also a young man who had been quite reckless at this time a member. They became attached to one another, and after a time were married. He relapsed into his old habits, deserted her and her children, and some time since died with delirium tremens. Another member of that same Good Templar lodge, also a dissipated man, married a lady member. He was a widower, with a number of children. She lost her health in caring for him and them. He then deserted her and secured a divorce without her knowledge. He is now married for the third time. She lives in this little village.

In another house, across the way, lives a man who is a Mason and an Odd-fellow. He is also drinking himself into the grave as fast as he can. These are a few facts gathered in one little village in one day. What must the sum total be? And how can we who are Christians sit down at our ease while so many thousands perish about us?

BOYCOTTING.

The methods of the Irish malcontents have been introduced into this country, and we have a new form of organized despotism and wrong. Orders go forth from a secret assembly calling upon all classes to refuse to patronize one who has given offense to some of the so-called labor organizations. Circulars are issued and are distributed far and near, bills are posted, and in some instances banners are paraded proclaiming a "boycott." All the "Knights" are expected to be obedient; all who look to that class for patronage are placed in the alternative to refuse to deal with the person named or lose their own trade. The grocer may not sell to him; the dry-goods merchant may not deal with him; the dairyman may not stop his cart at his door; the traveling salesman must pass him by. Under this new order of things, railroad employes may not handle the freight shipped from parties designated as offenders; engineers refuse to run their locomotives if some of the cars have such prohibited freight. The method is being adopted by dealers as well as "laborers," and combinations are formed against which outside, independent parties are powerless, and which extort from the people unreasonable prices. In some places, for example, if builders do not order the material from the combination they are excluded from the trade.

In many cases the method seems to be very effective. In some instances extensive dealers have compromised and bought their restoration to favor by the payment of large sums. Some hotels formerly much frequented by politicians are said to see these "friends of the people" no more. Some business men have been forced to suspend. In a few instances it has served as an advertisement, and has resulted favorably to the one whose injury was sought.

Of this method we can speak only with condemnation. It is as un-American as it is un-Christian. It is against every principle of honest, manly, independent living. It is a cruel despotism. It lowers the person engaged in it, for he becomes the servant of an arbitrary power, surrendering his own judgment and freedom to the will of others. It is a form of mob law, for it sets at defiance all the rights of the individual, and places him under a ban that may be as terrible as the papal anathema in the dark ages. It is a method full of danger to those using it, for it may be employed by all classes. If persevered in, it will be fatal to order and to our institutions, because it forms hostile combinations and arrays classes in bitter hostility. Under it the country is now suffering, with no prospect as yet of a better order of things.

It is because we are the friends of the wage-worker that we enter our protest against a method so fatal to the principles fundamental to civil order and the public good, and which may so easily lead to violent methods and make our country like Ireland during the reign of terror.

GOUGH'S FIRST TEMPERANCE ADDRESS.

It was in the old town hall, now the City Hall. It was Monday night, stormy and uninviting out of doors. In town meeting the gratuitous use of the town hall had been voted for temperance meetings, which were held regularly every Monday evening. These meetings were always largely attended. They were then the great events of public interest in the town of Worcester, and the use of the larger hall—the division then being the east and west town hall—was necessary for the accommodation of the crowds which usually gathered. The night Gough signed the pledge the storm was so severe that the meeting was being held in the east or smaller hall. On the opposite side of the street, at Harrington corner, had gathered a number who had many times found pleasure in Gough's singing and dancing. He found in a stranger a friend who led him into that meeting. He was known to all, for his life had been such as to make him a conspicuous character.

As he walked down the center aisle all eyes were turned upon him. How well many remember that pale, haggard face, the long, flowing, unkempt hair of raven blackness, which Gough nervously pushed back from his forehead as he entered the meeting. His coat was buttoned at the top only. A crowd of those who had laughed at his bacchanalian songs, his wonderful powers of mimicry and his grotesque dancing, had followed him into the meeting. As he nervously affixed his signature to the pledge a half-suppressed, sneering laugh was heard by those in the rear of the hall. Gough heard it also, and as he laid down the pen he turned suddenly upon those assembled with: "Why do you laugh? Am I not a man?" The meeting was silent in an instant, and then followed one of those impassioned temperance addresses which in after years made him foremost among the most effective workers of the temperance cause. In all his after life he never moved an audience more than in this, his first temperance address. Tears were brought to the eyes of all, and it was a sight never to be forgotten by those who witnessed the remarkable scene. His reformation was the work of years, and it was complete, although not until after he again yielded to temptation—Worcester Spy.

—The utterly demoralizing character of the traffic in intoxicating liquors was well illustrated the other day when a member of the German Parliament defended himself from the charge of sending poisonous brandy to the negroes of Africa, on the ground that he had never sent bad brandy to any of the German colonies but only to the French colonies. He admitted that to these latter districts he had shipped rum of the very worst quality. Cannot civilized nations to do something to put a stop to this crime against humanity? It calls for intervention as loudly as did the slave-trade years ago. We are glad to chronicle the fact that the delegates of German missionary societies, at a conference at Bremen, addressed a manifesto to the German people and also a memorial to the minister of foreign affairs, asking for restrictions upon the sale of spirituous liquors to native Africans. It would be a great advance if Christian nations should put a stop to the exportation of spirituous liquors to Africa.—Missionary Herald.

JOHN B. GOUGH AS ORATOR AND REFORMER.

JOSEPH COOK—PRELUDE TO 182ND LECTURE.

Two nations, now the foremost on the earth, mourn a fiery man of Kent. Humanity mourns; for this man had fire in his emotions, in his imagination, in his intellect, in his will, and in his conscience. He was himself a pillar of fire, through which God looked in the morning watch of a great reform, and troubled the hosts of its enemies and took off their chariot-wheels. He who has addressed more than eight million five hundred thousand hearers, he who has spoken to more than eight thousand five hundred audiences, and traveled more miles on his lecture-tours than would reach twenty times around the globe, lies at rest in his own library yonder at Hillside.

John Gough, as the English love to call him, and as he often called himself—John Bartholomew Gough is the full name—came into this world in the seaside town of Sandgate, in the county of Kent, August 22nd, 1817. This was two years after the battle of Waterloo, and two years before Queen Victoria was born. It was the year in which the Princess Charlotte died, and the year before the chief corner-stone of the capitol at Washington was laid. Dover Castle was only eight miles away; Skakespeare's cliff nearer. Canterbury, with its gorgeous cathedral, was only four hours' walk from the low-roofed cottage in which John Gough was born. He had a surly welcome to the shores of England. Poverty rocked his cradle, but genius also; for his mother was a woman of bright intellect and of most admirable balance of character. She had for twenty years been a school-teacher in the hamlet of Sandgate. His father was a stern, good man, who had brought six medals out of the Peninsula war.

The little boy and his sister, with the mother, were obliged to glean in the harvest fields, and were often glad to take home what few fallen heads of wheat they could find, and thrash them out on the floor of the school-house. Certain exploits in needle-work the mother performed. But she sometimes failed to find a market for her sewing; and once, coming back from a long walk to Dover, she took her son upon her knee and said to him that she could not buy bread, for she had failed to sell the work of her fingers. "To-day," said the boy, "a neighbor has given me five shillings for reading aloud in his library;" and he placed the coins in his mother's hand. To the end of his days this gift to his mother was one of the pleasantest recollections of a man whom, afterward, the two sides of the Atlantic were glad to honor. Often as the boy sat reading to his mother at their cottage-door, which faced the sea, strangers would pause to listen, attracted by his proficiency in this art.

William Wilberforce one day put his hand on the poor boy's head, asked to hear him read, and gave him a book and his blessing. The great philanthropist was spending a few weeks at the sea-side for his health. Mr. Gough, the father, attending the prayer meetings that were held in Wilberforce's rooms, brought with him his son. This touch of the great abolitionist's hand on his head the boy never forgot.

At twelve years of age, in 1829, the boy was sent out from his mother's house in a most venturesome way. He was put into the hands of a family emigrating to America. His passage was paid for. His mother came out and stood behind a wall to catch, unobserved, a last glimpse of her boy.

Entering the New York harbor, fifty-four days from the time of sailing, the lonely boy was anxious to see the land in which he was to live, but was sent below to black boots. He went to a farm in central New York, and after two years' experience, finding that he was not being sent to school either on week-days or Sundays, resolved to learn some other business than that of the farm. From his tenth year onward he was never in any school as a pupil. He sold his pocket-knife to pay postage on a letter to his father, and asked his permission to go to New York to learn a trade. The permission came, and the boy at last, when about fourtern years of age, obtained a position in New York as an assistant in a book-bindery, at $2.25 a week. He was obliged to pay $2 a week for his board. After a considerable period of suffering he earned $3 a week, and invited his mother and sister to come to him in this country. They hired two rooms, and were happy.

In a dull season in the winter the boy and his sister lost their positions. The familiar tale of the poor in periods of business depression has to be recited concerning these children and their mother. They went into a garret. They had no food or fuel on many days. The boy would go beyond the municipal boundaries, and beyond the suburbs, to pick up billets of wood at the side of the country roads, and would drag them back to his garret. His mother grew ill. One day, when there was absolutely nothing in the house that she could eat, he rushed out, pawned his coat, and bought a little meat and broth for his mother. When bread failed wholly, on another day, he went sobbing down the street, and a kind-hearted man asked him what was the matter. "I am hungry and my mother is hungry," said the boy. "Very well," said the stranger, "I can't do much, but I will do something." And he gave the boy a three-penny loaf. He took it to his mother, and before it was eaten the family Bible was placed on the rickety pine table, and thanks were offered to God for his deliverance.

The boy and girl lived through this winter. The mother hardly survived it. When the fierce suns of the next August beat on the low garret roof, the heat became intolerable. One day, preparing John's simple supper of rice and milk, she fell, by an apoplectic fit or paralytic stroke, much like that which occurred in the career of the son last week in Philadelphia. John sat all night by the side of his mother, holding her hand after her death. The sister could not stay in the garret. For three days after the death the boy and the girl did not taste food. The body was put into a simple pine coffin, without shroud, and carried on a cart to the Potter's Field. The two children walked behind, hand in hand.

Later evil companionship caused Mr. Gough, when about twenty years of age, to fall into habits of intemperance. He sunk with remarkable swiftness to delirium tremens. His temperament was intense, and he ran through the terrible gamut of nervous exhaustion with extreme rapidity. Lying on his couch, faces of demons appeared to glare at him out of the air. Great wheels of many-colored lights rolled before his eyes. He felt himself falling swiftly through infinite space. Standing at his table in the bindery, the little iron rod that he used in his trade seemed to be turning into a coiling, slimy serpent, writhing in his hand and rustling after he threw it down among the shavings.

After these horrors, what happened? You all know the story of Joel Stratton, who, in Worcester yonder, touched the despairing mechanic on his shoulder, told him he was a man, could yet reform if he would sign the pledge, and so brought to bear upon him personal solicitation and sympathy that he induced him to attend a temperance meeting and to sign the pledge. He broke it twice—once voluntarily, and once under influence of drugs administered by an enemy; but after 1845 he kept it.

Mary Whitcomb married John Gough before he had taken the pledge for the last and successful time, and when he owned only one suit of clothes and ten silver dollars. She knew there was genius in him and conscience, and her faith in her husband is a supreme proof that she herself possessed elevation of character and moral genius. How far they have walked together! And how long they will walk together yet, before the great white throne!

I have thrown this dark picture of John Gough's earlier career before you in order that I might thank God for overruling all this evil so as to educe from it abundant good. Without this baptism in the fires of poverty and of delirium tremens we should never have had the full force of his intense sympathy applied to the work of rescuing the drunkard from ruin. We never should have had in its full power his supreme and most contagious confidence that the most degraded man may be lifted out of the slums. We should never have had in him, even with all his genius as an orator, the inspired earnestness which is the key to all hearts.

As an orator, Mr. Gough can be compared to no one else. He was of his own kind, and of a most extraordinary kind. He was an orator and author combined, and was born both. Among his earliest playthings were a pulpit and a Punch and Judy box. They were among his latest. This combination of earnestness and humor, this intensity of feeling and vividness of imagination that might easily have led him into extravagances of opinion and action, had they not existed in combination with remarkable balance of judgment and character, this fire of emotion, will, conscience, epithet, metaphor, and gesture in both comedy and pathos, anecdote and argument, made him in his best hours on the platform a disciplined thunderbolt.

You say he digressed in his lines of argument; that he was full of anecdote and not so full of linked logic. Mr. Gough, when on the platform attacking intemperance and the liquor-traffic, always seemed to me like the matadore in a Spanish bull fight. His anecdotes were the flag held out before the beast; his tremendous facts, his definite propositions, were like the sword thrust into the side of the infuriated animal after it had been brought with in reach by the flag. And there was a spear at the end of the flag-staff; for his stories, like those of Lincoln, always meant something; and again and again the anecdotes of John Gough pierced the heart of the beast. The spear at the end of the flagstaff was quite as effective as the sword thrust that followed it.

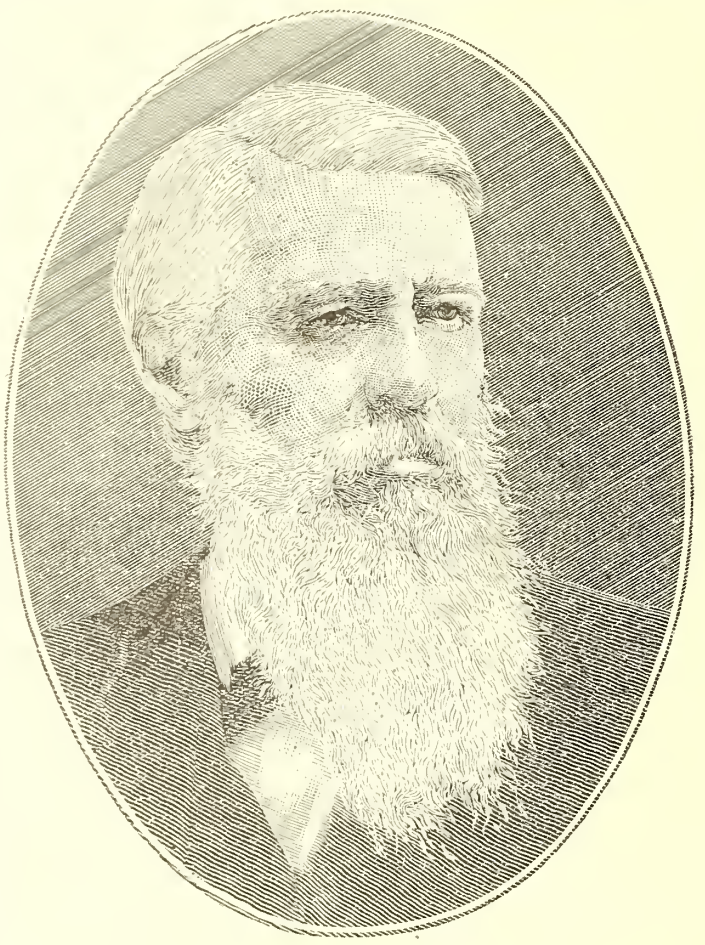
Finally he conquered all criticism, and in the last two of his visits to England received wholly unstinted honors from the most cultured classes. When he landed in Liverpool, in 1878, there was sent down to him a roll of one hundred thousand names of total abstainers in the British Islands. He was invited to the Westminster Abbey Gardens. Dean Stanley gave him a most distinguished reception. Fourteen thousand of the clergy of the Establishment are now enrolled in the cause of temperance. The bishops of Durham and Dover, and of Gloucester, and of Exeter, are on the side which was once so unpopular when Mr. Gough first championed it in his native land. He has had abundant opportunity in England to be spoiled by the adulation of his friends. But what balance he maintained to the last! How, to the very end of his career, did he remember the opening of it! What breadth of sympathy he had, reaching from the poorest of the poor, and the most degraded of the degraded, up to the loftiest of his friends. He knew very well the temptations of the higher portion of society; he knew the temptations of the lowest; and the breadth of this man's heart, the hight of it, the depth of it, are things not easily paralleled, if you look abroad into the list of those who have discussed truth before great assemblies in our time.



As a reformer, Mr. Gough has been the victorious champion of total abstinence, and the leader of moral and educational agitation against the liquor traffic. It ought never to be forgotten that he was the first prominent temperance orator to lift the reform he advocated from the level of a merely moral, to that of a distinctively religious movement. The Washingtonians, among whom he first labored, were not all friends of the churches. Undoubtedly there were faults in the attitude of some of the churches toward the reform; but Mr. Gough rarely criticised preachers, and often had his meetings opened with prayer. He was criticised for this; but his religious convictions were so powerfully expressed that he gradually passed out of the hands of infidels into those of Christians, and out of the school houses into churches. (See Dr. Lyman Abbott's Introduction to Mr. Gough's "Platform Echoes.") He was always a friend of vigorous temperance laws; but in the central portion of his career, moral suasion was his chief weapon. He was unceasing in his efforts to organize temperance societies and the church in such a way as to lift the inebriate from temptation.

Total abstinence is a closed issue. No intelligent man now dares, in the face of the record of life-assurance societies, recommend anything like moderate indulgence. I hold that this century has settled it that total abstinence is the only safe thing. Eighteen States of this Union are now teaching the children that total abstinence is required by the latest light of science. And the same number of States, also are giving instruction against all kinds of narcotics, and let the pulpit say, Amen!

Mr. Gough was opposed to every form of license, high or low. This is not a closed issue; for even the church seems willing to license the gilded saloon, although not yet—thank God!—willing to license its companion Siamese twin, the brothel. The other evening in Philadelphia, coming home from the Academy of Music, I saw the glaring windows of a whisky-hell, and above it were windows lighted far toward the sky. I asked a gentleman who walked with me, "What is up there?" He answered significantly, "You had better not ask." God helping me I am determined to the end of my life to refuse my consent to the licensing either of the brothel or the gilded saloon. Mr. Gough has often said he had rather be the worst seller of liquor that ever stood on two feet, than be the man to license its sale.

But what else marked this man as a reformer? You will not underrate his earnestness in support of laws for the instruction of youth in the facts of science concerning intemperance. You believe he was in earnest in using the wing of moral suasion to support temperance reform; but in his last years he became one of the most radical of the friends of political prohibition. I do not care to say here and now, over this open grave, anything that will offend prejudices—social, religious, or political. My mood is a peaceful one; but I should be unfaithful to the memory of this great hero if I were not to say that twice lately he has voted for what is called the third party in temperance politics. You may think he was wrong. I am not asking you to accept his opinion. I ask you to notice it; for it was a position taken after great deliberation, undoubtedly after the most fervent prayer, and it was in some respects in opposition to his previous inculcations. He had always been known as the champion of moral suasion. He had criticised the Maine law once, in a fair way, indeed, but in such a manner as to raise up against himself opponents among his friends. But within the last three years he became so convinced that the great cities of this country can never be ruled except by stern temperance legislation, he was so much moved by the fact that seventeen States have refused to allow the people to vote on constitutional prohibition, apart from every other issue, that he stood up squarely, boldly, unapologetically and unflinchingly for a reorganization of political parties in support of constitutional prohibition, both State and National.

Did this position make him bitter toward the friends of moral suasion? Not at all. Was he unwilling to recognize the merit of those reformers who cannot go quite so far as he went? By no means. His heart was too large, his honesty too profound, for him to be a temperance sectarian, defending one wing, and forgetting that the reform can fly only by equal vibrations of both vans, the legal wing and the moral wing, used together. Let his example shame us if we have been fighters for a feather in either of these wings. Over this grave let us put away our divisions, and let us become as broad as he, and remember that right wing and left wing and the body between them are a unit.

JOHN B. GOUGH.

What was the center of the temperance forces in John Gough's estimation? No doubt it was the church. John Gough's strength lay in the fact that he was a sincere, an intelligent, and a most admirably balanced Christian. This man could work well in evangelistic services. He was often of great assistance to the revered Dr. Kirk in revivals. Dr. Kirk was his pastor; and Boston ought to remember, with peculiar tenderness of feeling, the fact that to the end of his days Mr. Gough was a member of a church yonder on Beacon Hill. They who have lived nearest to Mr. Gough know that a family altar, with a peculiarly intense fire upon it, stood at the Hillside yonder. The secret of his strength was in divine grace. With such intensity of feeling as he possessed, with such temptations from imagination and emotion and a variety of unfortunate experiences in early life and afterward, he might easily have become a public mischief had not God caused him to be balanced by holding him in the palms of his hands. Let us recollect, therefore, that to John Gough the center of the temperance army was the church, the right wing the law, the left wing moral suasion; or, if you please to say, the left wing the law, and the right wing moral suasion. He was a broad man. He meant that the whole army should act as a unit; and he found it was none too strong, when employed as a single weapon, against the most terrific political and social danger of our time.

He says, in language which he published only on the 11th of February, "For two years I have voted with the third party, for I do believe in prohibiting and annihilating the liquor traffic. I deem it to be exceedingly important, also, to work for the creation of a public sentiment against the traffic, by education and information, by training and teaching the young." There is a safe platform. There you have both wings of the army brought into action. Let all fragmentists in the temperance reform take pattern from this broad man. Let the United States follow John Gough, and take hope that, as we have already seen the abolition of slavery, we may some day see the abolition of the liquor traffic. John Gough was an Abolitionist, and as early as 1846 told a mob to their faces, in Lynchburg, Va., that he was an Abolitionist, and he could not apologize for being so; that he could leave their town, but that they must vote to have him do so. They did not vote.

This man has given our own day and all future time an example not merely of breadth and courage, but of intensity and tenderness. His philanthropies were as countless and abundant as they were unostentatious. The central rule of his work was Christ's own method of going about from house to house doing good. How could he hold audiences ninety-nine nights in succession in Exeter Hall? Simply because he spent his days among the poor, and told at night what he had observed in the day. How could he wear so long? Only by keeping himself close to man's heart and to God's heart. Let England follow this man! Let the isles of the sea follow him! My conviction is that in his breadth of principle—and especially in his last positions concerning legal enactments in regard to the liquor traffic—he made himself one of the Pilgrim Fathers of the twentieth century, will be remembered with more honor in the next generation even than he possessed in this, and that therefore the youngest men here may take the hand of John Gough without fear of outgrowing him as a leader.

MICHIGAN NOTICE.

The annual convention of the Michigan Christian Association opposed to secret societies will meet at Eaton Rapids, April 13th, 1886, at 7 P M. This convention will be held in connection with the United Brethren Constitutional convention meeting at the same time and in the same place.

Bro. Stoddard has already written that he will come, and other prominent men in the cause will be present. Free entertainment for some, at least, if not all. Never was a more imperative demand for a good attendance. Eaton Rapids is located on Grand River valley, and Lansing branch of L S. & M. S. R. R's., between Grand Rapids and Jackson. H. A. Day.

A new party composed of the supporters of temperance legislation, has been formed by members of the British House of Commons. It is composed of 350 members, who have pledged themselves to the principle of local option.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Addresses at Ray, Indiana—The Saloon Curse of the place and its Abettors.

Train L. S. & M. S. R. R.,
March 30, 1886.

Last evening, at Clear Lake Baptist church, I completed a series of eleven addresses in and about Ray, Steuben county, Indiana. Rev. R. C. Wylie and the energetic and estimable mother of his two beautiful little girls were helpful in council and fearless in the fight, and to them and their people the cause is largely indebted for this series of successful meetings.

An "unpleasantness" grew out of the discussion after a two hours' talk I gave at Fremont, where "fraters" paid for the hall and made no reply when given an opportunity at the close. As Bro. Wylie and perhaps others may find time to report, I will leave the field for them, feeling grateful that their statements will be read by thirteen new subscribers to the Christian Cynosure obtained in that region. Bro. Wylie favors a conference of churches, and will do his full share in behalf of such a meeting.

Ray is not afflicted by the presence of a Masonic or Odd-fellows' lodge, though a few members of both orders have burrowed among their free inhabitants. These birds of ill-omen nest in the towns around, coming home to roost late at night, bringing "birds of their feather" with them. The only "curtained and tyled recess" in the place, so far as I could learn, is the den of one David Johns, who appeared on the scene about January 28th last to open a saloon and pool-room. Johns quickly (if not clandestinely and on the Sabbath,) secured the lease of a vacant store building from Mr. Harris and a dwelling house, and ere the good people were aware had the poisonous fangs of his business well fixed in the heart of the village. The Temperance Union and the W. C. T. U. of the town called special meetings, appointed committees, circulated protests for signatures, and importuned Harris and Johns, but all to no purpose. They consulted the law and waited on the license board, with results equally futile. Johns appeared on the scene with his consort and wares, and said he had "come to stay." The temperance people were justly indignant at the presence of this nefarious, soul-destroying business, but their ire waxed hottest when thinking of those men who professed temperance, yet had given shelter and comfort to Johns and his business by renting rooms for their accommodation.

This is bad enough, but the worst feature of the deplorable case is to come. Harris and Thompson have a store of general merchandise in Ray. Harris is aged and his hearing much impaired, and is supposed to be very largely influenced by his Odd-fellow partner, Thompson, in all business matters, so that the FIRM is morally responsible for furnishing Johns' shelter and for the business he is doing. Yet, with these facts unchallenged, there are men and women calling themselves Christians who patronize this firm; and like Pilate, who washed his hands and declared, "I am innocent of the blood of this just man," claim that they have no fellowship with the saloon business, or responsibility for the sorrow and poverty entailed upon the community by its presence. These parties, without whose voluntary consent, moral endorsement and legal sanction this business could never have obtained a shelter in the town, become partners in the crime and verily guilty with the worst and first offenders. They have less temptation than the men who receive blood-money for rents, and in any event are without excuse. They endorse and sanction Harris and Johns and their traffic in the souls of the innocent every time they patronize the principal, for whom the agent is simply a "willing tool." The Reformed Presbyterian church at Ray is observing this 20th day of March as a day of prayer and fasting for the removal of this great evil, and I hope to hear very soon of decisive results. J. P. STODDARD.

AMONG THE INDIANA QUAKERS.

Lectures at Van Buren.—The Friends church at Marion closed.—The sad Reason.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After leaving Fairfield I went to Van Buren. Here I lectured twice, showing that Freemasonry, while professing to free men from sin and fit them for heaven, is really organized infidelity; and therefore a Satanic conspiracy to dethrone Christ and subvert Christianity. Not a word was spoken, in my presence, in defence of this modern "Mother of Harlots." But one friend of the lodge meekly suggested to a friend of Christ, before coming in to hear the second lecture, that Freemasonry was, at least, a very charitable institution. But this effort to cover the infidelity of Freemasonry with its works of charity was promptly met by this Christian Anti-mason, and the fig-leaf covering was torn off, exposing the hideous nakedness of the crime against God in seeking to dethrone his Christ.

Leaving Van Buren I returned to Marion, hoping that the effort that had been made by some of the Friends to get their meeting house for a course of lectures had been successful, and that meetings had been announced. But I was grieved to find that the Friends meeting house in Marion could not be had for the purpose of defending Christ and the Christian religion, against the subtle effort of Satan to dethrone the one and subvert the other, through the agency of the secret lodge system.

Last winter there were seventy or eighty new members received into the Friends church of Marion. Among these, it is said, were some members of the Freemasons and Odd-fellow fraternities.

The committee that was appointed by the church to examine candidates for membership, should have required these lodge men to renounce the covenant by which they were yoked with unbelievers in these carnal brotherhoods; but they failed to do this duty, and these men, who were still yoked with unbelievers in the lodge, were received to membership in the church.

The word of God to those in the lodge, is, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate; touch not the unclean thing and I will recieve you." But the Friends church of Marion, ignoring the Word of God, received them to their communion without requiring them to renounce the covenants by which they were bound to those infidel societies, known as Freemasons and Odd-fellows.

When an individual, or a church, departs a single step from the faith, unless that error is quickly confessed and forsaken it will lead to other errors. Instance the case of the Friends church in Marion. When they had made disciples of Freemasons and Odd-fellows they should have taught the apostolic command, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." They should have taught them their duty to come out from their lodge associations, and separate themselves to Christ; and when they were satisfied that they did so, thoroughly renounce their Masonic or Odd-fellow's covenants as not to hold themselves bound in a single point; then, when they were so completely separated from the lodge to Christ as not to touch the unclean thing; they could safely have recieved them into the bosom of the church.

But the command of Christ, when disciples are made, to teach them to observe all things that he has comanded, was not obeyed; and Masons and Odd-fellows who had professed faith were received into the church untaught upon this vital point of separation to Christ. This was the first wrong step of the Friends church of Marion.

Having received them, the duty to teach them the commands of God was, if possible, more binding than before. But when I came and offered to show them that the worship of Masonry and Odd-fellowship is Christless, and therefore false; and that the Christless prayers of the lodge are as really offered to devils as the Gentile sacrifices were; and that we can not continue to worship devils and be accepted in Christ as worshipers of God; my offer to assist the church in teaching these converts that were in such imminent danger of being destroyed for lack of knowledge was not accepted. They had received these lodgemen into the church without testing them to see whether they were really converted to Christ, and now they were afraid to have them taught for fear they would refuse to receive and walk in the truth, and so disturb the peace of the church.

Manifestly this wisdom is not from above; if it was, the Divine order, first pure and then peaceable, would be observed.

Your companion in the tribulation and patience of Jesus, C. F. HAWLEY.

ANOTHER GOOD REPORT FROM OHIO.

The Mennonites of Georgetown and Odd-fellows at Gettysburg and West Milton Help on the Cause.—An ancient Quaker meeting house.

PLEASANT HILL, April 1st, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My report for this week is as follows: On Friday eveuing I spoke to a good audience in the Mennonite church at Georgetown, between one and two hundred being present. A desire to hear further about this matter was expressed by many. I heard of several debates that followed. One gentleman sent for an exposition of Odd-fellowship.

Going on Saturday with Bro. Lambert to Gettysburg, we succeeded in engaging a large church, known as Beech church, for Monday evening. A largely attended funeral on Sabbath afforded an excellent opportunity to give notice. Bro. Lambert announced that I would speak on secrecy, but did not state which side of the question I would take. There are a great many Masons and Odd-fellows in this section. They came out en masse, evidently expecting to hear a glorification of their orders. The Lord helped me wonderfully in holdiug up their institutions and viewing them in the light of God's Word and common sense. Although I spoke for more than two hours, the most iutense iuterest was manifested all the way through. When I gave an opportunity for remarks, a zealous young Odd-fellow arose and stated that I had misrepresented their charity; that I did not read from their constitution the benefits they proposed to give. I did so at once and showed (as I have not the space to do here,) that their pretended charity was only a delusion and snare to extract from the subordinate lodges money to run the Grand Lodges and the grand humbugs that had got them up. Grand Secretary Rose receives $1,500 for just keeping the books. When the meeting closed the church seemed more like a bechive than anything else. Some were discussing in an excited manner, others laughing and shaking hands. One lady eame to me, with tears in her eyes, and said, "God bless you! I know what you said is true. My husband is a Mason. He goes away and stays until after midnight at the lodge, and will not tell me what they do there." A Mr. Parsons, postmaster at Red River, testified that I had exposed the lodge correctly, as he had been a member.

On Tuesday evening I addressed a number of Friend Quakers, who assembled in what is known as the West Branch meeting-house, near West Milton. This church was built in 1818. There is a partition running through the center, dividing it in two parts—one for the women and the other for the men, after the style of Henry Ward Beecher's vision of hell. The Friends all worship now in one part. Some three or four Odd-fellows were present. I was requested to give a description of the process of their initiation. I did so, commencing with the blind-folding of the candidate; proceeded with the chain around his body; took him, by the assistance of the two stewards, to the center of the lodge-room; had him looking at the skeleton in the coffin, the members trying to scare him, etc.; until I came to the officer with the false-face who represented himself as

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PLEA FOR CANADA.

RIDGEWAY, Ont.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. J. P. Stoddard and others remember, that at the unveiling of the Morgan monument, I made a strong plea for the N. C. A. to begin systematic work against the lodge in Canada. Since that time I have noticed through the Cynosure many in this country coming out and lecturing, preaching and working against the lodge, as it were, single-handed and alone; for example, Rev. S. V. Irvine in Cynosure of March 11th; also the Presbyterian church being considerably stirred on the subject, the Principal of Knox College, Toronto, leading off. Judging from the able and pointed speech delivered in our parliment a year ago against secret societies, by the Hon. Edward Blake, there is no doubt he would be with us in the movement; and also his wife, she being one of a committee from Toronto who attended Mr. Moody's convention in Buffalo, intending to invite him to visit Toronto. Moody called for questions. I wrote out this, "Should the young convert be directed to immediately sever all connection with secret lodges?" which he answered plainly and pointedly in the affirmative. Notwithstauding this, Mrs. Blake urged on him to visit Toronto, which he did.

Besides this, there are three or four anti-secret religious denominations scattered here and there through the country. I believe it hard to tell the amount of anti-lodge element here. I went into a neighborhood some three years ago; the people there were mostly Baptists; and they had discharged their preacher because he was a Mason. They would neither hear nor pay him, and I found that the whole work was done by an old man who had got a hold of some copies of the Cynosure, and a few tracts. Since that I can never give away a Cynosure without praying God's blessing to go with it.

With such encouragements it is a great mistake and almost criminal neglect to go any further, without some system of work. This should be effected by the N. C. A. As the Cynosure is circulated to some extent here, an organization could be effected in that way more easily, speedily and satisfactorily than in any other. Supposing we get up an independent organization; it would not be as well, for we would require an organ to run it successfully. I claim that it would be better to make a real success of one paper than to have two.

When I talked with the General Agent at Batavia, nearly four years ago, the greatest difficulty seemed to be to find a proper man. Well I say like this, if such a man has not by this time turned up, why and then we will all ask Jesus Christ to raise us up just the kind of a man that is needed to lead on this great work in this country; and he will do it, if we go to work with right motives. Another thing the General Agent made reference to was the support of such a man, he concluded they would help. This could not be exactly told until a trial is made. One great difficulty is, we have so many different religious denominations, consequently so many preachers to support, that it takes about every dollar that the religious people can make to keep them up. They are not willing to turn their hand to earn a dollar or save one by cutting even their own stove wood; and when they come to your table—"No, thank you, I dare not eat that, it has shortning; I am troubled with indigestion," Thus they die off with dyspepsia. They claim to keep God's law, at the same time violate all the laws of nature. The late sheriff of Welland county, though worth his thousands, would go out and work every morning before going to his office, and he was as robust as a butcher. All I have to say is, may God have mercy on any man who won't work enough to keep his nerves from all drying up.

Now let this salary question be as it may; it should not prevent organization. Here are several men, some preaching and others lecturing against the lodge. We are fifty, one hundred and two hundred miles apart. Arangements could be made, and visits exchanged, profitable meetings held, tracts distributed, subscriptions to the Cynosure obtained, etc. In this way the anti-secrecy churches could have such meetings held at each appointment. To my mind an anti-lodge church will not prosper any length of time without giving the people a thorough knowledge of the workings of the lodge. This is one of the first things to be done in opening out a new appointment.

The great difficulty lies right here: In all these churches upholding the lodge there are always secret society men enough to influence those who are Christians and daub them over with lodge slime, thus capturing their influence and arraying it against the "anti" churches. Thus one of the best men in Ridgeway a short time ago said, "I don't belong to any lodge, but I believe the Odd-fellows are a good society." Now take that same man, give him proper instruction, and I know he could not be hired to make that expression.

The fact is, an "anti" church must either inform its people on this subject or die. A few years ago one of our "anti" churches sent a young man on a circuit. He got there at a critical time, for the church was just breathing its last. He went to work. The first thing he did was to send for a number of different kinds of anti-lodge tracts. He then took one of each kind, forming small packages, and put a package into every family all over his circuit. He also had the Elder to lecture at two different points. He himself would occasionally preach pointedly against the lodge, and with such seriousness that every one hearing him would conclude that secret societies were of the devil. The result was he took in forty-four members. The former preachers received from eighty to one hundred dollars per year. He received six hundred dollars for two years; and that work to this day, so far as I can learn, has been gaining ground, while the other circuits have been going down.

Another plan of informing the people on this subject, I am confident, would work well—that is, if we could have the pictures in "Freemasonry Illustrated" and in "Odd-fellowship Illustrated" printed large, say two feet in length, so as to hang them up on the wall, near a lamp. By exhibiting one each evening, then reading from those books and from Finney, and explaining; continuing this for weeks, and in this way a whole community could be completely sickened of lodgeism. I claim that, besides other advantages gained by organization, these churches would be stimulated and encouraged instead of keeping their reform principles around behind the back door. They would be induced to bring them to the front. Then Jesus can bless them. I have never seen Jesus Christ help a coward to any great extent.

If we could not at present support a regular lecturer, by pursuing this course we very soon can do it. Then open out battle on the towns and cities. Organization would cause unity of action, also of sentiment.

A few years ago I noticed in the Cynosure a number of Masonic renunciations. All claimed that a man can not be a Christian and be in the lodge. I thought it would forever set in the background that miserable expression we so frequently hear that "a man can be a Mason and yet be a good man." I hope A. C. Moffatt's article in the Cynosure of March 4th will settle the matter and forever do away with the expression. He speaks my sentiments, and no man can refute his statements any more than he can refute the fact that twice two makes four. Some say you must give Masons a chance to find out that it is wrong. Why, if a man was a fool or an idiot he might not know that it did not correspond with the teachings of the Bible. But such they will not take into the lodge. J. A. Learn.

BROTHER MICHAEL'S PLAN.

Walla, Wash. Ter.

Editor Cynosure:—In your issue of March the 11th, Rev. J. T. Michael, South Oil City, Pa., proposes to the lovers of righteousness in the Methodist Episcopal church a plan for bringing on a crisis, which he explains to be a rupture, between Masonic and non-Masonic members of that church. Such a crisis as this would be equivalent to dismemberment and abandonment of church organization entirely.

1. If such a crisis was desirable—if the ends obtained would justify the calamity to the church, nevertheless the plan proposed is clearly impracticable, and therefore unwise and to be firmly rejected.

2. Such a crisis is not desirable because it is unnecessary in order to reach the end proposed, which is the separation of church members from affiliation with secret societies.

3. The brother makes an unhappy thrust at the only adequate power in this work of reformation, viz., at "holiness." I submit, without fighting secrecy, let us urge entire sanctification as a distinct work of grace in the soul of the believer. Let us keep up and multiply "holiness camp meetings" and "holiness conventions." Let us continue to circulate "tons of holiness literature." The leaven is at work; hundreds who have been to the fountain for cleansing in His blood have visited the lodge-room for the last time. There is such incongruity, such absolute dissimilarity in the companionship of holy men and women and that of any promiscuous gathering, and especially the intimate commingling of all classes in the lodge-room, that any one in the enjoyment of heart purity would find a positive disrelish for it. This plan, I respectfully submit, is practicable; it will not disintegrate a great and eminently useful church, but will quietly and certainly pass the entire body over into and under the control of holy hands.

Furthermore, the carnal weapons with which Bro. Michael proposes to fight this battle of secrecy are too dull. However we may look at it, it would be straining a point exceedingly to allow that membership in any of these orders is an offense against either the doctrine or discipline of the Methodist Episcopal church. Neither the quotation from Bishop Simpson's Yale lectures nor the definition of Masonry as quoted from the cyclopedia are settled as standards of appeal. The truth of the matter is the good brother is off; he has such an unqualified hatred to secrecy that his feelings have gotten the better of his judgment. He is traveling along the line near to which is the wildest fanaticism. Come, my brother, right up again. Let us not run into the enemy's ambush for the sake of bringing on a crisis, but let us not abate one iota the war of ideas until the right shall triumph.

Yours in Christ, D. G. Strong.

ANOTHER VIEW.

Morrison, Ill.

Dear Cynosure:—In reading the article of Rev. J. T. Michael in Cynosure of Mar. 17, and his proposition for purifying the M. E. church from lodgery, I think he has got a big job on his hands. It puts me in mind of a Scotch Presbyterian church sixty years ago when it was fashionable to drink, and if a man got pretty drunk not much was thought of it, even though he was a church member. This church was located near where I was born, on the west side of Lake Champlain. They undertook to discipline their deacons and members for getting drunk. After meeting and discussing the evils of intemperence and its consequences on the church, Deacon Gurley arose and addressed his brethren as follows: "Brethren, I think we had better stop and reflect a little before we take any action on Deacon Burnet's case, for getting a little tipsy. I don't see where we can stop. For Deacon Patterson, Deacon Cummings and Deacon Hutton and many of our members, and our beloved pastor himself, get a little tipsy sometimes, and if we turn them out of the church we shall have no church left. I think we had better reform and save the church from this disgrace."

I will leave it with Bro. Michael to make the application. Orin Sholes.

HOME AGAIN.

Bro. Dissette reached Sabetha, Kansas, with his family on the 20th ult. He found his property in ill-repair and much damaged, but was glad it was no worse. Of his reception by his Masonic neighbors he writes:

"Everybody seems glad to see us, and even the Masons assure me that they are glad to see me back. 'Though we never expected to see you again, I have read of you in the Kankakee papers and in the Champaign papers, but they did not give your initials right. O yes! I've kept track of you.' The above fell from the lips of the Past Master of the Sabetha lodge.

"'Well, I've returned with my mouth open, if that is any comfort for you gentlemen,' I said.

"'Yes, it is,' they responded. 'It's as good an advertisement as we want.'

"'Then you can afford to pass the hat and raise a contribution for me; for if opposition is what you seek you shall be accommodated, I assure you,' I replied.

"'No,' said they, 'we don't propose to pay for it, though we'll initiate all you turn to the lodge by your opposition.'

"At first sight, it appeared strange that these men should so silently watch my course during the year and give me such an enthusiastic welcome on my return; but when I reflect that they know that for the sake of 'the truth as it is in Jesus' I was contending, and that they, as no other set of men, know that it was an honest fight, the singularity disappears. G. T. Dissette."

THE "UNITED BRETHREN COMMISSION."

Twin Brooks, Dak.

Perhaps Bro. C. J. Kephart does not read the Conservator, and being a reader of the Cynosure, he may grasp these questions given below (as copied from the Conservator,) and attempt to digest them. We think the questions are fair ones, and their discussion may do good.

1. Can a General Conference, elected under and by the provisions of a constitution, declare that constitution invalid without invalidating its own election?

2. Can a legislative body appoint a committee ("commission") to perpetuate its powers beyond the expiration of its (legislative body) term of office?

3. Can a committee appointed by a legislative body order a lawful election in church or state?

4. Is a constitution ever advisory? (Perhaps some one may refer to the new U. B. constitution (?) here.)

Some of the statements made on the question now agitating the church of the United Brethren in Christ are important to others than those holding church relation in this branch of our Lord's Zion. All persons who are opposed to the secret lodge (except, perhaps, Bishop Weaver and a few others who are very liberal anti-secretists) are earnestly longing and praying for the day when law and light shall have triumphed in the U. B. church. No amount of argument or assertion will be accepted by those anxiously contending for the retention of the "ancient landmarks" which separate the U. B. church from the world, especially while the arguments and assertions are made by men who declare themselves to be opposed to secret lodgism and at the same time endeavor to have all the "orders" obtain a "pass" into the church. Well may we exclaim, "Consistency, thou art a jewel!" C. E. Walker,
(U. B. pastor).

PITH AND POINT.

MOODY IS RIGHT.

Our church (United Presbyterian) is dead-set against the lodge. Moody is right when he says that the California churches are all mixed up with the lodges. We hope to bear an unequivocal testimony on the subject, by the help of the Lord.—J. M. Hervey, Los Angeles, Cal. Pastor First United M. P. Church.

GLAD TO HEAR OF THE SEVEN THOUSAND.

I was holding a meeting at Carthage, Mo., where I had been for two weeks. Mr. J. K. Glassford attended the last night. He had been absent in California and had just returned. He gave me two copies of your valuable paper, also one copy of the American. He said no doubt you would be glad to hear from me. I supposed I was the first Freemason in the world that had dared expose Freemasonry, excepting William Morgan; but I find I am away behind the times. I find by reading your paper that God has a "resolute few who dare to go through" I extend the right hand of fellowship.—Isaac Pennington, Medoc, Mo.

NOT AN IMPARTIAL ADVOCATE.

I can't tell you how my soul drinks in the sentiments of your excellent paper, and no paper I read with more delight. The Christian Advocate has been my ideal of a paper, and would be now if it were not a slave to the lodge. It is completely muzzled by it, and dare not say the word "Anti-masonry." I have been a subscriber to the Advocate for more than fifty years, and yet I can not have a small space for the following among their questions: "Is it right for a minister to advertise himself as a Freemason on the first Sabbath of his appointment in the pulpit, or make Masonic signs in the pulpit?" which the Rev. G. L. Thompson did do. Even that was forbidden me. I have written the editor some plain and pointed letters about our bishops and ministers upholding these secret dens of iniquity.—I. J. Gilbert, Derby, Conn.

A YOUNG JOSIAH.

A lady was putting two little girls to bed one evening. Their little brother was in the room, waiting his turn. He is eight years old, and the lady had never spoken to him on the subject, though she is a strong Anti-mason. Looking at a large picture on the wall of the Lord's Prayer, with Odd-fellow signs, he said: "Auntie, don't you think it's awful foolish to have all those pictures mixed up with that prayer?"

"Yes, dear," said she, "and that skull and cross bones at the end is horrid."

"Well," said he, "I think it's not only foolish, but wicked, and I should think Edith would be ashamed to have it in her room. I am sure I never will have it in mine. I should like to smash it right up."—E. M. J. Arlington Heights, Mass.

OBITUARY.

ANOTHER GOOD MAN GONE TO HIS REST.

Jacob D. Bell, known through New York, Pennsylvania, New England and portions of Canada as a preacher among the "Friends" or orthodox "Quakers," was a strong Abolitionist, and as strong a prohibitionist and anti-secret society man. He died at his home on Spencer street, Rochester, N. Y., the 4th of March, 1886, of Bright's disease. He was over 75 years of age, yet smart and active, and continuing to preach occasionally up to within a short time of his departure. He highly prized the Cynosure and read its pages with great interest, and was in deep sympathy with the righteous cause it advocates. He was a quiet, unassuming, yet a noble and generous-hearted man, and had many friends; but I never knew of his having an enemy. Even those who widely differed from him greatly respected him, so sincere and candid was he, and so mildly and pleasantly did he present his views, and so genial and warm-hearted was he in all his intercourse with his fellow-men. He was a man of rare qualities of head and heart, and he will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Though a Quaker, Shakespeare's estimate of "he that hath no music in himself and is not moved at concord of sweet sounds" being "fit for treason, strategisms and spoils," did not apply to him. He was passionately fond of the "concord of sweet sounds." He kept a piano in his home, and took intense delight in song service, and especially of a sentimental, religious and reformatory character, and greatly enjoyed the music of his daughters, who, though brought up in the society of "Friends," had come to be fine musicians. The writer was for many years a near neighbor, and has enjoyed many happy hours with the goodly and kindly "Uncle Jacob." He leaves a brother, an older sister, a widow, one son, and four daughters, having buried a very promising son last August. Many "pilgrims" can testify to the generous and warm-hearted hospitality of that quiet and lovely, but now shaded home. But this dear family and their many friends, and all who knew Jacob D. Bell, have great consolation in the unsullied reputation he left behind him, and in the blessed thought that "they sorrow not as those who have no hope!" He died in the "full assurance" of Christ Jesus."

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, yea, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

"Heaven whispers, 'Dry thy tears,
The pure in heart shall meet again.'"

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.

5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.

7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.

8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.

9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.

10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.

11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

The Christian Cynosure.

Editors.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1886.

A United Convention.—Rev. H. A. Day, actuary of the Michigan State Christian Association, writes Secretary Stoddard that a double convention will be held at Eaton Rapids, Mich., April 13, 14 and 15. The State Association uniting with a local United Brethren Convention, under direction of Rev. Wm. Dillon of the Conservator, Dayton, Ohio. This will be a rare and beautiful occasion. Let prayer unceasing ascend, and let all who can come. The baptized worldlings and friends of the lodge in the U. B. church may yet be disappointed in their hope to clutch the church property and drive off the followers of Christ. Secretary Stoddard and the senior editor of the Cynosure are invited and expect to attend.

Satan's Agency blending with God's.—"I saw the Lord sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left. And the Lord said, Who shall persuade Ahab that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-Gilead? And there came forth a spirit and stood before the Lord and said, I will persuade him. . . . I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all the prophets."—1 Kings 22.

Darkness dogs light. Evil is the silent partner with good, as shadow follows the sun. These things are natural, and so do not surprise us. But when Micaiah tells us that Satan blends his counsel with that of "The host of heaven," to inflict the sentence of justice passed on an uxorious and murderous monarch, we muse whether Satan can befriend the purposes of God. But this is what we witness every day. Evil men to escape self-loathing, bleuding their counsels with the good. Satan, to gain homage, even proposes alliance with Christ.

A RELIGIOUS PHENOMENON.

"The Devil Helps those Revivals which Help the Lodge."

The above remark was made in the Theological Seminary, Dayton, and some excellent men were staggered by it and said, "How is it? Do the devil and the Holy Ghost work together in revivals?"

Answer.—There was a revival at Phillippi under the preaching of Paul and Silas (see Acts 16: 12-18), where Lydia and others were converted to Christ. "A damsel, possessed with a spirit of divination," followed those preachers "many days," and declared them "servants of God showing the way of salvation," thus giving her credit with the multitude, who paid "much gain" for her soothsayings to help on the revival, in all which she was sincere, doubtless, as Mason-Christians. This would mingle the worship of the devil with that of Christ. The multitude believed her supernatural power, or they would not have paid their money so freely. "Paul turned and said to the spirit, 'I command thee, in the name of Jesus Christ, to come out of her.' And he came out the same hour." In this case, the devil in that girl helped on the revival, because, while his own worship was mixed with Christ's, the revival would help soothsaying devil-worship.

What led to the above remark was this: The Summit Street [United Brethren] church in Dayton had, years since, separated itself, with much labor and trouble from secret or Satan worships. In a late revival, certain Oddfellows and Knights of Labor, like that Philippian damsel, "believed," doubtless sincere as she was, and gave their testimony, as she did, to the work of God. But they hesitated to join the church lest they must leave their lodges, till certain leading brethren urged them to join without insisting that they quit their night-worships with masques, skeletons, hoodwinks, chains, etc., etc. And now several young men assure us that the Brethren church in Summit street has changed from what it was, and that it is no longer opposed to secret societies! One, a fine young man, who joined this church two weeks ago, told the writer he expected to join the "Knights" in two weeks, of course, to swear obedience to unknown superiors: to strike when ordered to do so: and, when they quit work, to assail and murder any who should take their jobs or places, as the Knights have been doing, or attempting to do, for these years. Of course, the devils can have no objection to such a revival as that, which mixes Satan's worshipers with Christ's at its communion; and yet that revival is quoted as a pure work of grace. Multitudes of Bible-proofs can be given that "the devil helps those revivals which help the lodge!" This revival is cited to prove lodges harmless.

THE BEST CORRUPTS TO WORST.

Cases:—1. It is the glory of this age and nation that woman is getting her proper recognition and rights. This is "the best." This is corrupted into the worst by Mrs. Stanton, who teaches that, in the United States, women are slaves; that men hate and oppress them; and that the Bible is woman's worst enemy; each of which is false.

2. Free, open, God-fearing labor unions are good, and necessary to protect laborers against corrupt combinations and corporations of capitalists. Swor to "secrecy" and "obedience," they become tools of secret tyrants who never labor, but swindle and plot, and betray the laborer when their price is offered by the corporations which they profess to oppose.

3. The oath is state-worship; and the highest worship. (See Isa. 45: 23.) God will have all nations swear "to" him, or "by his name." Deut. 6: 13; and 10: 20. All human administrations rest on that oath, and binds men to a rewarding and avenging Deity, who will "by no means clear the guilty." To invent and impose other oaths; as to swear fealty to a clan, or obedience to an "order," insults God and takes its bottom out of the state, for the state rests on the court and the court on the oath. Thus, "The best thing spoiled becomes the worst;" as a human corpse breeds more pestilence than the carcass of a sheep, because it is of finer and better mold. A Masonic, "Knight of Labor," or other lodge oath, is counterfeit religion and civil treason.

JOHN B. GOUGH'S GOOD TEMPLARISM.

John B. Gough at his Massachusetts home said to the writer:—"I was once persuaded to be initiated in a Good Templar's Lodge, put on its regalia, and ride in a procession. While in that carriage I looked down on my horse collar and toggery, and I stripped the stuff off in disgust and rammed it under the carriage seat; and I have never worn it from that day to this."

Now that he is dead John B. Finch calls on Good Templar lodges to wear mourning for him for thirty days as a Good Templar!

Mr. Finch's zeal for secret societies can scarcely have left him ignorant that Mr. Gough disapproved of them; and if not ignorant he must be guilty of "making a lie" which excludes from heaven. Mr. Gough's statement concerning Good Templarism was made to the writer in the presence of another gentleman.

THE SONS OF TEMPERANCE.

We have received from J. A. Conant, Esq., a printed circular scattered over Connecticut to revive the nearly defunct order of The Sons of Temperance.

The circular is a fraud on its face. It consists of extracts from old letters from clergyman who may have changed their minds, and the extracts are without dates; and some of the writers are dead. Rev. Theodore Cuyler, one of the living authors quoted, is, or was, a member of three secret orders, one of which is doubtless the Masonic lodge.

When the Sons of Temperance was organized it came in as "Divisions" local and general. It spurned the name of an order and the idea of having "degrees;" but soon adopted both. Forty years ago, when "The Sons" were invented, Masonry was loathed and detested. The secret division lifted the lodge back into favor and then, itself, sunk out of sight as a puerile weak tool which had served its evil purpose of making worse orders popular, and now Mr. G. L. Sanford of New Haven appears as the propagandist of this worn-out contemner of the example of Christ, who practiced no secrets but forbade them. Will Mr. Conant, at once, ascertain and send us word whether this G. L. Sanford is a Freemason. Please give us his record and status.

THE INTERDENOMINATIONAL CHURCH CONGRESS.

What is become of it? It is as leaven hid in meal, working. Hon. Halleck Floyd has given the best conception of it, viz., to bring out and bring together the real opposition against the lodge now lying latent in the breasts of leading men. Dr. Davis has little hope of such men, who see the evil of the lodge as the hireling sees the wolf, but shrink from opposing it. But Floyd thinks the effort to bring out such men worth making.

An ecclesiastical convention, composed of delegates from the anti-secret churches, would give the lodges no alarm. They will say, "Oh, those are only Covenanters, Quakers, Wesleyans, etc., etc. But if the fact can be made to appear that American Christianity is against the lodge, that will move them; and such is the fact. If all the churches could be polled, the majority against the lodges would be absolutely overwhelming. And the churches will be polled as soon as the press is open to the discussion, and that is approaching every hour. Besides the colleges for colored people in the South, two theological Seminaries in Ohio have lately opened their doors to this discussion, and others are opening; and the average American press which has long been sealed to articles against secretism is opening also. The Ohio State Journal, the Memphis Appeal and the Washington National Republican, all large, influential dailies in political centres, have published the strongest possible utterances and articles against the national pests. Joseph Cook has repeatedly condemned the secret system in his world-read lectures, and if a few men like Dr. John Hall in New York can be induced to throw themselves into a National Congress of Churches, every newspaper would enter into the discussion for fear of being left behind. One of two things can be done: 1. Let the able and excellent men who have already been appointed committees for the purpose, agree to come together, call an interdenominational congress of churches; fix on place and programme for an early date next fall; or, 2. Make still further efforts to induce prominent Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians and others to join us in such a national gathering. Messrs. Floyd, Davis and McNew who were appointed at Hartsville, Ia., will lead off in this matter; the Cynosure will be represented, and sustain any measures they may inaugurate, and if Prof. Bailey of the American, Travis of the Free Methodist, Wardner of the Wesleyan, Warrington of the Free Press, with the United and Reformed Presbyterian papers shall think an Eastern tour in the interest of this congress advisable, the senior editor of the Cynosnre will visit Philadelphia, New York and Boston and report results and prospects.

—Secretary Stoddard spoke at Crete, some twenty miles south of Chicago, last Monday evening.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley returned to Wheaton Friday from his Indiana trip. He has spoken thirteen times in that State, and visited the following places: North Marion, Marion, Misseneway, Fair View, Van Buren, Logansport, and Jonesboro.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard, whose success in central and southwestern Ohio this season makes a splendid chapter in the history of our lecture work, was so unwell as to be laid by for a day or two at Columbus last week. He expected to be ready for duty again Monday.

—A heavy fall of snow set in last Tuesday evening and continued over twenty-four hours, thawing rapidly as it fell. This would have killed an ordinary meeting, but the address of Pres. J. Blanchard in the court-house at Wheaton on Wednesday evening was attended by a crowd that filled the court-room and listened attentively to an address on the South and the lodge strike against labor in the Southwest. The address is printed in full in the Wheaton paper of Friday.

—The Christian Nation of New York published a memorial number in respect to Prof. J. R. W. Sloane of the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary, of Pittsburgh, whose lamented death, March 6th, has been briefly noticed in these columns. A letter from this office to friends in Allegheny for facts respecting his life work seems to have miscarried, which accounts for our failure to take more notice of one of the most eloquent and able of the speakers who have taken part in the N. C. A. conventions. The memorial number of the Nation has a large portrait of Dr. Sloane with letters and sermons upon the life of a noble man. These all speak of his active co-operation in the slavery reform. But that is in the past. We regret that so little is said of his warm sympathy and activity in present reform movements, against the lodge and for the Christianizing the state especially.

We wish it to be distinctly understood now, henceforth, and all the time, that there is no valid excuse for keeping any sort of a store open on the Lord's day, or any barber shop, or any livery stable, or any printing office, or any railroad office. Further; there is no good excuse for any sort of manufactory to be kept running on sacred time. The good Lord who made and arranged all things, did his work so wisely and so well that there is no necessity at any time to change his order of things. Out of seven days he has given us six for our own employment; and if our time is wisely improved on the six, there will be production according to the demand.—Blanchard, Iowa, Record.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

The New York Sabbath Committee joins with kindred associations in earnestly commending to American Christians the appeal of the Sabbath Prayer Union (an association of friends of the Lord's day in Great Britain and in other parts of the world,) for special and united prayer for the better and universal observance of the Sabbath, during the week from April 4th to 11th.

The programme of special topics for prayer suggested by the Prayer Union is as follows:

1. That there may be a great outpouring of the Spirit on the masses throughout Evangelical Christendom who attend no place of worship on the Lord's day.

2. That railway, omnibus, tramway and post-office servants may have rest on the Lord's day.

3. That the sailing of vessels may be so arranged that the crews shall have Sabbath rest as far as possible, and that the loading and discharging of ships on the Lord's day may henceforth cease.

4. That all places of amusement and for secular studies, and that all shops, and especially those for the sale of intoxicating liquors, may be shut on the Lord's day; that the issuing and sale of Sabbath newspapers, an evil so widely prevalent, may cease; that the churches may be faithful in inculcating and maintaining Sabbath rest; that a rich blessing may be on all societies having for their object the holy-keeping of the sacred day; that more prayer may continually ascend that the rest of this day may be devoted to the good of the soul and not to mere selfish indulgence; and that Sabbath keeping by professing Christians in foreign lands may be such as is fitted by Divine grace to attract the heathen to the Gospel of Christ.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Dear Cynosure:—At last Mr. Edmunds has achieved a barren victory by the passage of his resolutions by a party vote. The first very properly condemns the Attorney General, and by implication the President, for refusing to furnish papers on file relating to suspensions from office. Surely all papers on file in any department of the government ought to be accessible to every other department. The decision vote of 32 to 26 fairly represents the convictions of the majority of the people as well as of the Senate. The President and his Cabinet have a right to their personal privacies, but papers on file do not belong to that class. The third resolution, refusing to confirm nominations where such information is withheld, barely escaped defeat. It was the logical sequence of the other, but there was a manifest indisposition to precipitate a conflict with the President over a matter of no greater practical importance. It is safe to say that it will not be carried out, but that all the appointments, against which no special objections are made, will be confirmed. There was no important crisis and no occasion for a great display of patriotic eloquence. There has resulted, however, this important good. The absurdity of secret executive sessions has been fully developed. The people will not much longer tolerate Star Chamber principles in national affairs, and it is gratifying that Senators Logan, Platt and Van Wyack have committed themselves so strongly to openness in all that pertains to appointments and confirmations. The strength of an evil conservatism is seen in the fact. Mr. Van Wyack's amendment making all future executive sessions public was defeated, though some who voted for it did so rather to defeat Mr. Edmunds' resolution than to discard secret sessions.

There is hope for national aid to the cause of education even though the Blair bill, after having passed the Senate, was quietly strangled by the House committee on education. An indignation meeting of some fifty members was held in a committee room, and Mr. Willis of Kentucky was requested to introduce a new bill and ask its reference to another committee. He has done so, and the vote 133 to 115 by which it was referred to the committee on Labor is considered a fair test of strength by the advocates and opponents of the measure. Next to secret sessions in the Senate there is perhaps no more needful reform than that of preventing committees from withholding a bill to which they happen to be opposed. It is a sort of clannish meanness of which decent men should be ashamed.

In spite of colorphobia, it is now probable that the appointment of Mr. Mathews, which was reported against, will be confirmed. In candor and fair dealing with colored citizens, the President is far ahead of his party. Some time since a delegation of colored citizens from Virginia called on him and presented an address, asking him to use his influence against any color lines in politics. He listened courteously to their paper, and expressed his approval of its object. So, too, when Messrs. O'Hara, Lynch and Bruce called on him to ask his attention to the wholesale massacre of negroes at Carrollton, Miss.; he expressed his horror and indignation, and wondered why the State authorities should be so oblivious to so great a crime. If Southern politicians would do away with bloody-shirt politics, they must see that there is less blood on their hands and those of their constituents. Mr. Hoar has called the attention of the Senate to the killing of these people, and has asked for national legislation. Mr. Logan's bill to increase the army to 30,000 is meeting with decided opposition, especially from Western Senators. Mr. Teller's suggestion had the rare quality of good sense and practical economy, as well as justice and humanity. He said if Indian children were taken from the different tribes and educated in our industrial schools, they would be hostages for the good behavior of the tribe from whence they came. As the only use for the army is protection from Indians, this is surely an easier method. It costs a million of dollars to kill an Indian in war. He can be transformed into a self-supporting, peaceful resident for a thousandth part of that sum.

Senator Dawes' bill to purchase one half of Sioux reservation in Dakota and open it to settlement, meets the approval of the Indian Rights Association. While Indian rights should be carefully respected, they have no right to hold a vast tract as large as the State of Indiana, of no practical value to themselves or others.

The great strike in the Southwest, with its attendant suspension of business, violence and crime, is a national concern, and has not failed to arrest the attention of all departments of government. Mr. O'Neill, after conference with the President, has introduced a bill to provide for the arbitration of differences between capitalists and labor. As a temporary expedient such a measure is one of undoubted importance, but the remedy should be more radical. To my mind, the relation of capital and labor would not be so difficult of adjustment but for our high tariff and the consequent prostration of our foreign commerce. Treaties of reciprocity with the nations of Central and South America would open a vast market for our surplus products and take off a considerable burden of taxation from the people. It is to be hoped that Senator Frye's plan of a congress of the three Americas may result in such a measure or something that approximates it.

But so long as men unite in organizations which are but secret despotisms, and swear obedience to their mandates, there will never be any want of pretexts for strikes, boycotts and violence. The reason why Jesuitism became a terror to all the nations of Europe, and had finally to be prohibited by each of them, was not that the original purpose of Loyola and the earlier Jesuits was wrong. Their objects were praiseworthy, but the two elements of secrecy and unqualified obedience gave to the order an irresponsible power that could not fail to be abused. The same military system has been adopted by the Knights of Labor and the kindred organizations. So long as a secret order can be sent to vast bodies of men commanding them to desist from labor and to prevent others from taking their place, there will be similar scenes to those prevailing all over the Southwest and the cities of Belgium in Europe.

The remedy is two-fold. There must be a suppression of all these secret despotisms. No organization based on the military principle ought to be tolerated in a free government. We must have but one government, and people must be free, even from voluntary enslavement. Besides this, capital and labor must co operate rather than contend. If every man's labor was computed as so much capital and he was taken into partnership on the basis of such capital, to which, if he chose, he could add other capital, he would have no interests separate from the concern. This is no experiment. Both in Europe and America it has been tried in many forms of business, and proved a success.

The colored Freemasons of this District are a feeble folk, but they make up in arrogance what they lack in numbers. They propose that the colored people of the District shall hold an industrial and educational exposition under their auspices. The 75,000 colored citizens of the District are to get up and carry on this exposition for the benefit of the 500 Masons. It will be a grand advertisement and a most adroit scheme. The Israelites who came out of bondage had to be forty years in the wilderness. This people are yet in the wilderness.

being very old. I said the name of this officer was the Worthy Grand. (This, it seems, was a mistake.) Two Odd-fellows started up almost at the same time, and asked if I was sure it was the Worthy Grand. I acknowledged that I might be in error, and requested that they correct me if I made any mistake. Before they hardly knew what they were saying they had given the whole thing away, much to the amusement of those present. At the conclusion one young man said he had been saving $10 expecting to join the Odd-fellows, but if it was that kind of an institution he should have nothing to do with it. Others expressed like determinations. It takes the beauty all out of these institutions of darkness to hold them up and let the sun shine on them.

You can put down the name of Mr. D. M. Mote, of West Milton, among your list of seceded Odd-fellows. He confesses the exposition to be correct.

To-night I expect to speak in the Union Friends' church, three-quarters of a mile north of Ludlow Falls. I am now enjoying the kind hospitality of Mr. Samuel Coate. He will hitch up soon and go with me to call on friends. I feel greatly indebted to many whom I have not space to mention for personal kindness.

BRO. LOGGAN YET AT WORK.

Snow bound.—School house work.—A silent but convincing Confession, and an uneasy Conscience—To Dunlap.

March 24th, 1886.

Dear Editor:—I arrived safe at home Monday the 15th inst.; found all well, for which the Lord be praised. While I have been much hindered in traveling by deep snow-drifts and bad roads generally during the latter part of the winter and until the 10th of March, I have been sowing the seed as best I could. At the close of the protracted meeting at the Lone Star school-house, I lectured two evenings at the school-house two and a half miles west and got some subscribers for the Cynosure, and also a notable evidence of the truth of both Ronayne's and Doesburg's expose of Masonry.

The case was as follows: A man by the name of Roach, at the close of service one evening, while passing to the door, addressed me, saying, "I understand you are down on me; I am a Mason." I replied, "I thought Masonry was wrong." He asked, "What grounds have you for condemning it? Have you been a Mason?" I answered, "No; but I have some of their books." He said they were by some disaffected Masons. I answered they were high authorities, such as Cross, Webb, Morris, Mackey, and the Grand Lodge of Iowa, by T. S. Parvin as Grand Secretary. I told him I would like to talk with him on the subject and show him the books, and invited him to come to my lodging. About two days after he came, and after looking at them he said, "I do not say whether they are authority or not; but supposing they are, what wrong is there in them?" I answered, "They teach that Masonry is completely despotic and anti-Christian," and showed him some of the evidences, and stated that no man could be a consistent, patriotic American citizen and a Freemason. I handed him Doesburg's exposition of the seven degrees. He examined it silently for perhaps half an hour, and then asked the price and bought it. A young man who was working for him told others first and then told me that he refused to let him examine the pamphlet, and when he had read them both he saw him put them both in the stove, and he (the young man) grabbed for the pamphlet, but Mr. Roach pushed the stove-door to until they were burned. I gave the young man a copy afterward. If he had openly told the people that they were true, it would not have been more firmly believed than it is now by the people of that community.

I was unable to speak again till on my way home, Sabbath evening, the 14th inst. I was stopping with Bro. Dustin over Sabbath, and attended the Sabbath-school. There being a good many of the older people present, I proposed that I would preach or lecture to them that evening. They voted for me to lecture, and I spoke to them on the religion of Freemasonry. One Mason who was present said to Bro. Dustin, "That was all wheat." Another man told me he had some notion of joining, but he wanted none of it now.

Next Monday I aim to start on the train to Dunlap, Morris county, where Bro. Starry was so badly used and where Satan overdid himself. As I learn through the Cynosure, there is a very happy reaction in public sentiment. From such experiences we learn to faithfully "sow the seed (of truth) in the morning, and in the evening not to withhold the hand," and God will give the increase to his glory and the advancement of his cause.

R. Loggan.

LINES FROM THE GERMAN.

If God be on my side, then let who will oppose,
For oft ere now to him I cried, and he hath quelled my foes;
If Jesus be my friend, if God does love me well,
What matters all my foes intend, though strong they be and fell?

Here I can freely rest, I dare to boast of this,
That God the highest and the best, my friend and father is;
From dangers as snares he saves where'er he bids me go,
He checks the storms and calms the waves, nor lets ought work me woe.

I rest upon the ground of Jesus and his blood,
For 'tis through him that I have found the true eternal Good:
Naught have I of my own, naught in the life I lead,
What Christ has given me alone is worth all love indeed.

His spirit in the dwells, o'er all my mind he reigns,
All care and sadness he dispels, and soothes away all pains;
He prospers day by day his work within my heart,
Till I have strength and faith to say, Thou, God, my father art.

When weakness in me lies, and tempts me to despair,
He speaketh words and utters sighs of more than mortal prayer;
But what no tongue can tell, thou God canst hear and see,
What troubleth in the heart full well if aught there pleaseth thee.

He wells, e'en in my heart sweet words of holy cheer,
How he who seeks in God his rest shall ever find him near;
How God has built above a city fair and new,
Where eye and heart shall see and prove what faith has counted true.

There is prepared on high my heritage and lot,
Though here on earth I fall and die, my heaven shall fail me not:
Though here my days are dark, and oft my tears must rain,
Wherever my Saviour's light I mark, all things grow bright again.

Who joins him to the Lord, whom Satan flies and hates,
Shall on himself despised, abhorred: for him the burden waits
Of misery and shame heaped on his guiltless head,
And crosses, trials, cruel blame, shall be his daily bread.

I know it long ago, yet I am not afraid;
The God, to whom I pledge my vow, will surely send me aid;
At cost of all I have, at cost of life and limb,
I cling to God, who yet shall save; I will not turn from him.

The world may fall and flee, thou standest fast forever,
Nor fire, nor sword, nor plague, from thee, my trusting soul shall sever:
Nor hunger and no thirst, no poverty or pain—
Let mighty princes do their worst—shall fright me back again.

Nay, that angels know, no throne or wide-spread fame,
Nor treasures, no fear or woe, no grief of heart or shame;
Man cannot aught conceive of pleasure or of harm,
That ever could tempt my soul to leave her refuge in thine arm.

My heart for gladness springs: it cannot more be sad,
For every day it laughs and sings, sees naught but sunshine glad:
The sun that gilds mine eyes is Christ the Lord I love,
I sing for joy of that which lies stored up for me above.

LIBERAL THEORIES IN RELIGION.

I have now to touch upon the perils of the present hour in regard to religious things; and I do so with bated breath: for I am exceedingly anxious not to seem rash, extravagant, or unkind. In connection with the discussions arising on the publication of "Essays and Reviews" in England, not many years ago, it was decided there by the civil courts that the Articles of Faith in the English Established church do not inculcate the doctrine of endless punishment. This is by no means the position of the soundest preachers and theologians of the Establishment; but, even if it were, the religious services of the English church would be orthodox and evangelical in tone and impression: for the prayer book is crowded with sound opinions. Under Elizabeth, the number of articles was reduced from forty-two to thirty-nine. An article containing what evangelical ereeds accept as correct statements concerning future punishment was dropped: not because the revisers disbelieved it, but for other reasons. On the ground of this change, and although the evangelical doctrine is implicitly contained in the seventeenth article as well as explicitly in the prayer book, the secular courts decided that clergymen who subscribed to the articles are not bound to believe and teach it. (See Professor Fisher's "Discussions in History and Theology," p. 433.) From the hour of that decision to the present there has been an attempt in many fashionable churches, both sides of the sea, to push into evangelical churches members, and occasionally preachers, who are more than semi-Universalistic in their convictions.

English non-conforming churches, especially the Congregational, so far as they have been brought into rivalry with the Establishment, have been under every subtle temptation to make as mild statements of Biblical truth on future punishment as possible, so as not to repel church members or preachers, and drive them into the Episcopal organization. In the large cities of the United States a similar temptation has growing power. Any schism, or unnecessary severity in the statement of doctrine on the part of the Congregational body is thought to be likely to benefit the membership of a less exacting but powerful rival denomination. In this circumstance is to be found perhaps the chief explanation of the surprising silence of several leaders of evangelical thought in presence of misehievous new departures, and also the fact that the plea for the irenical attitude is carried so often beyond Scriptural or prudential warrant. This obstacle to revivals is a most dangerous one; and whoever is a friend of revivals will be williug to diseuss the hindrances to them as well as the helps. I am assailing here and now no man's creed, but pointing out, with studious courtesy, the necessary relations of really irreconcilable creeds to each other. If a man is a Universalist, there is a denomination to which he naturally should go. I will not treat him with contempt; I will say nothing against his reputation for candor, although I must doubt the thoroughness of his scholarship. But the undermining of the evangelical denominations by bringing into their membership persons who profess in public one creed, and hold in private another, is perhaps the chief peril of the evangelical world in the great cities at the present hour. [Applause.] I have so little personal acquaintance with the church-membership of the great American cities that I cannot be supposed to be making oblique reference here to this or that individual. But I venture to affirm that in at least two of the denominations known as evangelical it is one of the current perils of New England and of several of the large cities of the United States, that men who are substantially Universalists retain their places as members in good and regular standing in evangelical churches. This is by no means a general tendency, even in the two denominations in question. It appears, occasionally, in those circles especially where social relations make it the dictate of the love of peace and of position in fashionable quarters not to be narrow, but to be broad, to be liberal, even if the latter word means loose. [Laughter.]

Now, I heard, the other day, our dear friend, Dr. Bartol, who honors us by his presence this morning, say that "even breadth may be a vice;" breadth, which is Boston's idol. With his poetic insight, with his searching spiritual gaze, our friend said to us, not long ago: "Is not the expanse of the waters of Lake Erie grand? Is not the descent of the torrent at Niagara grand? And is not the latter in its narrowness as grand as the latter in its breadth?" [Applause.] My conviction is that the future will show that evangelical ehurches, as a rule, will not allow to be ordained over them as teachers persons who hold unevangelical opinions.—Joseph Cook.

"HO, EVERY ONE THAT THIRSTETH."

When I was in Beyrut, ten years ago, it happened that I was walking upon the street with my old friend Rev. Dr. Jessup. He called my attention to a strange-looking creature, having a skin bottle of great size slung across his shoulder. "Do you hear what the man is saying?" he asked. I turned to notice him more closely; he was wretchedly clad, and bowed down heavily with his burden; in his left hand he had a pair of what seemed like metal saucers, and these he clinked against eaeh other like two shallow bells; and all the time, as he shuffled along over the stones, he muttered a curious jargon of sounds, apparently repeating the same syllables. I admitted that I heard the noises, but confessed I was painfully short of ideas. Then the good missionary told me that what he was muttering in Arabic was a street-cry customary to all carriers of water in the Orient; indeed, he was saying exactly what Isaiah repeated at the opening of the fifty-fifth chapter: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters!" and then right over again, with ceaseless iteration: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters!" Hence this prophet really repeats a street-cry in order to attract attention, and then turns the figure into a swift contrast, as if he should exclaim: "See yonder! hear that water-bearer; he offers you water at a price; I offer you milk and wine, and that without asking any price to be paid; why will you waste your money on him, when you can have what is more valuable freely, and close at your hand?" And thus he turns the counsel adroitly to the Gospel of faith and godly repentance, and the cup Christ brings for the thirst of the soul.—Rev. C. S. Robinson, D. D.

A STORY OF THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

Two very dirty little girls stood, just at sunset, in the low door of a mud-walled hovel, waiting for their mother to come home and give them their supper. The youngest had absolutely no clothing; the other, who was about twelve years old, was partially covered with a few rags. They had had nothing to eat since early morning, and naturally were hungry, and so waited patiently. What troubled them the most was that they were not sure of any supper when their mother did get home. The terrible famine had already begun, and their father could find no work. The fields were parched; there was no plowing. The water-tanks were almost dry, so the growing crop, scanty as it was, could not be irrigated. There was nothing for him to do. The children knew this, and it was with anxious faces that they looked down the filthy lane for their parents.

By and by these came home together. The mother still carried the bundle of faggots that she had started out to sell. Nobody would give even a handful of grain for them. In the best of times the poor woman could earn only five or six cents a day, and now even that was cut off.

The father, however, had good news for them. He had been prowling about the village and had discovered, by chance, the pits where a Sudra farmer had hidden his store of grain. He proposed to go in the night and steal enough for them all to make one good meal. In the meantime, he had only a few roots that he had grubbed up with his hands. The hungry children did not wait to complain, but ravenously ate the food their father gave them, and without further ceremony curled up to sleep on the floor of the hut.

Early the next morning Andalama took her water-pot and went to the village well. As she passed through the narrow street of their little hamlet she saw buffalo eows wandering about, lean and gaunt with famine, for the grass had long since withered. Labels were tied to their horns authorizing any one who would feed them to take them as his own. No one dared to kill and eat them, for in India to kill a cow is a greater crime than to kill a man. She heard the people talking together, saying that great offerings must be made to appease the angry gods. Many were burning incense before shrines of the goddesses of evil and disease, and making prostrations before their images.

Days went on in this way. Andalama's father continued his nocturnal thieving until the farmer discovered what he was about and put a stop to it. Then Andalama and her little sister, Thyarama, began to beg. Their pitiful faces occasionally moved some Sudra farmer s wife to pity the little outcasts, and give them a drink of milk or a handful of cooked grain, though she was very careful not to touch them for fear of being defiled. The children understood only too well that they were considered as unclean by people of every higher rank or caste, and did not venture to take the food from the ground until their benefactress had turned her back upon them.

One day their father heard that the English government promised to provide work at Ongole, and to pay all laborers in grain; so the whole family started, full of hope, to claim their share of what was to be had. The journey was long and they were very weak. They found no food but the leaves of the trees, with occasionally the fruit of the prickly pear or some dry roots. As they dragged themselves through the village they found hundreds of others as badly off as themselves. The spinning-wheels had ceased to hum, the shuttles of the weavers were silent. In all the hamlets on the outskirts of the villages, where the outcasts dwelt, there was starvation. In the quarters of the different caste people things were little better. Along the roads out in the country dogs and jackalls quarreled over the bodies of those who had succumbed to the famine.

One night they law down utterly faint and exhausted under a margosa tree, and the children slept, but woke at daybreak to find their mother dead and their father very ill. He, with the rest, had drank from the filthy well of a village through which they had passed the day before, and evidently was dying of cholera.

Andalama cried out to a passer-by for help, but the man after one glance hurried on, exclaiming, "Ma Lukshmi (the goddess of cholera) has stricken him!" Soon afterward he died. Some men lifted the two bodies from the roadside and threw them into the jungle. Thus they died without hope, and their bodies were left unburied.

The two little girls crept sadly away, the tears running down their faces. Their loneliness and terror were heightened by the dreadful sights around them. Two dogs frightened them most of all, snarling and fighting in the dry bed of a stream near by over the body of a little child, thrown there by its own father.

"Sister," cried the little Thyarama, "let us creep under the tamarind trees and die! Perhaps if we are in the grove the wicked dogs will not find us."

So they lay down in the grove, just outside a village, all the long, hot day. The sun shone with a fiery heat, but they slept. At night hunger woke them, and Andalama feeling that now she was the protector of her little sister, determined to try while they could still walk and reach the place where their father had hoped to find food.

"Let us walk all night," she said to her sister.

"But," cried Thyarama, "I am afraid of the dark."

"The moon shines, and I am more afraid to stay," answered Andalama.

Just then a crowd of large fruit-eating bats began to flit among the trees, and the owls, awaking, filled the air with weird sounds. The terrified children thought that the place was haunted by evil spirits, and fled out into the country road, where other dangers—scorpions and deadly snakes—lay in wait, and where thorns cut their bare little feet. Morning brought them to the door of a farm-house. Here in the court-yard three or four children stood, watching the milking of some buffalo cows.

"Oh! good people, have pity on us! We are starving. Give my little sister one drink of milk!" cried Andalama.

A man came out of the house with a stick in his hand and roughly bade them go. "How dare you, little outcasts, come in here and throw your shadows across our court-yard? Go away, or I will beat you!" he said; and poor Andalama drew her little sister out again into the road.

Fainting and utterly discouraged, they sank down into the shadow of the wall to die, when the sound of rude music, accompanying the shrill song of a child, roused them. They lifted their languid eyes and looked down the village street that stretched before them. There, in the midst of the squalid hovels, was the idol house of Polarummah, goddess of small-pox. This goddess of terrible power and high-sounding name was represented by a rough, peculiarly marked stone, enshrined in a rude mud-house, like a dog's kennel. Round and round this idol-house—one could not call it a temple—danced a little girl, as small as Thyarama, keeping time with hands, feet, and indeed her whole body, to the droning melody of a rude instrument played by an old woman, and to her own song in praise of the dreadful goddess.

The two starving children watched her as, her little performance over, she went among the by-standers who had been attracted by the music and begged a few pice. These bits of money the old woman, her grandmother, placed before the idol with profound prostrations that Polarummah might not be offended, and then hid them away carefully among her rags. Then slinging her instrument over her shoulder, she trudged along the village road toward where Andalama and her sister lay in the shadow of the farm-yard wall, the little granddaughter following close behind. As they passed, little Thyarama stretched out her claw-like hand and seized the old woman by the ragged quaka. "Have pity," moaned the weak voice; "give us something to eat."

The old woman shook her off roughly, but the child lingered behind, her mild, dark eyes full of childish sympathy for the little sisters.

"Come, Dellie!" called her grandmother harshly, but Dellie did not move.

"Are you so very hungry?" she asked, slipped a couple of pice that she had secreted from the collection before the idol-house into the emaciated hand, and ran on after the old woman.

The noise of the scolding that Dellie received for lingering behind caused the farmer's wife to look over the wall. The imploring eyes that met hers went straight to her heart, and she hastily brought a mug full of the fresh buffalo milk for which the children had lately begged in vain, and set it down by them.

"Drink," she said, "drink in the name of Yehsee Kristu."

The children looked up with mingled delight and surprise. It was a name they had never heard before.

"Hush!" whispered the woman, seeing the question in their eyes. "My husband would beat me if he heard me use that name. It is to please Yehsee Kristu that I have brought you this milk. He is a great Dehvah (God), who loves children. Over the hill at Ongole the white teachers tell about him."

"And is Ongole only over the hill?" exclaimed Andalama. Revived by the draught of milk and the hope of reaching the end of her journey, she rose to her feet with new strength, took her sister's hand in hers, and with many thanks took leave of the kind farmer's wife.

"Only over the hill!" but the children thought it a weary climb before they saw below them the red roofs of Ongole. Slowly they crept down toward the town, till, when they reached the temple of Siva and Vishnu, they were too tired to drag themselves further, and stole into the shadow of the temple steps, where the fast falling night soon hid them from observation.

The first rays of the rising sun woke them, and showed them the suburbs of Ongole close at their feet. Full of hope they took up their journey, and soon reached the gate of an enclosed compound, in the center of which stood a neat stone "bungalow" with a striped tile roof. A gentleman was just coming out of the gate. The children had rarely seen a foreigner, but they had judged at once that this must be one of the white teachers who knew "Yehsee Kristu."

"Ajah," said Andalama timidly, "we are very hungry, and our parents are dead; will you not give us a handful of food?"

The missionary saw with compassion the poor little pinched faces that looked up to him as to their last hope on earth.

"Where did you come from?" he asked; "have you no friends?"

"We come from a palem far away over there," answered Andalama, waving her thin hand toward the West—"the palem where stand Nagamma and her husband, with their mouths wide open and all her children carved on the stones. The Ajah has seen them—the great snake gods. And our father and mother, they were coming to Ongole to get work that we might eat, but Ma Lukshmi seized them in the night, and we are alone. Ah! Doragaru (master), give us a little food."

"And you came all this way alone?" asked the kind missionary, while he led the way to the bungalow.

"Ah! yes, all alone," sighed Andalama, "and we should have died, but a good woman gave us milk last night."

"Are you the Ajah that told her about Yehsee Kristu?" asked little Thyarama, "because if you are I am so glad."

"Why should you be glad, my poor child?" asked her white friend.

"She said that Yehsee Kristu was a good Dehvah, and loved little girls. If you know him you will take care of us," answered the child, with an air of conviction.

With great joy the children ate the food given them, bathed and put on the clean garments provided. They then learned that they were to go to school and learn more about "Yehsee Kristu," for whose sake food and shelter were extended to them.

Think if you can, you who have never known want, what those two words, food and shelter, expressed to the little orphans, who had never known what it was to have enough. Their joy was made complete when, some time after the famine the little Dellie who had befriended them in time of need was brought into the school by her grandmother. They, too, had learned to know and love "Yehsee Kristu," and had ceased to sing and dance before idols.—The Standard.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON III, April 18, 1886.—The First Miracle.—John 2: 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee and manifested forth his glory; and his disciples believed on him.—John 2: 11.

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

1. The religion of Jesus no foe to social joys. vs. 1, 2. Ascetism and religion have nothing in common with each other, but because a Christian is not of the world, the common conclusion is that he cannot be in the world, mingling with men and sympathizing with their joys. The example of Jesus effectually contradicts this idea. The beginning of his miracles, the first manifestation of his glory, was at a marriage feast.

2. The water made wine. vs. 3-8. That the mother of Jesus believed her son possessed a divine or, at least, supernatural power, is evident from the whole narrative; and it is also equally evident that she had no full understanding of him in his Person or Office. We may well believe that at the only time when she tried to stand between him and his work, it was her mother-love that placed her for the moment in an attitude dishonoring to him, and false to her own high mission as the mother of the world's Saviour. Now, before she realizes that his ministry will only draw upon him persecution, poverty, and finally a shameful death, she is over eager to have him show forth his wonder-working powers. But his hour had not yet come, as he tells her in gentle reproof,—the hour of his complete and full manifestation as the Saviour of men. We may show a lack of faith by trying to push forward the Lord's work faster than the times or the circumstances may warrant. "I wonder if you have found the comfort in that text, 'Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it,' that I have," writes a dear home missionary sister. Usually it is a very simple thing that he requir s of us, like the filling up of the water-pots with water. But do this simple thing for Christ, do it promptly, lovingly, cheerfully, and his divine, wonder-working power will change the water into wine; will bring grandest results out of the smallest acts, and make the lowliest task to which we set our hands beautiful and heroic. The question whether this was intoxicating wine can hardly rise in a mind which has any adequate conception of Christ's character. Would he create that which takes away heart and intellect and soul, and converts man into a brute? Working, as he distinctly states, after the pattern of his father, would he turn the sparkling water into anything else than the pure juice of the grape as it flows fresh from God's vintage? To think otherwise must seem to a reverent mind little short of blasphemy.

3. Thou hast kept the good wine until now. vs. 9-11. It is not God's way to give us the best first. The spring of life is not so sweet as its ripened summer, nor is that in turn so happy a season as the harvest, the time of perfect fruit. We can thwart his loving plan for us. We may make our own pleasure our chief object and miss all truest joy, till the sere and yellow leaf finds us with nothing but leaves to show. But if we do his "Whatsoever," filling up each day with loving service, we shall find that, as at the wedding feast in Cana, the best wine has been kept till the last.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What is the Christian's rule in reference to the world? 1 Cor. 7:31. What was the glory that He manifested forth? Isa. 40: 5; Matt. 17: 2; 2 Pet. 1: 17.

From Peloubet's Notes.

Jesus sanctifies true earthly joy. We need not wonder to find the Lord of life at that festival; for he came to sanctify all life,—its times of joy, as its times of sorrow; and all experience tells us that it is times of gladness which especially need such a sanctifying power.—Trench. Jesus consecrates marriage, and the sympathies which lead to marriage. He stamps his image on human joys, human connections, human relationships. He pronounces that they are more than human; the means whereby God's presence comes to us; the types and shadows whereby higher and deeper relationships become possible to us. For it is through our human affections that the soul first learns to feel that its destiny is divine.—Robertson.

"The mother of Jesus saith unto him, They have no wine." Why did Mary appeal to Jesus? 1. The family in which she was a guest was in a serious difficulty. 2. Perhaps she felt partly responsible, since her son and his disciples may have been in part the occasion of the failure. 3. Mary had learned during the thirty years Jesus was with her in Nazareth, to have perfect confidence in him that in some way he would be able to relieve the difficulty. 4. She may have believed even at this time that Jesus was the Messiah, and could work a miracle if necessary.

"What have I to do with thee?" Literally, what is there to me and thee? "Leave me to myself; let me follow out my own course." The phrase occurs not unfrequently in the Old Testament (2 Sam. 16: 10; 1 Kings 17: 18). Everywhere it marks some divergence between the thoughts and ways of the persons so brought together. In this passage it serves to show that the actions of the Son of God, now that he has entered on his divine work, are no longer dependent in any way on the suggestion even of his mother.—Westcott. Hitherto he has been subject to his mother, but now his higher work has begun, and he must work only in obedience to his Heavenly Father. He does not refuse his mother, but only places his compliance on the right basis.

"His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." The answer of Jesus (ver. 4) plainly implied that his hour would come. She waits for the "hour:" whatsoever the hour may bring, let the servants be prepared to do his bidding. Mary here retires from the scene.—Schaff.

Everything is here narrated, as Chrysostom observes, so as to exclude any possible semblance of collusion. They were water-jars, not wine-vessels, so that none could say that very probably there was a residue or sediment of wine remaining in them, which lent a flavor to water poured on it, and so formed the thinnest kind of wine.—Trench. The quality too, renders collusion or deceit impossible.

"Containing two or three firkins apiece." "Firkin" is an almost exact equivalent of the Greek metretes, which was about nine gallons. The six pitchers (or jars), therefore, holding from 18 to 27 gallons each, would together hold from 108 to 162 gallons.—Cambridge Bible.

This large quantity of wine would provide but little for each guest, considering the habits of the people, who crowd into the house to partake of the feast as long as the provisions last, being pressed to do so by their hospitable host or master of the feast, who also urges, and sometimes compels, even the passers-by to come and drink to the health of the bridegroom and bride.—Dr. H. J. Van Lennep, "Bible Lands."

CONCLUSIONS. 1. Whether among the Jews, and in our Saviour's day, there was a wine that contained no alcohol is hard to be determined, although in regard to the significance of the Hebrew yayin, and the Greek oinos, there can be but little doubt. These words simply meant the liquid that came from pressing the grape. There is no evidence of any further idea associated with it. It was not fermenting fluid, but grape juice. This, it was well known, grew stronger with age. It was at first pleasant and nourishing, then exhilarating, and at last intoxicating. In the Bible, the first use is commended, the second mentioned without disapprobation or approval, the third in all cases condemned.—Taylor Lewis. 2. There certainly can be no proof that the wine Christ made was intoxicating, or that its superior goodness was in anything but a purer flavor, a more delicious taste. 3. In this wonderful miracle we cannot for a moment suppose that Jesus would minister to intemperance, either in fact or in example.—Clark. It is clear that neither Christ's precepts nor his example justifies the ordinary drinking usages of American society of to-day, with its bars as well as its beer gardens, its fiery wines and strong liquors, and all its attendant evils.—Abbott. 4. As to the Lord's supper, the word "wine" is not once used in the New Testament in connection with it, but always "the fruit of the vine," so that divine institution never lays a feather's weight in favor of intoxicating wine. 5. The principles of the Bible and of Christ are wholly on the side of temperance. 6. The duty of total abstinence is the giving up of that which may be lawful in itself, whenever it becomes dangerous to ourselves or the means of evil to others. This is our Christian duty and privilege.

LITERATURE

Gold News, a collection of sermons by Samuel P. Jones and Samuel Small, is issued by J. S. Ogilvie & Co., New York, with portraits and brief sketches of both the evangelists. The character of the addresses of these evangelists is too well known and popular to need remark. This collection is chiefly from the Chicago discourses, and is well printed, and sells for 25 cents.

—The April Century has a timely and important article on "Strikes, Lockouts, and Arbitrations," by George May Powell. It aims to be an unbiased study of the relations of capital and labor, and of the methods of settling differences. Mr. Powell at the outset says, "Labor and capital are each as necessary to the other as the two wings of a bird. Cripple either wing and the other is useless."

The account of the famous Confederate cruiser Alabama and her duel with the Kearsarge is of a very popular character, besides being well illustrated. P. D. Haywood, who was a seaman on the Alabama, describes "Life on the Alabama;" Lieutenant Commander John McIntosh Kell, in his paper, gives an authoritative account of the reasons which impelled Capt. Semmes to try issues with the Kearsarge, and of the incidents of the fight; while Surgeon John M. Browne, of the Kearsarge, contributes the Union history of that stirring event.

A portrait of Longfellow after an ambrotype of 1848, showing the poet in a guise unfamiliar to the public of later years, is the frontis-piece of the number. It accompanies a paper by Mrs. Annie Fields giving "Glimpses of Longfellow in Social Life," with many anecdotes as set down both by Mr. Longfellow and by the author's husband, the late James T. Fields. Mr. Cable's paper on "Creole Slave Songs" is as fully illustrated and as entertaining as his February article on "The Dance in the Place Congo."

In St. Nicholas, Edward Everett tells how the "Vacation-schools in Boston" were started; and Chas. Barnard, in a story called "Sophie Conner and the Vacation-school," explains the inside workings of one of those popular and paradoxically-named institutions. Henry Sandham contributes eleven drawings illustrating both articles.

A very interesting "Historic Girl" is told about by E. S. Brooks. Her name was "Woo of Hwangho." She was a Chinese girl, brought up under Christian influences, and became the only woman who ever ruled the "Middle Kingdom" as "Empress Supreme." Frank R. Stockton, in his "Personally Conducted" paper, describes the perils of Alpine climbing and relates how he himself made the ascent of the Rigi—by railway.

Horace E. Scudder's "George Washington" carries the hero through his campaign with Braddock, and his subsequent military experience as commander-in-chief of the Virginia forces, his courtship and marriage.

Babyhood, in its April number, offers $25 for the best short article (1,500 words or more) on "crying spells" received by June 1. The leading contents of this issue are: "Earaches," by Dr. A. H. Buck; an excellent "Familiar Talk" by Marion Harland on children's obedience; "Teaching a Child Responsibility," by Hope Ledyard; "The Rights of Babyhood," by Dr. E. Swisher; illustrated articles on "Nursing-Bottles" and on the "Value of a Magnifying Glass" to parents in detecting the presence of splinters, etc., in slight wounds.

The first number of the Political Science Quarterly, published the last of March, contains several timely and interesting articles. Prof. Burgess, in his "American Commonwealth," maintains that the State governments are steadily losing power, and that the organs of our future development are the Nation and the Community. Prof. Richmond Smith publishes a destructive criticism of the American Bureau of Labor Statistics. Dr. De Leon shows that the "Berlin Conference" was a scheme to further German trade, and criticizes the role played by the United States. Mr. Goodnow advocates specific in preference to ad valorem duties, and outlines a plan for securing the interests of the government and doing justice to those of the importer. Mr. Whitridge discusses the exercise of "inquisitorial power" by the legislatures. The Quarterly is published by Ginn & Co., 743 Broadway, New York.

THE CHURCHES.

—The American Tract Society held its annual meeting in Washington March 21st. The receipts for the year reached $357,305, while the expenditures aggregated $352,141. The number of families visited during the year was 145,415.

—The use of tobacco by the Rev. Mr. Harris, pastor of a Baptist church at Omaha, has caused trouble in the congregation.

—A letter from Rev. Dr. Lansing brings to the United Presbyterian churches the sad intelligence of the death of the Rev. John Hogg, D. D., the oldest but one of their missionaries in Egypt, and ever one of the most thoroughly devoted and active laborers in any mission field.

—The Chinese at Los Angeles, Cal., have contributed $1,000 to the building of a United Presbyterian church. Rev. J. M. Hervey is the pastor of the church, and Rev. J. C. Nevin conducts a mission among the Chinese in that city.

—A curious case is reported from Oak Park, Ill. Rev. Martin Grosse, a member of the Missouri Lutheran Synod, had from the pulpit accused a certain Mr. Steinke of violation of God's Word because he had married his deceased wife's sister. Thereupon Steinke sued the pastor in the public courts for slander, placing his damages at $5,000. The court found the pastor guilty, but fined him only one cent.

—The Examiner reports religious interest in most of the Baptist schools for colored people. In Richmond Theological Seminary a number of students are planning to go to Africa as missionaries. At Hartshorn Memorial College in Richmond the students have given $80 for African missions. At the Atlanta Seminary 125 young men are enrolled, nearly half of whom are ordained, licensed, or have the ministry in view.

—Rev. B. F. Mills, of West Rutland, Vt., was engaged in January to assist in a revival meeting at Middlebury. Union meetings were held under his direction for fifteen days, and over 300 accepted Christ. He was then called to Flanders and Dover, N. J., and North Adams, Mass. At the latter place the community was greatly moved and some 500 were converted. Mr. Mills is a young man, says the Independent, a forcible speaker, with rare power over an audience, and a very unusual knowledge of both Scripture and man. He is a member of the Presbytery of Champlain, and a son of the late Rev. Thornton A. Mills, D. D., who will be remembered by some of the older ministers to-day. His work is entirely free from all sensational methods, or appeals of any kind to emotional excitement. His dependence is on the simple preaching of the truth, made powerful by the Holy Spirit. His method consists of afternoon and evening services every day, with one or two days each week to be observed as days of fasting and prayer, when a morning service is also held.

—The average Sunday plate collection in the Rev. Newman Hall's church, London, is $175; and in the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's congregation, in the great Tabernacle, $345.

—The Prime Minister of Hungary, himself a Presbyterian, has succeeded in passing a bill through the Hungarian Parliament, by which the Presbyterian church is to be represented by five ministers and five elders, to be elected by their congregations, to sit in the Upper House of the Hungarian Parliament, so as to be a counterpoise to the prelates of the Roman Catholic and Greek churches, who have seats in that House.

—A deputation of Irish Presbyterians had an interview last week with Mr. Morley, the Chief Secretary for Ireland. Replying to a statement made by the Rev. Dr. Martin to the effect that a Parliament in Dublin would be hostile to the rights of the Irish Presbyterians, Mr. Morley expressed the opinion that Mr. Gladstone's measure would make ample provisions for the security of every religious body in Ireland.

—The great revival services in Chicago closed last Sabbath, so far as Messrs. Jones and Small are concerned. The meetings, however, are continued during this week at Plymouth Congregational church. Mr. Jones preached Sabbath morning at the First Congregational church, and in the afternoon and at night at the rink. Thousands of persons were turned away from all these services. Mr. Small spoke in the morning at River Forest, and at night at the First Congregational church. Both evangelists left Chicago for their homes in Georgia Monday afternoon. They expect to meet Mr. Moody in Atlanta. Their future appointments were published in these columns last week. It is thought that some 2,500 conversions have resulted from their labors here.

JONES AND SMALL.

THE TOBACCO BUSINESS.

I hear people going about sometimes, talking about making sacrifices. "Oh, I have made great sacrifices for being religious, in order that I might be religious." Brother, listen. Every sin of my life I bundled up in one bundle, and threw down and walked off from it, and before I got ten steps away from it God had filled my pockets—every pocket I had—with $20 gold pieces. Didn't I make a sacrifice though! Ain't I crying over that dirt I threw out of my pocket! "Oh, me, the Lord is so hard on me; as soon as I empty out of my pockets all the dirt and dust that the Lord never filled my pockets with a thing but $20 gold pieces." What a sacrifice! What a sacrifice! Gave up every sin! Some people, though, in this town think I haven't. [Laughter.] They say tobacco is a sin. I am happy to announce to the audience that before breakfast Sunday morning, Brother Small took all of his stock on hand and threw it into the grate, and burnt the whole thing up, and he has thrown it to the wind forever. He will never use it any more. [Enthusiastic applause from the preachers and ladies.] I said, "Sam, have you quit to stay? And he said, "Yes, I have." "Now, old fellow," I said, "tell me why you have." "Well," he said, "Jones, I didn't quit it because I believed it was a sin, but they kept after me about it until I got resentful, and I don't want to perpetuate anything in my life that will make me resentful toward people, and I gave it up forever." And, brethren, as soon as ever I feel that feeling in my heart, I'm going to give it up too. ["Give it up now," said Dr. Scudder.] Nothing shall ever stand between me and love to God and love to man. I would run through anything in earth or heaven that would make me feel unkind toward any human being in this world. Give up sin. If you believe anything is a sin, give it up. Give it up. If anything harms you or hurts you, give it up. I believe Mr. Moody told the biggest truth of his life when he said, "A man who uses tobacco can be a Christian, but he's an awful nasty one."—Mar. 23rd.

I feel like there is just one more thing I want to say before I dismiss this audience to-night and commence the after service. Just one more thing I would say. I believe, brethren, that thirteen years ago I consecrated myself to God. I have been a consecrated man from that day until this. I have been consecrated for the glory of God and the good of humanity in the work that I have been trying to do. Down in my country I have never been in a soul's way that I knew of. In a hundred different instances I have been notified that "a habit you are given to is a stumbling-block to souls in this city." Now, I want to say to this congregation to-night that from this day until we meet God in heaven, you can tell this world Sam Jones has got no habit that is a stumbling-block to anybody. [This announcement of Mr. Jones was received by the vast audience with general and renewed applause, rendering it impossible for the speaker to proceed for some moments.] I have quit chewing tobacco. And to you, brethren, I will say this, wherever and whenever there is a fault of mine that will lead any soul astray, or that is a stumbling-block to any one, God being my helper, if I know it, that thing shall go down forever with me. [Applause.] And if there is a spot or an inch about me that is not consecrated to God and humanity to-night, I say this minute, Lord God Almighty helping me, it shall be a fight from this moment until I die. [Applause.] And I pray God Almighty that you will give me your prayers. I have had a fight that no one but God knows anything about. I have struggled and thank God I have the victory. I give God the glory and I give you the benefit, and may God bless you all, and start you to-night to give yourselves unreservedly and forever to God. [Cries of "Amen," "Amen," "Amen."] For your prayers and for your sympathy I am grateful, and if I don't do any good in Chicago may Chicago thank God Almighty she has done the poor, little, pale Southern preacher some good the balance of his life. [Applause and cries of "Amen"].—Jones, Mar. 28th.

YOUNG TEACHERS WANTED.

The art of teaching is adopted by many to gain a start in life, and often enables one to graduate in a higher course of study. The work is pleasant, profitable and noble, and being a field constantly open to advanced scholars, any book calculated to assist them in passing school examinations or obtaining certificates is hailed with delight. Such a book is the "Common School Question Book," an advertisement of which appears in this paper. It is the most comprehensive review of twelve common branches ever published, and is so arranged in question form as to make it exceedingly useful. The publisher offers to send full descriptive circulars and specimen pages for a 2-ct. stamp, in which he makes the best inducements to canvassers. The Question Book embraces 3,500 questions and answers on United States History, Civil Government, Parliamentary Rules, Penmanship, Reading, Physiology, Geography, Grammar, Written Arithmetic, Physical Geography, Orthography, Infinitives and Participles made easy. The price of the book is $1 50 prepaid. Address, A. H. CRAIG, Caldwell Wis.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People!

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of GEORGE W. CLARK, the Minstrel of Reform, a forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this book.

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, everyday walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unraveling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

REVISED ODD-FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. The ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper covers 75 cents; per dozen $4.00.

HOME HINTS.

HOW A WISE MAN BUILT HIS HOUSE.

Many of our readers will find their own experience reflected in the following paragraph from the Central Law Journal, where it is used to illustrate another subject. A gentleman wished to build for himself a nice mansion, and, of course, was exceedingly anxious to have the approbation of his friends and neighbors. So he asked the advice of all. The first said, "Here is a nice site, and I should build such a style of house." The second said, "I don't like that site nor the style of house." The third came along, and was utterly amazed at the selection of the site made by the others, and of their total want of taste in architecture. He said, "Leave off all that: here is the most charming spot for a house, and here is the most exquisite plan for a house." And so it went on until the gentleman became disgusted with his advisers, and went and selected his own site and adopted his own style of architecture, and builded a house to suit himself. By a multitude of counselors there is wisdom, but the house builders experience in seeking the advice of his neighbors found it different, and was probably wise in rejecting all their suggestions, and following the plans his own judgment dictated. The moral here conveyed does not end with locating of a house-site or the erection of the building. It will be generally found best to follow one's own impressions and taste rather than to defer to others.

SWEET HOMES.

Something more than well-arranged rooms and a well-filled pantry is necessary, in order to secure a literally "sweet" home. The housewife with an untiring vigilance, which needs to be, must keep watch from garret to cellar, lest disagreeable odors invade and take possession of the house—a domestic evil far too common among us. Many housekeepers would not be a little embarrassed if they knew how often the nostrils of visitors are taking silent and unpleasant inventory of the fried meats, boiled vegetables, burnt fat, soapy, ill-dried floors, and even the steaming contents of the wash-boiler, all the varied scents from which thoroughly pervade the house, and too often the garments of the household. The kitchen is in a large measure responsible for the odors that creep into halls, chambers, and closets, finding lodgment in carpets and curtains, in bed and other clothing, and even among books and bric a-brac. But it is not the kitchen alone which creates the unsavory atmosphere too common in many homes. Rooms not in constant use should receive at least a weekly airing, to prevent the close, musty smell almost sure to gather in unused apartments. The ways and means by which the home air can be tainted are so many, and so greatly increased by modern conveniences, that every loop-hole, however small, through which bad air and bad odors may stealthily creep, needs to be carefully guarded to secure the health and sweetness of our homes.—American Agriculturist.

WHAT TO AVOID.

So many suggestions for methods of cheap decoration find their way into print, addressed to those who have very plain homes and who are out of the way of knowing what is really good, that the need seems rather to be of hints what to avoid. While trying to adorn, it should be remembered that even severe plainness if better than bad ornament. The walls of a room and its floor are the points which are most conspicuous, and therefore most need to be saved from too brilliant coloring and too conspicuous patterns. If bare white walls or those covered with ugly paper confront us, they may be remedied at small expense by tinting with a soft, delicate color, some neutral tint being the safest to attempt; or there are to be found, almost everywhere, wallpapers at low prices in small indistinct patterns and subdued colors, which are even pretty in themselves and which give warmth and tone to the room; or the plain, coarse gray paper, which makes so excellent a background for pictures, is available, so that it seems almost wrong to weary the eye and brain of the tenants of the room with the gaudy, obtrusive papers so often used.

If the white walls or the ugly paper cannot be changed, let us not increase the ugliness by putting patches of brilliant color in any form of ornament upon them. Even the Japanese fans, which are so popular that one hardly dares utter a protest against them, do not always beautify. They may, indeed, if judiciously and moderately used on a plain, dull colored wall, make a pleasant relief to the eye, or a frieze composed of them is sometimes good. Still, we hope their day is over and that they are passing away from even the remotest farm-house walls.—Good Housekeeping.

HOW TO KEEP A CISTERN CLEAN.

Complaints are frequent of the impure water of cisterns. This is inevitable under the careless management of these useful additions to the water-supply, and is a fruitful source of what are called "malarial diseases." A roof gathers a large quantity of impure matter, dead insects, droppings of birds, dust, dead leaves, pollen from trees, etc., etc., all of which are washed into the cistern, unless some means are provided to prevent it. Even then the water should be filtered before it is used for culinary purposes. One way of preventing foul matter from entering the cistern, is to have the leader movable, and swing from a waste pipe to the cistern pipe. In dry weather the pipe is turned over the waste, and after the rain has fallen sufficient time to wash off the roofs and gutters, it is turned into the cistern pipe. The cistern is provided with a soft brick wall laid in cement, through which the water filters, coming out by the pump perfectly pure, and free from unpleasant odors.—American Agriculturist.

THE TRIBUTE OF THE PUBLIC!

THE SLOANE MEMORIAL. 24 PAGES. SECOND EDITION.

Price, 10 cents. Stamps received.

The Memorial Number of the CHRISTIAN NATION was scarcely one week before the public when the entire edition, although more than double the usual size, was entirely exhausted, and orders were still pouring in. THE PUBLIC DEMANDED A SECOND EDITION, and we are glad to give it. It will be ready March 29th. The 2d edition will be a 24-page paper, and in addition to all the contents of the first edition relating to Dr. Sloane - viz: Memorial Sermon by the Rev. David Gregg, contributions from Prof. Willson, President Hodge, President Scovel, Dr. George B Cheever and Oliver Johnson, and two original poems --will contain much new matter, including a thrilling account of the great John Brown meeting written by Dr. Sloane himself on the 25th anniversary of that event, and published in the CHRISTIAN NATION, Dec 17, 1884, additional Tributes, and the full-page portrait of Mr. Sloane, retouched and with a richer finish.

Added to this, it will contain the usual weekly contents of the paper, which include in this issue a SKETCH AND PORTRAIT of the eminent preacher, REV. DR. JOHN HALL, of this city.

In response to many inquiries, we have printed on elegant heavy plate paper, 14x11, suitable for framing, our portrait of Dr. Sloane, which we are selling at 30 cents per copy, and which will be mailed, securely wrapped, to any address, on receipt of price, in stamps or otherwise. But in order to place a portrait of the loved features in as many homes as possible, we will send the portraits in clubs of five at 20c. each, or in clubs of ten at 30c. each.

Or we will send a copy of the Portrait FREE, postage paid, to any one, not a subscriber for the CHRISTIAN NATION, who will send us their subscription for one year, $2.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only unbacribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illuetrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Myetic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkneee, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

National Christian Association.
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

General Washington Opposed to Se-CRET SOCIETIES. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearne' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

FARM AND GARDEN.

EARLY SEED SOWING.

Last spring I sowed Egyptian beets while the soil underneath was frozen, and never had a finer crop. I once sowed lettuce in February, and though we had a long and severe frost afterwards, the plants came up thick, and no harm was done.

Celery seed we sow with a hand drill, as soon as the snow disappears. I have sown it when the soil was so wet and sticky, that the coulter of the drill had to be lifted out of the ground, and the seed simply dropped on the surface. I never had earlier or better celery plants. We had considerable snow and frost afterwards, and there was no necessity of covering the seed with soil. There was no danger of the seed drying out, as is sometimes the case when sown later. I ought to remark that the soil, where the celery is sown so early, is of a mucky nature. Such soil will not "bake."

On light, sandy, dry soil, we aim to sow peas as soon as the snow disappears, and generally with decided advantage. And not content with this early sowing, we have for several years soaked the peas for forty-eight hours, and kept them until they were sprouted an inch long, before sowing. If the soil is not ready for them, their growth may be checked by putting them in a cool cellar.

Potatoes can be planted very early with little or no risk. In fact, although after the potatoes were planted, we have several times had the soil frozen an inch or more deep, we have never had them injured. Of course we have had the crop destroyed by frost after the potatoes were up. But in such a case, all early planted potatoes are likely to be injured.

"But is there any advantage in this excessively early planting?" I think so. At any rate, it does no harm. Last spring we planted as soon as the snow disappeared, and had new potatoes to eat July 2nd, and our season, in Western New York, is two or three weeks later than the neighborhood of New York City.

The true plan, so far as early garden crops are concerned, is to sow a little seed of the crop named as early as possible, but do not depend on it. Sow at the usual time, and if the early sowing or planting is destroyed, "your eggs are not all in one basket." You have lost only the seed and labor. The land can be replanted in season afterwards.—Joseph Harris in American Agriculturist.

ORCHARD AND FRUIT GARDEN FOR APRIL.

As soon as trees, shrubs, etc., are received from the nursery, heel in. i. e. temporarily bury their roots with earth at once. When this is done, planting may be done at leisure. Prepare the soil well by deep working with spade or plow. In ten years six properly planted trees will be worth more than a dozen that were set as if they were posts. In digging nursery trees many roots are cut off. Offset this by shortening the top, cutting back each branch one-third or one-half. Unfruitful trees need manure at the roots, and opening or thinning out of the head. If there is no strawberry patch on the farm, make one. Never mind the kind; plant that which can be most readily had. Any is better than none. So with currents, raspberries and blackberries; make a beginning. Every farmer's family should have all the grapes it can eat. Plant a dozen vines of the Concord now, and afterwards consider what better varieties may be planted. The Concord will produce tolerable grapes in abundance, and create a taste for something better. Vines may be set around the barns and other out-building, and along the fences. —American Agriculturist.

A Georgia gentleman is reported in the Atlanta Constitution as saying: "I can take forty Jersey cattle on a good farm and make more money than any other farmer ever made with forty negro slaves on the same land. A man who owns a herd of registered Jerseys and a Georgia farm is richer than a man who owned the same number of slaves before the war. If every slave freed in Georgia," said he, warming with his subject, "was replaced to-day with a good Jersey, in ten years Georgia would be richer than she would have been if the emancipation proclamation had never been written. You'd better not print this, though; for if you do, the Yankees might take a notion to come down and free the cows."

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

In Debility from Overwork.

Dr. G. W. Collins, Tipton, Ind., says: "I used it in nervous debility brought on by overwork in warm weather, with good results."

A Man Comes From Alabama to Express His Gratitude to an Atlanta Man.

"Is this Dr. Walter Taylor?"

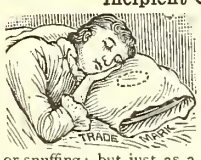
The speaker was an elderly man, of fine appearance, and evidently a stranger in the city. The question was addressed to Dr. Walter A. Taylor, who sat in his office immersed in the correspondence of his immense business.

"That is my name, sir," he replied, looking up inquiringly from his work.

"My name is Austin. I live at Culman, Ala. I have come to see you, Dr. Taylor, to express to you my gratitude."

Dr. Taylor smiled and inquired as to the occasion of his gratitude.

"You have saved my life, sir, and I come to tell you that, and to shake your hand. About a year ago I was taken with pneumonia, and it developed into a very ugly case. I was in my bed for nine months, and was harrassed and weakened with a cough that was almost constant. Nothing would relieve it. I had physician after physician, and tried remedy after remedy. I have studied medicine myself, and now in the jewelry business. I was almost worn out, and had about given up my case as hopeless. One day I staggered out of bed, to have a consultation with all the physicians, to see if I could not, as a last resort, obtain some relief from my ills. The physicians in consultation told me that they could do nothing for me, and, hardly able to walk, I made my way to a drugstore, and while in there I spoke of the consultation just held in my case to the druggist, and he said: "Here is a remedy that I hear very highly spoken of. I know nothing of it from personal experience, but it has a great reputation, and my customers like it." The remedy handed me was Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein. I took it with about the same spirit that a drowning man would catch at a straw. I had little hope of its efficacy, but I thought I ought to try everything, and therefore took the bottle. I was barely able to get back to my bed again. It was an effort for me to walk down stairs. I was disspirited, hopeless and weak beyond expression, and continually growing weaker. With the very first bottle of Sweet Gum and Mullein my condition improved. It has been less than five weeks since I began on your remedy, and now I walk and travel without the slightest inconvenience up stairs or down stairs. My cough has left me, my health almost is restored, and I am in good condition. It is my earnest conviction that Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein saved my life, and I felt that I wanted to look you in the face, and take you by the hand and tell you so. I want to tell it also for the benefit of thousands of others who are suffering, and who are growing weaker and weaker from the use of inefficient remedies."



The above is the exact statement of this remarkable case. Mr. Austin insisted on seeing Mr. Taylor's laboratory, press rooms, packing rooms, and every part of his immense establishment. He wanted to see where Sweet Gum and Mullein was made. He took the greatest interest in every part of the process, and having been a physician, was enabled to look at it intelligently and to testify to the correct curative principles involved in the materials out of which the remedy is made, and the manner in which it is compounded. After a half hour's pleasant sight-seeing, and conversation he took his departure, saying to Dr. Taylor as he went out of the door, "I am satisfied now that I have seen the man that saved my life, for I tell you Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein is what stopped the progress of my disease, when everything else had failed, and hope had almost gone." This is the testimony borne by thousands of others by letter and otherwise, but it is seldom that the proprietor of a medicine finds a man who gets on the train and rides hundreds of miles to see him that he may express his appreciation and gratitude.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the Pillow-Inhaler, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

Hon. E. L. Hedden, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the Pillow-Inhaler has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

Mr. H. G. Trele, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a Pillow-Inhaler, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the Pillow-Inhaler has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEEDLE WORK

Needle-Work: A Manual of Stitches and Studies in Embroidery and Drawn Work. This manual is an attempt to systematize and arrange in an order convenient for workers, the modern methods in Embroidery and Drawn Work. Edited by Jenny June. The author has felt the desire and the responsibility involved in aiding women to a true and practical guide to the beautiful art of needle-work. When the Angel of Mercy begged that woman might not be created because she would be abused by man, as the stronger, the Lord listened, but felt that he could not give up the whole scheme of creation, so he gave the loving Angel permission to bestow upon her any compensating gift she chose, and the Angel pityingly endowed her with tears and the love of needle-work. This book is printed on fine paper, has a handsome cover, and contains

200 Illustrations

The list of stitches, with illustrations, are: Buttonhole—Hemstitch—Brier Stitch—Crow's Foot—Herring Bone—Fedder Stitch—Two Tie—Three Tie—Drawn Work—Stem Stitch—Twisted Chain or Rope Stitch—Split Stitch—French Knot—Solid Leaf—Satin Stitch—Padding—Darning Stitch—Skeleton Outline—Couching, Kensington, Filling, Coral, Italian, Leviathan and Holbein Stitches—Applique—Interlaced Ground—Weaving Stitch—Gold and Silver Thread—Arrasene Ribbon Work, etc.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Senator Hoar yesterday introduced in Congress a bill providing for a method of inquiry by National authority in cases of murder like that of negroes recently at Carrollton, Miss.

The March debt statement shows a reduction for the month of over $24,000,000, and for the nine months of the current fiscal year of $67,000,000 against about $45,000,000 for the same nine months of the preceding year. In addition to a reduction of $20,000,000, in the bonded debt since March 1st, there has been a reduction of $15,000,000 in outstanding gold certificates, and $3,000,000 in outstanding certificates of deposit.

In the Senate Senator Cullom spoke upon the bill introduced by him to appropriate $500,000 for the construction of a monument to Abraham Lincoln.

FOREIGN.

In the House of Commons Thursday a member of the government stated that the policy inaugerated by the Marquis of Salisbury in regard to Greece would be carried out. All the powers will immediately strengthen their fleets in Greek waters.

London, April 2.—Sir Horace Rumbold, the British Minister to Greece, has been ordered to join with the other foreign diplomatic representatives at Athens in sending to the Greek Government a final strong remonstrance against Greece's warlike attitude. This remonstrance will be tantamount to an ultimatum, and if Greece ignores it the foreign fleets will act forthwith. All the foreign squadrons in the waters of Greece are being hastily reenforced.

COUNTRY.

Mr. Powderly and his associate members of the Executive Board of the Knights of Labor surrendered Tuesday. Mr. Gould refused to interfere in the matter at all, and Mr. Powderly finally issued an order for the Knights to return to work on General Manager Hoxie's promise to meet a committee of Missouri Pacific employes to settle existing difficulties by arbitration or mutual agreement. According to this the men must return to work before any negotiations can proceed, and the strikers are to be received not as Knights of Labor, but as Missouri Pacific employes merely.

Mr. Powderly telegraphed Chairman Irons Tuesday night to have the strikers return to work as soon as possible. At East St. Louis mobs prevented the departure of trains, except on the Wabash road, the interests of which are being looked after by deputy marshals. The aid of Illinois militia has been invoked, and certain companies have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness. Employes of the St. Louis Transfer Company struck Tuesday morning when informed that the company had decided to furnish them a squad of United States marshals as protection in stopping the ferryage of freight across the river. Unknown persons tampered with the rails near Parsons, Kan., wrecking a freight train, resulting in serious injuries to a mail agent.

The executive of the Knights of Labor at St. Louis issued a card to the public, stating that the committees sent to the railway officials to effect a settlement of the strike had been either treated with specious interfringes or refused a hearing. At East St. Louis Governor Oglesby addressed the strikers, warning them to keep within legal bounds. In reply the spokesman of the strikers deprecated all acts of violence, but complained that while the railways were willing to pay the wages demanded, they refused to deal with them as Knights of Labor. The Mayor and merchants of St. Louis requested Gov. Oglesby to send militia, to which he replied that the full powers of the sheriff had not yet been put forth, but should troops come to East St. Louis, they would mean business. A regiment of the Kansas militia has been ordered to Parsons where mobs have prevented the running of trains. At De Soto, Mo., seven of the strikers were arrested by the sheriff, and warrants are out for fifty others.

The great railroad strike has culminated in bloodshed at Fort Worth, Texas. A posse of deputies from the sheriff's office were detailed to protect a train which was pulled out of the Missouri Pacific yards. They were fired upon from ambush by the strikers and one of the officers was killed, two were mortally wounded, and one of the strikers was hurt. It was rumored that the strikers threatened to burn the town. The governor has ordered out the troops and the citizens are to be in arms to protect their lives and property. A dispatch received from St. Louis last Sunday night states that Powderly's New York order had been revoked by the General Committee of the Knights, and that a bitter war was liable to result.

About 2,500 miners on the Baltimore and Ohio road and its branches struck Thursday for an advance of one quarter of a cent per bushel.

Sixteen hundred delegates from Knights of Labor organizations will hold a convention at Cincinnati, April 17th, and Mr. Powderly is expected to preside.

Fire broke out in the Planters' House, the oldest hotel in St. Louis. There were about 150 guests and fifty employes in the house at the time. All escaped save four servant girls, who perished from heat and suffocation. The main portion of the building was not damaged and the loss was only about $5,000.

An unusual season of meteorological disturbance culminated in New York, Wednesday. Rain fell for seventy-two hours. At night telegraphic communication was wholly suspended between New York and the rest of the world. Again and again electrical convulsions stopped the working of every wire in the Western Union office.

Specials from North Georgia and Alabama, March 30th, show heavy losses from freshets. It has rained continuously since the previous Sunday. The rainfall in Atlanta has already been over ten inches. Rivers are flooded, and great loss of property reported. Every railroad leading out of Atlanta has suspended traffic. Many bridges are down, and it is thought others will fall to-night.

A special from Prattville states that a cotton factory there has been undermined and fallen in and is a total wreck. The loss is $85,000. Two hundred laborers are thrown out of employment.

A cyclone swept across a portion of Bullock county, Alabama, and in its path struck a negro church in which a funeral was going on. The church was blown down and four persons killed and ten badly injured.

The Lincoln Park Commissioners of Chicago are going to build a breakwater, from one to two miles long, about 400 feet from the shore to protect the Park and Lake Shore drive. It is said the surface of the lake is now two and a half feet higher than it was seven years ago.

Fire at Key West, Fla., destroyed a large number of buildings and caused a loss which will aggregate about $1,000,000. There was no water at hand with which to fight the flames.

Two children of Thomas Rollison, living near East Saginaw, Mich., died Tuesday from eating wild parsnips, and their mother is not expected to recover from the effects of the poison.

Seventeen buildings with a number of horses, mules, and cows, were destroyed by fire at Columbia, Mo., Sunday, entailing a loss of $63,450. Fire at Bronson, Mich., Tuesday morning, burned four stories, a woman and her daughter perishing in the flames, while other persons were badly burned or wounded.

A cold wave is general throughout Texas, with heavy snow in some districts. Thousands of sheep having been sheared in the past two weeks, stockmen fear heavy losses.

Geronimo and three other Apache chiefs, with 29 hostiles and 48 squaws, surrendered to General Crook on Saturday, and are now being conducted to Fort Bowie, A. T.

The two leaders and seven of the mob who drove the Chinese out of Oregon City recently were indicted by the United States Grand Jury at Portland Tuesday.

A steamer collided with a bridge at New Orleans Tuesday and sank, two men being drowned. Another steamer, which was aiding in the rescue of the crew, exploded her boilers, four persons were blown overboard, perishing. Five others were seriously wounded.

It is stated that Dr. Luther C. Rose, of Palmyra, Ohio, has perfected a telephone transmitter which will render conversation between New York and Chicago an easy matter. A test of a circuit of 878 miles was made Monday, resulting in the ticking of a watch being plainly heard.

The extravagant dress of our American women once astonished a well-known English clergyman, who had preached a morning in a magnificent New York church. As he watched the congregation filing out of the aisles, he asked, "Do American ladies, then, go to some place of amusement after church? They are dressed for the theater."

The laboring men of America never had a truer friend than Abraham Lincoln. During his Presidential term he counseled the workingmen of New York against the spirit of revenge, and strongly but kindly rebuked the agrarian spirit which now is breaking out in strikes and boycotts. Said he: "That some should be rich, shows that others may be rich, and hence is but encouragement to industry and enterprise. Let not him who is houseless pull down the house of another, but let him labor diligently and build one for himself; thus by example assuring that his own shall be safe when built."

A non-affiliating member of the Knights of Labor lodge lately said to a Chicago friend, that it would be worth his life to reveal the secrets of the order; that their vengeance was much more to be dreaded than that of the Freemasons. His opinion is evidently shared by others in that order. Last week a young man named Schmidt hung himself in Davenport, Iowa, being driven crazy by his fear of the Knights of Labor. He had accidentally revealed some of the secrets of the society, and was therefore expelled. The matter worked upon his mind until suicide was the result.

It does not necessarily follow that the Missouri Pacific railway, because it is run to pay dividends on fictitious capital amounting to $39,500 a mile, is unjust to its immediate employes in the matter of wages. It owns 847 miles of road, includes in its system 995 miles, and operates in all 6,046 miles, the Texas & Pacific included. The 847 miles owned are represented by $29,974,800 in stock, and $28,895,000 in bonds, actually issued. The road is capitalized, therefore, at $69,503 a mile. It has besides received State aid in money and has had land grants. A new road can be constructed in the West for $16,000 a mile, but allowing the cost to be $20,000, and the equipment of engines, cars, etc., to be $10,000 a mile, the artificial capital is therefore $39,500 a mile. One way to pay interest on this watered stock is by cutting down expenses to the lowest limit; another is to overcharge in traffic rates. There seems to be no complaint of low wages; if there were the men seem to be able to secure relief from such a distress. But the people along the line who pay freight one way on produce, and the other way on goods, are the real complainants. They, too, are the ones who have most suffered from this war of lodge against labor.

Mr. Powderly, chief of the Knights of Labor lodge, is a devoted Catholic, and in his long secret circular to the members of the order two weeks since, his mention of the interference of the church referred to the action of the Romish bishops in several dioceses condemning the order and commanding Catholics to leave it. The Mollie Maguires in Pennsylvania, when committing their greatest atrocities were members of the Catholic church, and at command of their priests those more active in the order would cease for a few months to work with the Mollies in order to keep good standing in the church. It is to this church Powderly refers when he says: "The church has been watching our order for years. In our infancy we had but little power for good or evil. To-day we are the strongest as well as the weakest labor organization on earth. Strong in numbers and principles, strong in the justice of our demands, if properly made, we are weak in the methods we use to set our claims before the world. Strikes are often the forerunner of lawless action. One blow brings on another, and if a single act of ours encourages the anarchist element we must meet with the antagonism of the church. I warn members against hasty, ill-considered action. The church will not interfere with us so long as we maintain the law."

If the railways and the public at large suffer, and that severely, from the strikes, it is but reaping what they have sown. Year in and year out, at the demand of their patrons, the railways have kept up their Sabbath violation, breaking down the conscience and morals of their men and training them to disorder and crime. East St. Louis, where the battle rages most furiously and with least reason, has long been noted for its outbreaks, which once and again have been settled by the military authority of the State. It is a city full of Sabbath-breaking. Many of our railway managers are Christian men; why can they not see that reason, law, policy and religion are combined against Sabbath railroading, and begin a movement, which they are well able to bring to a successful issue, against this evil. If the railway men would strike for their Sabbath, their demands would have the almost universal sympathy of the people. Let the men continue to demand double pay for Sabbath work until it becomes unprofitable as well as unlawful.

The agitation of the Sabbath question among the workiugmen of Germany shows that the lessons we are learning are of world-wide influence. A recent conferenee of soap-boilers, leather-dressers, moulders, porcelain and glassmakers, cigarmakers, engravers and butchers was held in Berlin, and resolutions were adopted condemning Sunday work, and urging legal prohibition. Mr. Powderly and his order would do well to note this. They can make no genuine and lasting reform in the condition of the laborer while they ignore God and his laws. Powderly says he has had no Sabbath for seven years. The railroad men and the Knights of Labor know no Sabbath in their attempts to settle their difficulties. They were in conference in New York on Sabbath the 28th of April just as they had been on the preceding Saturday, or as they were on the following Monday. In this desecration they place themselves on a level with the gamblers, saloons, horse-racers and bummers. The Germans of this class lately met in Cincinnati held meetings to demand absolute "personal liberty" for Sabbath reveling. Fifty German pastors met immediately in that city to protest against such ruinous sentiments.

KING ALCOHOL AND THE DOCTORS.

BY REV. J. D. GEHRING.

Now, then, doctor, as I don't want the argument all on my side, I wish you would, if you can, produce one statistical item, or any other fact, to show that the use of alcohol, as a curative or preventive remedy, improved health, prolonged life, or increased the efficieucy of the individual soldier, or of any branch of the service. Or, if you have no army experience, you may give such evidence from your professional experience.

It is very common, I know, for even good temperance people to oppose such evidence as the above by referring to cases of sick or injured persons having been "kept alive" or "restored" by whisky bitters or port wine. But, we ought always in such cases, to stop long enough to inquire whether such persons were really, undoubtedly cured, or "kept alive for weeks," by those potions; or, whether they did not rather recover and live on in spite of the poisonous doses. For, if anything is to be proved by such inferences, what can we prove by the fact that very many sick and injured persons, to whom alcoholic stimulants are administered by the advice of a physician, do not recover, but die?

That I am treading upon "holy ground"—speaking from the doctors' standpoint—I know from experience. Let me illustrate with one incident:

Several years ago, when I was pastor of a church in Illinois, the temperauce people of Trenton, a town having a large German population and, of course, many saloons, invited me to come over and talk to a German audience on temperance. For entertainment during my stay I was directed to the residence of the pastor of the Presbyterian church. If my memory is not at fault, "mine host" was then a widower (or bachelor), and "sojourned" with the family of a venerable doctor of the place, who was, also, an officer in the Presbyterian church. Well, during the course of the evening the conversation was turned into the prohibition channel, and the utter annihilation of the liquor traffic was freely advocated; only the old doctor seemed to be a little conservative. But, my dear sir, you should have seen the old patriarch "bristle up" when I ventured to speak against the use of alcohol as a medicine! Had I taken the same ground against the use of quinine, he could not have manifested more earnest zeal in his defence. He had not been eloquent when discussing the temperance movement, and I had concluded that he was somewhat like Moses, "slow of speech, and of a slow tongue;" but in defence of the physicians' whisky bottle I found he could be furiously eloquent and bold. I must confess that the brief "tilt" with the doctor did uot increase my enthusiasm for the lecture that eveniug. I fouud just what I feared; plenty of empty pews in the church. One sweep of the eye around the room convinced me that my (German) audience was not there—had not been specially invited, quite likely. We took a vote on the question, and it was unanimously decided that I should deliver my lecture in English. The doctor's stern face, so conspicuously promiuent before me, kept me conscious of the fact that the prohibition question, as I understood it, believed it, and was in the habit of discussing it, was not popular in that audience.

Before I left Trenton I was thoroughly couviuced that, in the estimation of the old doctor at least, if not of all the "temperance people" of the place, I had not earned my money. They evidently expected me to "give it to the Dutch" red hot, but to leave "decent people" alone.

Now then, doctor, as I know you to be good natured and patient, I wish to ask you a few more direct questions bearing on the prevailing custom of the "Profession" to give your patieuts alcoholic stimulants:

Does whisky act beneficially upon the digestive organs—or, in other words, upon the nerves of the stomach? Does it create a healthy appetite, and does it assist the digestive and assimulative proeesses? What is the philosophy of the matter?

Let us honestly seek the truth in answering these questions.

A dose of whisky, or bitters, will excite the delicate and sensitive nerves of the stomach for a short time, and this excitation or irritation you delude your poor patient to believe is hunger—appetite. A dose of capsicum produces the same effect, but does less harm. I know very well that you claim to give these stimulants according to the requirements of the case and the condition of the patient: but let me ask, why in the name of sound logic do you not administer "Bitters" or "Port," "Sherry," and such like, as you do quinine, calomel, belladonna, or morphine? The law which governs the administration of the latter, must, surely, also govern the former, when used as a medicine: but your practice in the case of alcoholic prescriptions is contrary to medical science and law, contrary to good sense, and contrary to the experience and testimony of some of the most noted leaders in your profession.

The time comes in the history of a case when, according to your judgment, your patient needs a little tonic or stimulant "to aid the recuperative processes of nature." How do you proceed? Instead of placing in the hands of a responsible nurse or attendant a bottle of the purest alcohol you can procure, and giving explicit directions with it to administer a certain number of drops in a specified quantity of water, you take out your note-book and hastily write:

"℞. Best Port, one pint.
Sig. Take a good swallow three times a day."

Some one goes to the drugstore (or to a saloon) and gets a pint of the "best" port wine. (Every druggist keeps the "best" you know). Now, you know no more of the strength, quality, or purity of the article your patient gets and uses than you know about the amount of salt contained in the Atlantic ocean. Neither do you know, or care, how much or how often your patient takes of your prescription. Quite probably the taste and effect of the "medicine" are so agreeable that the "dose" is increased and repeated at random, and you, the physician, are none the wiser: unless, indeed, complaint should be made that your patient got drunk and had "a relapse."

Now this, as you must acknowledge, is the usual practice: but how about the law? In regard to quinine, for instance, you believe that the purest is the best. If some of the medicines you use are found to be deficient in quality, adulterated, you wish to be quite sure that the adulterations are harmless. But even then you will give the apothecary, who sold them to you "a blowing up," and threaten to get your supplies elsewhere.

Now why, in the name of common sense and of "suffering humanity," do you not apply the same rule to alcohol? If you administer it, in any and all cases, as a medicine, you desire so have the purest you can get. You want to be so sure of its purity that you can guarantee the article to your patient. Then, and only then, can you know just exactly what your patient is taking, how much he ought to take, and when he ought to stop taking it.

When you prescribe whisky "Bitters" or "Old Port" at random, however, your patient gets a little of the "medicine" you want to give him, and a large percentage of something else—what that something else is, you never stop to inquire. The most harmless part of "good Port" is the amount of water it contains, and of that there is nearly one-half, or, say, nineteen gallons to a barrel of forty gallons.

Next in importance, as to quantity, is the article that you are after (the alcohol), of which fifteen gallons to the forty is sometimes added. Then you have a mix-up of three gallons sugar syrup, one gallon of vinegar, two gallons of cherry juice, four ounces tincture of gum kino, four ounces of tartaric acid, four ounces of "Port" wine oil, and three lbs. of malva flowers, steeped in the water. Here you have forty gallons, or about one hundred and sixty dollars worth (retail) of the "Best Port wine!" The "wine," however, as you see, is not there, for there is not a spoonful of grape juice in the whole barrel.

Have you ever read a little book written by Eli Johnson, the great temperance lecturer, "Drinks from Drugs: or The Magic Box"? That little book gives all the information any doctor ought to need, to prove to his entire satisfaction that when he prescribes "Port," "Sherry," "Brandy," or any other such drinks, he prescribes poisons of the most injurious and deadly kind. I am indebted to that excellent little book for several of my statements. And right here I want to give you another item which shows that all the fancy liquors and wines known to the trade, and many of which are "guaranteed to be imported," are compounds of the most villainous kind. I quote from page sixty-two of that book the following testimony, from the hand of James Morton, president of the "Temperance Brotherhood of Christian Churches:"

"BROOKLYN, N. Y., Oct. 21, 1881.

"To whom it may concern:—

"In the autumn of 1875 I was in the large trial-room of the Board of Police and Excise of the city of Brooklyn, where there were more than two hundred liquor dealers present, when the Hon. B. E. Hale—president of the Temperance Brotherhood of Christian Churches at the time—said to the liquor dealers: 'Gentlemen, I will give any of you fifty dollars for one pint of pure French Brandy; or, I will give you fifty dollars for one pint of pure port wine. You may have ten days to deliver them in, and when delivered, you shall have your money.'

"The challenge was not accepted. Truly yours,

"JAMES MORTON."

Now, I wish to direct your attention again to that port wine, the formula for which I gave you. The recipe calls for fifteen gallons of "pure spirits, proof," to nineteen gallons of water. To show that even this villainous concoction is a superior article, I will give you another formula for making port wine, and —mind my words—these formulas are not inventions of my own, but are, verbatim, as found in a book largely used by the wholesale and retail liquor trade as a guide book. The book bears this title: "Process for the Manufacture, Improvement and Imitation of Liquors." Here is the formula for making "Port."

"33 gallons prepared cider [!!]; 5½ gallons neutral spirits; 4 pounds refined sugar; 2 ounces tincture kino; 1 ounce tartaric acid; 6 ounces powdered rhantany root; 3 pounds raisins; 1 qrt. alcoholic starch in solution."

Here again, you see, there is no grape juice used; and only five and one-half gallons of that which, the doctor thinks, his patient is in need of "to build him up, and to give him a good appetite." Or, in other words, the poor victim of professional blindness is compelled to filter through his debilitated stomach eleven quarts of "prepared cider," that he may get the doubtful benefit of one quart of diluted alcohol. And this outrage upon human nature the doctor is pleased to style, "toning up the system"(!)

But, it is of interest here to inquire, what is the chief ingredient, next to the water, of this great "Stand by" of the medical profession? In the formula above given it is called "prepared cider;" and, in the same book which reveals the port wine secret, we find also explicit directions for making the "cider." This is how it is done:

"IMITATION CIDER.

"35 gallons soft water; 35 pounds brown sugar; 2 pounds tartaric acid; 1 quart of yeast.

"DIRECTIONS:

"Stir up well, and let stand 24 hours, with bung out. Then add 3 gallons neutral spirits, and bung tight. Let stand 48 hours and it is ready for use."

Following we find this foot note: "This cider, though not so good for fine wines, will answer all general purposes. Either neutral spirit or alcohol may be used in either formula if greater strength is desired for the wines; or, tincture of pepper may be used for the purpose when economy is the object."

Which, do you suppose, doctor, is generally "the object?"

Parkville, Mo.

THE UNITED BRETHREN COMMISSION.

BY PROF. C. J. KEPHART.

The admission by Bro. Floyd that the constitution needed "no formal acceptance," is an admission that it never received more than the "tacit acceptance of the church." For there is no authoritative record to show that the General Conference of 1841 was authorized to adopt a constitution for the church. If Bro. Floyd denies this statement, I here and now call upon him to present such record. If this be not done, this part of the discussion is closed so far as I am concerned. What if I had called Prof. Drury to my help? I should have no reason for shame. I did not, however, call him, but put on the witness-stand one more formidable than he, the records of the church. Bro. Floyd is hereby requested to cross-question the witness.

My statements in defense of the Commission are given, not because I think the appointment of the Commission was the best thing that could have been done. I am not dealing with that question. Nor do I defend the work of the Commission, because I think it perfect. I simply argue that the appointment of the Commission is in perfect harmony with the constitution and usage of our church, and that the report of the Commission condemns secret societies on the only ground upon which their moral character can be determined.

The General Conference of 1885 did not in any sense nullify any part of the constitution. Section 4 of Art. II. does say that "No rule or ordinance shall at any time be passed to change or do away with the Confession of Faith as it now stands." This, however, only forbids the General Conference from making any such rule or ordinance. It is simply a restriction upon the General Conference, and in no way forbids an amendment or change of the Confession, if such amendment or change have the proper approval of the membership. This will be evident when we remember that it is the General Conference which makes rules, and also that the article on amendments except no part of the constitution from amendment. The General Conference of 1885 passed no rule or ordinance to change or do away with the Confession of Faith. Hence, it in no sense nullified this article. Nor did it nullify the next article quoted by Bro. Floyd. It interpreted the word "request" to be equivalent to the word "vote." The only reasonable interpretation that it can have is the same interpretation given by Dr. Davis to the same word eight years ago, to his class in pastoral theology, and reiterated by him since that time. I accepted the Doctor's interpretation then, and I accept the same to-day. The General Conference also interpreted the words "whole society" to mean the church at large, as distinguished from its representative body, the General Conference, an interpretation that is entirely proper when we remember that in the constitution of 1837 the right to amend was given to the General Conference, and also by the fact that it is universally recognized that only those who choose to vote should have a voice in matters of government. If the General Conference has the right to pass on the validity or invalidity of the constitution as it did in 1849; if it has the right to interpret the Confession of Faith as it did in 1857, when it changed the words "this respect" to "these respects," it has also the right to interpret this clause of the constitution, especially when the interpretation is reasonable, as this one is. At this point there was no attempt at nullification, but a distinct recognition of every right guaranteed to the membership of the church.

Bro. Floyd next lays it down as a universal principle that "No legislative body has the right to delegate its responsibilities and privileges of legislation to another body." This I deny. It is true only when the right to thus delegate "responsibilities and privileges" is denied by fundamental law or established usage. When it is not thus denied, there is nothing to prevent one body from delegating authority more than another.

This is exactly the condition in our church. There are only three respects in which the constitution of our church forbids the General Conference from delegating its authority. "All ecclesiastical authority herein granted to make or repeal any rule of discipline is vested in a General Conference," etc. "The General Conference shall define the boundaries of the annual conferences." "The General Conference shall . . elect bishops." These are the only places in which authority is restricted wholly to the General Conference, viz.: "to make or repeal any rule of discipline," "to define boundaries of annual conferences," "to elect bishops." Outside of these restrictions there is nothing in the constitution to prohibit the General Conference from delegating any authority it may possess. If so, let us see it.

The action of the General Conference has been all along in harmony with this idea. The case of the Commission is by no means the first in which the General Conference has delegated its authority. On page 52 of the discipline of 1881 we read: "The Bishops shall hold annual meeting in which they shall determine the time of holding the annual conferences, decide questions of discipline, adopt measures to secure uniformity in their administration, and when circumstances demand it, appoint fast and thanksgiving seasons." Here is given to the Board of Bishops authority that as truly deserves being called legislative as any authority conferred on the Commission. Article VII. of the Constitution of the Missionary Society, a creature of the General Conference, confers upon that body certain powers which are as truly legislative as is any authority given the Commission, especially that part relating to the appropriation of the general funds of the church.

Article V. of the Constitution of the Board of Education, another creature of the General Conference, says: "To accomplish these results the Board may cause an annual collection to be taken. . . . "If it deem best it may appropriate" (the word evidently should be "apportion") "the amount to be raised to the various conferences." To this Board is given the right to lay a tax upon the entire church, usually one of the exclusive prerogatives of the supreme legislative body. A reference to the rules of the Printing Establishment in connection with the constitution of our other general Boards, will convince any one that the General Conference claims the right to confer legislative authority upon, or withhold it from the Boards which it creates. Rule 2, says: "The legislative authority herein granted shall be vested in the General Conference of said church," a statement like which nothing appears in the constitution or rules of any other Board which the General Conference has created, while in fact it has conferred legislative authority upon the others. In seeming violation of the express terms of the constitution, we find on page 58 of the discipline of 1881 that the General Conference has even delegated away the authority, under certain circumstances, to elect a bishop.

Now, did the General Conference authorize the Commission "to make or repeal any rule of discipline?" It did not. The amendments which they provide have no force whatever until approved by the proper vote of the church. The plan of submitting the amendments cannot be called a rule of discipline any more than can the measures adopted by the different general boards for the accomplishing of the work committed to them. The Commission was given a work, viz.: to formulate and present to the church-amendments to the Confession of Faith and constitution, and also authority to provide such method as in their judgment was necessary to secure the fullest expression of the will of the people respecting those amendments. No provision made by the Commission can, with any propriety whatever, be called a rule of discipline.

Bro. Floyd still objects because all this is "to be done without reporting to the General Conference for its approval or rejection." Where does our constitution give to the General Conference the right to approve or reject an amendment to the constitution which has been approved by the membership. That would be a strange procedure, for the people to express their approval of a measure, and then elect a body to represent them, and give to that body authority to reject what they have approved. The constitution says that the only way in which that paper may be altered is "by request of two-thirds of the whole society;" and gives to the General Conference no authority whatever to express its approval or disapproval of the will of the membership. The only office which the General Conference has in this matter is to determine that that expression has been properly received and to publish that expression, and this office it has in a perfectly constitutional manner delegated to the Commission and the Board of Bishops.

Bro. Floyd asks me to state the ground on which the proposed article on secrecy condemns secret societies. On the ground that they infringe upou the rights of those outside their organization, and their principles and practices are injurious to the Christian character of their members. It is the statement of a fundamental principle, just as is the expression, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Neither of these statements make any application of themselves to individual cases. It does not pertain to law to make application of itself to the cases which come under it. That belongs to the judiciary. But he asks "How can it be determined what secret societies do thus infringe?" I answer in the same way that the court determines who has committed a certain crime by examination of evidence. But he replies, that puts the church in the position of plaintiff to prove the charges before conviction can be obtained. I answer, most assuredly. The church no more than the civil courts can pass judgment against any man or organization until he or it has been proved guilty.

Bro. Floyd's remark puts him in the very awkward position of favoring the condemnation of all secret societies without any proof of their guilt other than that they are secret. If our church has been going on all these years, as Bro. Floyd's remark indicates that he thinks it has and still should do, condemning these organizations a priori, I consider it high time to call a halt, and get back to something sensible. If it can be shown that the fact that societies are secret causes them to come under the condition as given in the report of the Commission, then we may condemn them for that one feature; not, however, because they are secret, but because their being secret renders them prejudicial to the welfare of either their members or those without them.

A SECOND STEP FOR THE U. B. COMMISSION MEN.

BY MRS. A. BUTLER.

Dear Cynosure:—You have had the Commission question ably discussed in your columns by the learned and those in high places, but there are those in the lower walks of life in our church, who have said little, yet feel deeply on this subject. Some have toiled thirty, forty, and even fifty years, often denying themselves of the comforts of life that they might have a few dollars for the missionary cause, and the various interests of the church. This they have done year after year, gladly, because they loved the pure, stringent rules the church had set up as a wall of separation between those who come to her for help and the outside world.

Such members often looking over, under and through all this talk of law, constitution, confession of faith, etc., feel and believe the object of all this business is to get rid of this rule against secret societies. All classes seem to know that this is the real object. I have been surprised to hear some who have not read the Cynosure, nor heard of the Conservator, express their belief so decidedly on this point.

Yes, there in our Discipline stands that rule which completely bars out those who have united in a brotherhood with rumsellers, infidels, and other evildoers, and that rule must be got out of the way at any cost. We believe this thought and desire was father of the Commission, and that the originators of that paper never expected it to stand nor be adopted by the church; but to serve as something to attract the attention and divide the members in sentiment, thus demoralizing the church and making way for secrecy to slide in under cover of the fight about law, constitution, etc.

Believing this, we are not so anxious to know whether this commission business is according to the laws of our land, or any other land, but is it according to the law of God? and is it right to fellowship these orders? These are the questions that concern us most.

We turn to the higher law and find it written, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness; but rather reprove them,' and we wonder who will dare refuse to fellowship them, or dare reprove them under the new law.

But then we are told it will only admit minor orders, and they are harmless. We turn again to the sacred pages and read, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," and as we look around, we find even in these, many unbelievers, those who scoff at Christianity, often the very leaders of these orders being ungodly. But still we search the law of God, and find Jesus himself commanding his followers to "Swear not at all; neither by heaven, nor by the earth"—"nor by any other oath," James adds, and we wonder who will dare teach that they may and be guiltless? Can a church or nation trample these plain commands under foot and yet prosper? Did Israel of old? Was not Solomon a "good man"? But what does God say when he took "strange wives and worshiped their gods"? "Forasmuch as this is done of thee, and thou hast not kept my covenant and my statutes, which I commanded thee, I will surely rend the kingdom from thee, and give it to thy servant." Jesus said, "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him to a wise man, which built his house upon a rock," etc. But how about the teacher who not only does not do them, but teaches others not to. Read the first part of the 4th chapter of Deuteronomy to see how God requires his people to keep his commands.

It makes one heart-sick to think of the condition of our church. There should be a new "Outlook" written. It might be humiliating, but then if given faithfully, it might do good. As we look over the past history of the church we see her as an adamantine wall, standing firm against slavery, intemperance, and secrecy, until slavery has fallen, and intemperance and secrecy are becoming the foremost questions of the day; and just as such strong men as Joseph Cook begin to raise the warning voice and turn their batteries against these evils, the leaders in our church begin to haul down their colors and spike their guns.

Ours has always been a prohibition church, but under the new law United Brethren in the lodge will be expected to vote as their grand masters dictate, and that may be to support a brother saloon-keeper or distiller. From our new "Outlook" we are a band of sisters whose hearts have been touched with the lost condition of the Chinamen coming to our shores struggling to build or purchase mission rooms in which to teach these poor heathen the way of life. We rejoice to know that a splendid building has been secured and already success attends their efforts, but our hopes sink and our hearts are made sad, as week after week the news comes that an oath-bound secret organization is murdering the benighted heathen, and driving them from our shores. We tremble for the woman's mission in Portland, but blush with shame when we think that our law makers are willing to rend our church in twain to bring in this and kindred orders.

As we have seen, our mission in Africa prospered beyond all our expectations. We have thought it was because of the faithful manner in which our church has met the curse of slavery in our land, and also faithfully taught these truths to the African in his own country—that slavery, secrecy, and polygamy are sins to be shunned.

In the Conservator of March 4th we have these ringing words from Bro. Gomer: "All children taught in our schools have constantly held up before them the fact that all secret orders are sinful heathenism, and contrary to the Word of God." And further on he says, "If the church in America was only as squarely set against secrecy as we are here, there would not be this present trouble."

The query comes to our minds how is this faithful teaching to be eradicated from the minds of these new converts without causing them to stumble? Who is willing to take this responsibility? Who willing to thus "offend one of these little ones," and lead them into sin? Who is the Jereboam that is thus willing to make "Israel to sin," and like the son of Nebat have this reproach forever attached to their name—this the man or these the men, that caused the U. B. church to sin! They tell us they have changed their mind on this subject. If they have why not take one more step and change churches, and leave those who cannot change their views while the Word of God stands as it is, without bringing their souls into condemnation, and thus settle this vexed question and reach the peace they talk so much about. First pure, then peaceable, is the law of heaven.

We need not fear for the cause of truth. Only let us be careful in this sifting time that we do not take our stand with the chaff, that will be burned, but strive to ever stand on God's eternal truth, let the consequences in this life bring us what they may. Let us be sure that we keep our "windows open toward Jerusalem," and the lions will never harm us. And "If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace."

SELF-HELP FOR WORKINGMEN.

(George May Powell in the April Century.)

Helping to self-help is a measure potent to prevent labor troubles, and fruitful of large results for good. Capital should help labor to stand alone. Under this head the definition of the capitalist by Smiles, as "merely one who does not spend all he earns," is important. By parity of reasoning, "capital" and "savings" are synonymous; aud the mutual interests of capital and labor are promoted by helping laborers to become capitalists. Hosts of mechanics never rise above journeymen's ranks, because they never have enough ready money to start business for themselves. The moment a man has a reasonable prospect ahead of such a change, he becomes conservative. He is not now so likely to be a factor of labor troubles. Twenty-five cents a day, beginning at twenty-one years of age, put either into a savings-bank or an endowment life insurance policy, would give a mechanic at forty years more money in hand than most successful men have had for a start in the world. The drink and tobacco bills of any one of hundreds of thousands of mechanics would easily carry through such a scheme to secure working capital. The endowment is better, perhaps, than the savings-bank, in that it is impossible to withdraw it, and probably lose accumulating capital on some transient scheme before the "independence fund" has reached a sum sufficient to be effective, or before the man has experience needed to handle his capital wisely. During the last half century this policy among British mill operatives has come much in vogue. One who is laying his course thus finds "birds of a feather flock together." Habits of sobriety and of saving lead the carpenter or the mason to study the higher branches of his trade, and to attention and application, which secure higher wages and less loss of time on sprees. So he gains ability to double the ratio of his fund, and probably has, besides, an extra dollar a day with which to buy a home and better food, furniture, and clothing.

Every million men making such use of a dollar a day throw over three times as much into the scale of home consumption of manufactures as the value of the total annual yield of all our gold and silver mines. Under-consumption, far more than over-production, is to-day the lion in the path of our industries. A quarter of the money working-people worse than waste in liquor and tobacco would give more and better and much-needed home comforts for themselves; would set looms and spindles, forges and lathes rolling out a labor anthem pitched to the key of plenty of work and good pay. It would at once create and consume a volume of productions, making a tangible difference in the output of manufactures. It would help both capital and labor to help themselves. Viewed exclusively from commercial and from politico-economic standpoints, the waste of national wealth by the working-people in drink and tobacco causes more of the trouble between labor and capital than all other causes combined. It has richly repaid some English manufacturers to both suggest these points to their workpeople, and then help them to plan and execute to the end of carrying them into practice. It would not less richly reward American manufacturers to follow the good example. "Nature abhors a vacuum." This is true in other than material realms. The mill owner may be sure that his employes, like his children, will be filling up with bad habits unless he helps them to fill up with good ones. If he enters into their plans with sympathy, he can lead them in wisdom's ways. It is not enough to provide night-schools. Mere mental education has well been characterized as "making clever devils." Teaching his people morals and habits of thrift will help the employer quite as much as the employe. Thus will more and better work be got by a given wage expenditure.

It is hard to get people to begin, and carry out, system in schemes for saving. Naturally a person not accustomed to saving regularly thinks the weekly earning so small that laying by anything from it is next to impossible. It does them good to know some facts in this connection: to know that savings-bank records show the largest deposits have not been in times of high wages. The pressure of low wages is found to lead to provident plans and habits. On the other hand, the abandon born of a period of high prices for work has the opposite effect. Further, the largest averages of deposits are not among those paid the highest wages; the principal depositors in Manchester saving-banks, for example, being domestic servants. Consequently, the people want reminding that they need not wait for some time of high wages in the dim future to begin systematic savings.

Trying to ape the rich has kept millions of poor people from where they would ever be able even to begin to live in the style aimed at. This trouble is great in the Old World, but far greater in republican America. The effort of the masses to live beyond their means has created the pressure resulting in many a labor upheaval.

There is no independence, in a secular sense, without liberty and competence. Keeping out of debt and adding something, little though it be, to savings, are the keys to liberty. The man with one hundred dollars ahead, and gaining fifty dollars a year, though earning only ten dollars a week, is better off than one earning fifty dollars a week, but living up to his means. The latter can never earn a home; the former may do so.

There is no better investment for a capitalist than to teach these things to those in his employ. If this suggestion is considered utopian, go with me one hundred and fifty miles north-westerly from London, to a town on the dreamily beautiful banks of the Aire. There you may see what is so much more than has ever been hinted at here, that you will say, like the Queen of Sheba, "The half had not been told." Here is a model town built by Sir Titus Salt, not more for his vast alpaca factories than for his beloved people. As you go about the town, it will seem, as compared with the most highly favored of even New England manufacturing towns, like fairy land. Nearly a thousand cottages have been built for the operatives. These homes are bowered in vines and roses. The streets are broad and adorned with trees. Not common schools alone, but those for teaching art and science, together with public libraries, are there; a spacious and beautiful Protestant church and a charming park also. Here, too, are hospitals for the sick, and baths and gymnasiums for those who are well; a savings-bank, likewise, but no place to buy intoxicating drink. These and other pleasant and useful adjuncts the proprietors have provided for dwellers in their "happy valley," and so help them to rise to a high social, as well as mental and moral level. They so identify themselves with their interests that the better soul within is roused. So these people come to know their employers as their true, sympathizing friends, and they heartily reciprocate the friendship. Any one engaged in getting up strikes would not do well to select that town as a theater of operations. It would be hard to find any one among those villagers who would not help drive him out of the town, and do it in a style suggesting that he would better "not stand on the order of his going." If some pessimist was in search of a business enterprise to hold up as an example of small financial profit, this manufacturing Acadia would not be his model. If, therefore, in this age of Golden Calf worship some keen-eyed capitalist wants to find a first-class business investment, let him establish any kind of manufacturing that has fair margins, and then take his people to his heart in a spirit of Christian philanthropy like that of Sir Titus Salt and his sons.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

The prominence of this most powerful of the labor organizations demands a more complete sketch of its history and character than can be given in a single number. At present we give below: 1st, an official circular sent us by a Michigan friend, which gives information about forming local lodges and the character of those who are allowed membership; and 2nd, the platform of the order, as published to the world. With the latter no one can reasonably quarrel so far as its general purpose of the elevation of the working classes is concerned. To some of the particulars there may be urged valid objections. But the means to this end must be regarded as ill-chosen, unwarranted, vicious, and contrary to true religion and American principles. It is said no oath is taken, but the pledge taken inspires as much dread as the disemboweling, savage imprecation of Freemasonry. Members of the order hold their pledge of secrecy as worth their life. The order has also secret marks that can be chalked about the streets calling members to a secret meeting or ordering a boycott upon some tradesman. Every member passes the same initiation, whether he belongs to any other labor lodge or no, and the ritual, for better concealment, is divided among different officers.

Dear Sir:—In answer to your inquiry for information regarding the order of the Knights of Labor, the following information is given, and a few suggestions as to the manner of joining the order and the forming of local assemblies:

Any female of the age of sixteen, or any male of the age of eighteen, whether manufacturer, employer of any kind, wage-worker or farmer, is eligible to become a member of the order, EXCEPT lawyers, bankers, professional gamblers, stock brokers, and any person who either makes or sells, or derives any part of his support from the sale of intoxicating drink; but at least three-fourths of every local assembly must be composed of wage-workers or farmers.

No local assembly can be organized with less than ten members.

Assemblies may be formed of any particular trade or calling, or they may be composed of all trades. The latter are termed "mixed" assemblies.

Assemblies can only be instituted by regularly commissioned organizers.

The average expense for organizing an assembly, including charter, supplies, seal, and expenses of the organizer, will be about twenty dollars. The charter fee, which is fifteen dollars, must be paid to the organizer.

To form a local assembly, secure not less than ten eligible candidates (twenty are better,) and notify the general secretary-treasurer, Frederick Turner, Lock Box 834, Philadelphia, Pa., or the organizer whose address papears on this circular, when the nearest organizer will be sent to you.

Under the laws of the order, the initiation fee can not be less than one dollar for men and fifty cents for women.

The amount of local dues is regulated by each local assembly, but cannot be less than ten cents per month.

The order has also a Benefit Insurance Association, on the co-operative plan, which went into operation on November 1st, 1883. The membership fee is $1.25, and on the death or total disability of a member an assessment of only 25 cents is made. Until the membership is sufficient to pay $500, the amount of benefits will be regulated by the receipts from assessments. For full information in regard to the insurance association, apply to Homer L. McGaw, 217 South Main street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

After a local assembly is formed, a candidate for membership must be proposed by a member of an assembly in good standing who has an acquaintance with the applicant.

The order of the Knights of Labor is not a mere trade union or benefit society; neither is it a political party. Some of the special aims and objects of the order are set forth in the accompanying preamble and declaration of principles; but any and every measure calculated to advance the interests of the wage-worker, morally, socially or financially, comes within the scope of the order. To abolish as rapidly as possible the wage-system, substituting co-operation therefor; the settlement of all difficulties between employer and employe by arbitration; to educate its members to an intelligent use of the ballot, for their own benefit and protection, free from the restraint of party or the undue influence of employers or monopolies; opposition to land, transportation, currency, and all other monopolies that affect the interests of the masses, and the protection of all its members in the exercise of all their rights as citizens, are some of the principal objects of the order.

Believing that these objects can be best secured through a thorough organization of ALL branches of honorable toil, you are cordially invited, if you approve of the order, to secure the requisite number to form a local assembly in your locality, and when ready send a written notice to that effect to Charles S Bell, Franklin House, Detroit, County of Wayne, State of Michigan, who is a regularly commissioned organizer, and who will proceed to arrange a date for founding the assembly.

Five or more local assemblies in any locality, within a reasonable distance of each other, may form a district assembly, for the better protection and regulation of trade matters.

Local assemblies located at any distance from a district assembly, are attached directly to the general assembly.

The general assembly meets annually on the first Monday in October at such place as may be selected at each session, and is the highest tribunal of the order. The general assembly is composed of the general officers and representatives from the district assemblies and local assemblies attached to the general assembly.

The revenue of the general assembly is derived from the sale of supplies and a per capita tax of six cents per quarter for every member in good standing.

Each local assembly has control of its own funds, and local co-operative enterprises are encouraged.

The order has a secret work, consisting of pass-words, signs and a grip, for the protection of the meetings against those not members, and against suspended and expelled members.

Each member is required to take a pledge of honor, upon joining, to obey all the laws of the order, and not to reveal any of the business or secret work of the order. No oath is taken.

There is nothing in the laws or workings of the order to interfere with the religious views of any member.

Each local assembly is known by a number, assigned by the general secretary-treasurer. Each local will also choose a suitable name upon organization.

Local assemblies attached to districts have to pay an additional per capita tax of such amount as may be fixed by each district assembly for the support of the same.

Women may become members of the order under the same laws and regulations as men, and may form local and district assemblies; but the charter fee for a local composed wholly of women is only ten dollars. The initiation fee for women is fifty cents.

The order has an official paper known as the Journal of United Labor, published semi monthly by the general secretary treasurer; and each local assembly is required to subscribe for at least one copy each year, as it is the organ of official communications from the general master workman and general secretary-treasurer to the order.

For any further information needed in regard to the order apply to the general secretary-treasurer, Frederick Turner, Lock Box No. 834, Philadelphia, Pa.

PLATFORM OF THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

Adopted at Philadelphia, September 10, 1884.

The alarming development and aggressiveness of great capitalists and corporations, unless checked, will inevitably lead to the pauperization and hopeless degradation of the toiling masses.

It is imperative, if we desire to enjoy the full blessings of life, that a check be placed upon unjust accumulation and the power for evil of aggregated wealth.

This much desired object can be accomplished only by the united efforts of those who obey the divine injunction, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."

Therefore we have formed the order of Knights of Labor, for the purpose of organizing and directing the power of the industrial masses—not as a political party, for it is more; in it are crystallized sentiments and measures for the benefit of the whole people; but it should be borne in mind, when exercising the right of suffrage, that most of the objects herein set forth can only be obtained through legislation, and that it is the duty of all to assist in nominating and supporting with their votes only such candidates as will pledge their support to those measures, regardless of party. But no one shall, however, be compelled to vote with the majority. And, calling upon all who believe in securing "the greatest good to the greatest number," to join and assist us, we declare to the world that our aims are:

I. To make industrial and moral worth, not wealth, the true standard of individual and national greatness.

II. To secure to the workers the full enjoyment of the wealth they create; sufficient leisure in which to develop their intellectual, moral and social faculties; all of the benefits, recreation and pleasures of association; in a word, to enable them to share in the gains and honors of advancing civilization.

In order to secure these results, we demand at the hands of the State:

III. The establishment of bureaus of labor statistics, that we may arrive at a correct knowledge of the educational, moral and financial condition of the laboring masses.

IV. That the public lands, the heritage of the people, be reserved for actual settlers; not another acre for railroads or speculators, and that all lands now held for speculative purposes be taxed to their full value.

V. The abrogation of all laws that do not bear equally upon capital and labor, and the removal of unjust technicalities, delays and discriminations in the administration of justice.

VI. The adoption of measures providing for the health and safety of those engaged in mining, manufacturing and building industries, and for indemnification to those engaged therein for injuries received through lack of necessary safeguards.

VII. The recognition, by incorporation, of trades unions, orders, and such other associations as may be organized by the working masses to improve their condition and protect their rights.

VIII. The enactment of laws to compel corporations to pay their employes weekly, in lawful money, for the labor of the preceding week, and giving mechanics and laborers a first lien upon the product of their labor to the extent of their full wages.

IX. The abolition of the contract system on national, state and municipal works.

X. The enactment of laws providing for arbitration between employers and employed, and to enforce the decision of the arbitrators.

XI. The prohibition by law of the employment of children under fifteen years of age in workshops, mines and factories.

XII. To prohibit the hiring out of convict labor.

XIII. That a graduated income tax be levied.

And we demand at the hands of Congress:

XIV. The establishment of a national monetary system in which a circulating medium in necessary quantity shall issue direct to the people, without the intervention of banks; that all the national issue shall be full legal-tender in payment of all debts, public and private; and that the government shall not guarantee or recognize any private banks, or create any banking corporations.

XV. That interest-bearing bonds, bills of credit or notes shall never be issued by the government, but that, when need arises, the emergency shall be met by the issue of legal-tender, non-interest-bearing money.

XVI. That the importation of foreign labor contract be prohibited.

XVII. That, in connection with the post-office, the government shall organize financial exchanges, safe deposits and facilities for deposit of the savings of the people in small sums.

XVIII. That the government shall obtain possession, by purchase, under the right of eminent domain, of all telegraphs, telephones and railroads, and that hereafter no charter or license be issued to any corporation for the construction or operation of any means of transporting intelligence, passengers or freight.

And while making the foregoing demands upon the state and national government, we will endeavor to associate our own labors—

XIX. To establish co operative institutions such as will supercede the wage system, by the introduction of a co operative industrial system.

XX. To secure for both sexes equal pay for equal work.

XXI. To shorten the hours of labor by a general refusal to work for more than eight hours.

XXII. To persuade employers to agree to arbitrate all differences which may arise between them and their employes, in order that the bonds of sympathy between them may be strengthened, and that strikes may be rendered unnecessary.

Reform News.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Crete is an old town twenty-seven miles south of Chicago on the Eastern Illinois railroad, containing three hotels, a number of business houses and a Masonic lodge. Bro. E R. Worrell teaching at Thornton, near by, arranged for a lecture in the M. E. church in Crete on the evening of the 5th instant.

Accompanied by Mrs. Stoddard I reached the pleasant home of Rev. Wm. Morrow at Bloom, three mile north of Crete, where we remained for tea. Here we were joined by Bro. Worrell, and at the depot by some dozen others, who were interested to know more about the secret system. Arriving at Crete we found the church already opened, warmed and lighted, and very soon the friends and the curious began to come in. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Good, was in attendance, rendering every assistance practicable. After singing and prayer, the room had become well filled with a very intelligent audience, in which was a very large per cent of young people. The evening was occupied with a general talk and the interest was increased by the presence of the lodge, which adjourned, as I was told, and came in a body at an early stage of the lecture, accompanied by Rev. Mr. Harris, pastor of the Congregationalist church in Crete. The audience was attentive and orderly, and quietly dispersed, a few coming forward for personal conversation at the close.

There being no train north, those who came down from Bloom walked back a distance of four miles, which Mrs. S. and myself not feeling quite equal to, we took a room at the Wood-House where we were comfortably entertained, and found that our host was a "Royal Arch" from Vermont and familiar with the history of the anti-secrecy struggle in that State. On our return we called on our friend Wm. Grossman at Englewood, who always has a word of welcome and good cheer for true reformers; also on Aunt Laura Haviland, whom we found slightly indisposed with cold, but cheerful as ever and hoping soon to be able to start for Kansas to execute an important mission committed to her in purchasing homesteads for colored people. NEW HAMPSHIRE NOTES.

New Market, N. H.

The following dialogue took place between myself and an Odd-fellow:

"Are you an Odd-fellow?"

"I am."

"Also a church member?"

"I used to belong to the Baptist church."

"Do you think you experienced a real change of heart?"

"I was just as good as any of them. Odd-fellowship is better than the church."

Such is the spirit of lodgism. I found one Baptist church that has maintained preaching for over forty years, with its house of worship closed; no conference meeting or prayer meeting, and with little hope of starting again. The leading wreckers are zealous Patrons of Husbandry. In another town lives a man who purposed to join the grange. He went to the lodge-room, was duly accepted, paid his initiation fee, and advanced to that point in the ceremony where the perfection of his agricultural knowledge required that he should be blindfolded. He said: "You are welcome to the three dollars, but you cannot blindfold me." He left the lodge-room never to return. New Hampshire has a few men left yet. Pastors are working up to the fearful havoc the lodge is making with the church, but they dare not boldly confront the foe. Job's words are again fulfilled: "The oxen were plowing, and the asses feeding beside them." Still, who would not rather be an ox than an ass? S. C. Kimball,

FROM NORTHEASTERN INDIANA.

The General Secretary's visit to Steuben County and Vicinity.—The Lodge badly demoralized.

Editors Cynosure:—On Friday evening, March 19, Secretary Stoddard began a series of meetings in Steuben county, Ind., and Branch county, Mich. The first meeting was held in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Ray, Ind. The other points visited were Montgomery and Hall's Corners, Mich., and Fremont, Sugar Grove and Clear Lake, Ind. The whole number of meetings held was eleven. The attendance in general was very good. In all these places a good degree of interest was awakened, and a desire manifested to hear more on the subject. The lodge question had never been discussed at some of these points before, and secret societies were in the ascendant and the church on the wane. It created quite a commotion among the members of the craft to hear the secrets for which they had paid so dearly divulged in the presence of a popular and mixed audience, free of charge.

The presentation and proof of the fact that Masonry is a religion without Christ, and that prayers in the name of Christ are un-Masonic, was a blow at the heathen god of the lodge that made his worshipers squirm; and, in fact, some of them are still engaged in a performance somewhat like that of the Ephesians in the days of Paul, when they cried out for two hours: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians."

As usual, there are charges of misrepresentation since Bro. Stoddard has gone. But since opportunity was given to anyone to make corrections, reasonable people will not believe such charges. We wish also to notify all who are not satisfied with Bro. Stoddard's exposition of the lodge that we are ready to pay his expenses any time to return to this neighborhood and give another round on the subject. We regard the mutterings heard since his departure as strong proof that the blows he gave the lodge were those of a master hand who knew where to strike, and that the beast is actually wounded. We will endeavor to keep the subject stirred up until Bro. Stoddard can return.

Yours very truly, R. C. Wylie.

Correspondence.

REV. JOHN RANKIN.

Cherry Fork, Adams Co., O., Apr. 7, 1886.

Rev. Jonathan Blanchard.

Respected Friend:—I write more particularly to inclose to you a sketch of the death of your old friend and brother, Rev. John Rankin, formerly of Ripley, Ohio. I knew him well and have heard him lecture frequently. I well recollect a convention that was held in a grove at Winchester, Ohio, where Mr. Rankin and Mr. Dyer Burgess, and, I think, a Mr. Weed, were the speakers.

We were expecting trouble as there had been some threats made. Sure enough when one of the gentlemen was speaking we heard the fife and drum coming out from town. The captain in front, the music next, and twelve or fifteen men following, each with his club. The speaker sat down. The captain mounted the stand and blustered awhile; and the friends of the speaker who had thought it necessary to carry a walking staff, began to gather up towards the stand. But fortunately, or I might say, providentially, after the rioters played a tune or two and looked about a few moments they quietly retired.

I was then a boy in my teens, but I was ready to take part, and if there had been one blow struck, I have no doubt there would have been lives lost, for there were a number of very determined men present. My father was a strong Abolitionist and an intimate friend of Rev. Dyer Burgess. I myself had a short time before been converted under the following circumstances: My father lived on a public road leading from Maysville to Hillsboro, in a double cabin with a porch between the kitchen and dwelling. My brother and I got up one morning about the break of day to make the fires. In passing from the kitchen to the dwelling we passed through an open porch, and were surprised to see a woman sitting on the porch in the cold. It had snowed that night three or four inches deep. We raised the alarm, and my father and mother were soon out. The woman proved to be a slave who had made her way through cold and mud so far on her way to Canada. After hearing her history we got her warmed up and kept her concealed till next night. Then my father and brother got her on a horse and took her twelve miles to what was then called "the negro camps," a settlement of colored people who had been set free and settled in Brown county. There she employed a colored man to take her twelve or fifteen miles farther. But unfortunately for the woman that colored man proved a traitor. The next day her master got on her track and paid the same man a handsome sum to help him catch her, and she was taken back to slavery.

From that time I was an Abolitionist. I voted for James G. Birney.

I have been watching your editorials during your Southern tour with great interest. I have often wondered how a man of your age could venture to make such a trip in the winter season.

CHINESE TROUBLES AND THE LODGE.

San Francisco, April 11, 1886.

Dear Cynosure:—The Chinese problem we think is not altogether understood in the East. And especially the war made on them on the Pacific coast. Masons use the Chinese as the monkey does the cat's-paw in pulling the chestnuts out of the hot ashes.

Masons have sent their brethren all over this coast to organize every man that they can into the Knights of Labor, Internationals, Cigar Maker's Union, and every other kind of party they can, and then excite these weak-minded men by agitation, telling them to boycott the Chinese.

These Masonic agitators are daily increasing the excitement of these organizations; they are the cause of the Chinese being mobbed in every place.

When they get the mob to work they will have the police or the soldiers near by to protect the Chinese, so they may not get very badly hurt. They do not intend to hurt the Chinese by boycotting, or any other way. Their object is to get this coast into Chinese riots and labor strikes, so as to have an excuse for the President to put California and Oregon under military powers for their benefit in 1888.

They are now boycotting every man that will not join their parties. No man can get a day's work in this city or Oakland, outside of their organizations. They are now turning men out of the mills and corporations, all that are not organized under their control. And men are starving here in this city, while the markets are full of everything to eat.

People from the East had better not come to this coast thinking to get work, for there is but little money in circulation and business is very dull.

People outside of these organizations take little part in the Chinese question in any way.

Masons say in their Temple, "The Chinese must stay, so we can have cheap labor;" and outside they say, "And they will go."

Masons furnish the Chinese with work, and they are always busy at work. They take what they can get and say nothing. Chinese are never seen in saloons, beer-dives, etc., and are never seen drunk.

They always attend to their own business, and never meddle with anyone else.

If the Masonic Congress at Washington would manage the finance in the interest of the people instead of banks, there would be no trouble amongst the laboring host.

"It would be far more appropriate to ask additional legislation to break up" Freemasonry, "that drives out unoffending people, and defies all law, both human and divine." N. Keyser.

DOWNS AND FINNEY.

Boston, April 4th, 1886.

Dear Cynosure:—In my last communication I remarked that it was "vaguely rumored" that the conspiracy against Rev. W. W. Downs was augmented by lodge influence. Rumor, while intangible, indefinite, and, if I may coin the word, unfindable, its subject being almost invariably a nonentity, yet, notwithstanding, it certainly is suggestive of a possible underlying fact. While the lodge in my opinion is not above suspicion, I would not have my statement construed that there is any positive evidence in this case against it. I would not wrong even the devil. Therefore, as an errata, it seems more appropriate to substitute the phrase referred to by this: "Some seriously suspect," etc. Mr. Downs, although a Mason by virtue of initiation, is not one in principle nor practice, it is rumored. If this is true it is to his credit, for a bad man would make it a point to entrench himself as impregnably as possible behind the ramparts of the lodge. Although Mr. Downs may never have openly declared himself opposed to lodge secretism, I do not believe him an opponent to anti-lodgery work. Even while passing through the height of his trials, he has done what no active Mason even would dare do—express publicly his respect and admiration for Finney, one of the most bitter Masonic seceders. None other than a man of highest principles would have done this. At any rate, the readers of the Cynosure will agree that a friend of Finney can hardly be the friend of a lie. Mr. Downs emphatically protests his innocence, and many believe what he says. The good people of Puritan Boston must by this time be convinced that Mr. Downs is at least no coward or sycophant, and one look at his open and handsome countenance is enough to dispel all suspicion of hypocrisy. It is not in his nature to amalgamate with such attributes.

D. P. Mathews.

A FREE METHODIST BROTHER AND HIS TESTIMONY.

Dear Cynosure:—When my mind becomes clouded I find light and knowledge in the Cynosure. When I came out from the lodge I belonged to the M. E. church. I expected to find aid and comfort from its ministers, but oh, how disappointed I was! I soon found Masonry had a terrible hold of the church. I was obliged to withdraw from the church by the leading of the Spirit, and joined the Free Methodists. Here I found help and encouragement. After a year's walk with this church, I have heard but little preached from the pulpit about Masonry. Now, what I want to know through the Cynosure is, whether the hoodwink is still on my eyes, or is the devil drawing the hoodwink over the Free Methodist church? Let me quote the sayings of some of our leading preachers. One is now a chairman, who once preached in the M. E. church, but had to leave because he preached against Masonry. But now he does not feel called to preach against the lodge, as he did in the old church. Another preacher says he is not led that way, and the people would not know there was such a thing as Masonry to hear him preach. Another says in regard to saving souls: "First get them saved: then bring in side issues, such as Masonry, dress, tobacco, etc." Before Jesus Christ could save me I had to vomit up Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, and a host of other sins. It was impossible for me to be saved with those blasphemous oaths in my heart. How can a man ever enter heaven with the penalty of a Master Mason in his heart: "Under no less penalty than to have my body severed in two, my bowels burned to ashes," etc., "so help me God?" Does the blood of Christ cover the above? If so, a man may be converted and retain Masonry. If it washes away all such oaths, then it cleanses from Masonry. If so, Masonry is no side issue. Since I joined the F. M. church I find more need of crying against Masonry than ever. Does not the Bible say, "Cry aloud; spare not?" If I am misjudging or blinded in this matter, will the Cynosure please correct me?—and I will take the correction in the spirit of love. It does look as though the church was lowering its standard. May God breathe on us and hold us to the line.

D. Benjamin.

Answer.—We believe you are right, Bro. Benjamin. No sin is a side issue: and to swear away the body God has given a man for holy service in his kingdom, and to deny Christ and pledge to eternal secrecy, as the lodge does, are sins, if there can be any. Brethren who have not felt the tooth of the lodge serpent may not feel so deeply as you, but they should be glad of your testimony for Christ against the lodge, and bless God that you can speak if they themselves do not, and should therefore encourage you. We do not know of a genuine Free Methodist, pastor or other, who would not do so.—Ed. Cynosure.

PITH AND POINT.

WHAT HE LEARNED OF THE "HARMLESS" ORDERS.

Allow me to say that I learn to appreciate the columns of the Cynosure more and more as I read it, with deeper and more prayerful interest. When I became a regular reader of this "Pole Star of Reform," in February, '85, I was a kind of a "modificationist," thinking that Good Templars, G. A. R., P. of H., and such organizations were harmless, if not conducive to good. The Cynosure has learned me to seek more light, and, praise the Lord, as we seek we find; and the Cynosure columns bear witness (from my pen) to the fact that I am now opposed to the parent and all her children.—C. E. Walker, Twin Brooks, Dak.

THE LODGE QUESTION TO THE FRONT.

I have often said that I thought that the secret-society question would have to wait for the temperance question to be settled. But to me the question of secrecy seems nearer the line of final conflict to-day than any other question. Mormonism touches secrecy, and that is a popular question now. Strikes touch secrecy and lodge rule; and unless there is something done soon, these despots of laborers called Knights of Labor will force an issue which will shake this nation, as plebeian discontent shook Rome. The cry of those who have been robbed of wages is heard in heaven; and when God comes to the rescue of the hungry he will demand for them more than bread. The political needle points to the Cynosure!—A Congregational Pastor.

PROHIBITION AMERICAN.

We hope there will be no quarrel now among Americans about voting for St. John. We voted for him because it was the best we could do; and it was not doing bad, for he was man enough to run on a prohibition plank which is a straight American one, and claimed to stand on the whole American platform. We never were compelled to vote for him by any monopoly. Had he been elected, Prohibition would not have been lodge-ridden to the extent that it now is. Just in the degree that prohibition is lodge-ridden it does not prohibit. If the devil intends to ride the temperance colt he will be thrown. Prohibitionists, like Americans, love that kind that is effectual.—Cyrus Smith.

Bible Lessons.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON IV, April 25, 1886.—Jesus and Nicodemus.—John 3: 1-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Ye must be born again.—John 3: 7.

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

1. The necessity of regeneration. vs. 1-8. We have here an instance of Christ's dealings with an intellectual, cultured Pharisee. Men like Nicodemus can be found every day. They are willing to confess Christ as a divine Teacher, but have no idea of him as a Saviour. The most vital truths of the Gospel are and must remain mysteries until their minds are enlightened by the Holy Spirit. The object of Nicodemus in coming to Christ seems to have been to learn something of the nature of that kingdom which Jesus claimed that he was about to set up. In common with other Jews, he doubtless believed that it was to be a literal kingdom, as is evidenced by his literal interpretation of the statement, "Ye must be born again," or, as the margin reads, "from above." In answer to his question, Christ immediately begins on the subject of regeneration as the foundation principle on which his kingdom is built, and then goes on to state more explicitly what the new birth is. First—It is spiritual. As his kingdom is not of this world, so they who become members of it must have a new and heavenly nature—one radically new, not a superadded growth grafted on to the old. Second—As the kingdom of God cometh not with observation, so the new birth is only visible in its results, invisible in its origin and operations.

2. Teachers of divine truth may be themselves ignorant of the first principles of truth. vs. 8-12. The necessity for a spiritual renewing of heart and mind has been taught by the prophets, and baptism by water as a symbol of it had been frequently practiced before John's preaching gathered crowds to be baptized of him in Jordan. Nicodemus, as a master in Israel, ought to have been familiar with these earthly things—the truths that required to be revealed by no special divine messenger, and which should have been with him a matter of personal experience. Here lay the trouble. He had no such personal experience. With all his moral rectitude, his knowledge of the law, his position as a ruler and teacher, he was as much outside the kingdom as the vilest publican.

3. The cross the great central truth of the Gospel. vs. 13-18. Regeneration is but the beginning. To be simply born into the heavenly kingdom is not enough. There must be something to nourish the new-born life, and this prime need is met only by a living faith in Christ. Odd-fellowship, in its ritual, makes use of the symbol of a serpent lifted on a pole, but treats it as Blue Lodge Masonry did the Star of Bethlehem in the Master's carpet—ignores entirely the true meaning and interprets it of wisdom—any reference to Christ, however remote, being too sectarian for the universal religion of the lodge. Both it and Masonry teach a mock regeneration, thus blinding their deluded followers by offering a false substitute for God's great salvation. "And this is the condemnation," etc. They who turn away from the light to walk in darkness are self condemned. Their own hearts witness against them that they love darkness because their deeds are evil.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Where do we find the new birth taught in the Old Testament? Ez. 11: 19, 18:31. How did the apostles teach it? Gal. 6: 15, Titus 3: 5, 1 Pet. 1: 23, 1 John 3: 9. What shall be the fate of lodge apologists? Is. 31. 3. l. c.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"There was a man . . . named Nicodemus." "Nicodemus" means conqueror of the people. Nothing is known about him except what John tells us here and in chap. 7: 50, and chap. 19: 39.

"By night." Why by night? (1) The reason generally assumed is fear of the Jews; but this is not asserted by the evangelist. As no bad motive is imputed to him, it is most in accordance with Christian charity to suppose that his motives were such as God would approve, especially as the Saviour did not reprove him.—Barnes. (2) Simple prudence. He was cautious by nature and education. He would not commit himself as a follower of the unknown teacher till he was assured that he was really the Messiah. (3) The quiet evening hour, after the public work and teaching of Jesus was over, and the crowds had retired to their homes, was by far the best time for his purpose. (4) It is very probable that he had mingled motives, and all the above motives had more or less influence. (5) It is well to note that his going at all implies strength of character, unprejudiced desire for the truth, earnestness, and honesty of purpose.

"For no man can do these miracles (signs) that thou doest, except God be with him. Jesus had not only cleansed the temple, but wrought other miracles at this Passover (chap. 2: 24), and they may have heard of the miracle at Cana. These were proofs of the divine mission of Jesus (see last lesson).

Nicodemus does not ask any recorded question, but the sentence that admitted his divine teachership implied all the questions he could wish to ask; nay, his very presence there spoke them. It was all about the kingdom of God.—Edersheim.

"Except a man (any one) be born again." It has been, and still is, a much controverted question whether the Greek word here used should be rendered again, or anew, or from above.—Schaff. It means either anew, i. e, from the beginning or from above. Both meanings are attached to it here by the best scholars. According to the first definition, Christ simply implies that the life must begin anew, that the character must be rebuilt from the foundation, without, however, implying how; according to the other idea, he indicates in the use of this word not only a new but a spiritual and divine birth. Nicodemus impliedly asks to know what new doctrine Christ has to teach; Christ replies in substance that the world needs not new doctrine, but new life.—Abbott.

"How can a man be born when he is old?" How is it possible for a man, whose whole nature at any moment is the sum of all the past, to start afresh? How can he undo, or do away with, the result which years have brought and which goes to form himself? The great mystery of religion is not the punishment, but the forgiveness, of sin; not the natural permanence of character, but spiritual regeneration. And it is one aspect of this mystery which Nicodemus puts forth clearly.—Wescott.

"Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit." The declaration, then, is that no man can enter the kingdom of God except by (1) a public acknowledgment and confession of sin, a public putting off of the old man and entering into the new; and (2) a real and vital change of life and character wrought by the Spirit of God in the heart of the believer.

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh." Jesus now lays down the great principle of God's universe on which his doctrine of the new birth is based, and which proves its necessity, namely, "Like produces like." From plants only can plant life come. By no possibility can plants produce animals. Animal life produces animal life. Each kingdom can produce only objects belonging to that kingdom. Whenever it is raised to a higher kingdom it is by importation from the kingdom above it. It can not grow up to that higher kingdom of itself. So it is that that which is born of the spirit is spirit. Spiritual life in us must come to us from God's spiritual life.

"So is every one that is born of the Spirit." The Spirit's methods we can not know, or why he influences just when or where he does, or how he imparts new life. But the facts of the new life are as plain and certain as that the strong wind bends the forest trees. We may not know the day nor the hour when we are born again, but we may know the fact by the fruits.

"Even so." Notice (1) the serpent is, in Scripture symbolism, the devil. But why is the devil set forth by the serpent? How does the bite of the serpent operate? It pervades with its poison the frame of its victim. That frame becomes poisoned, and death ensues. So sin, the poison of the devil, being instilled into our nature, that nature has become a poisoned nature, a flesh of sin.—Alford.

"God sent not his Son . . . to condemn (rather, to judge) the world." For the world was lost and condemned for sin already. Christ declares the lost condition of men, and the punishment of their sins; but he does not bring that punishment, as some seem to think, but declares that man may be saved from it.

"He that believeth on him is not condemned," is not judged, or cometh not into judgment, because God has forgiven him, and imparted a new and holy life to him.

"He that believeth not is condemned already," hath been judged already. (1) He is self-condemned. By refusing to believe, he places himself on the wrong side; he shows that he does not love holiness and God supremely, and is not fitted for heaven. For Jesus is the sum of all goodness. He that refuses to obey him refuses to be truly holy. (2) He is judged by God, by doing those things which God has forbidden, and against which he has threatened punishment.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the preveution and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our ameuded Natioual Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That internatioual differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1886.

J. Sydlo Cook has delivered 186 lectures from the same platform in Boston, and his vast crowd voted with enthusiasm to endorse the Lecture Committee's nomination of him for another winter's course. Mr. Cook is an intellectual phenomenon. He is in the theology of the Bible what Sam Jones is in its morals. The one brings "thought," the other behavior, "into captivity" to Christ. Mr. Cook has boldly condemned all secret societies in Tremont Temple; and if a really National Congress of churches can be held, he declares he will expound its deliverances.

Is FREEMASONRY CHURCH POLITY?

Bishop Weaver (Telescope April 7,) gives an article on "Change of Views on questions of Church Polity," the drift and aim of which is a vindication of his course on secret societies. His church, which has appointed him a bishop, "To insist upon it that all the laws of the church are faithfully executed; Discipline, p. 60," is reeling and being rent because Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights, etc., are received even into the churches of Dayton within a few rods of his home. Yet this extraordinary man is writing column after column in vindication of himself; and censuring those who complain of his total neglect of the duty for which he is appointed and paid as bishop.

One of those rules, set down in the Constitution of his church (Article II., Section 7,) is, "There shall be no connection with secret combinations." Bishop Weaver lives in Dayton where there are two Brethren churches, the First and Summit Street. The First has long received secretists of several "orders" without question, and the Summit Street church has lately had its walls broken down and the night-wolves, Odd-fellows, Knights, etc., etc., now occupy and turn that fold of Christ's sheep into a wolf-den. If Bishop Weaver will ask the young barber, whose shop is near Summit Street church, he will give him the names of the secretists who have lately joined that church. And he knows that these young men in their lodges, are in weekly use of rituals which mangle Scripture to eject Christ from his own Word. One word from this strange bishop would send pastor Mathews to labor with those interesting young men and save them from these wolves. But "The hireling seeth the wolf coming and fleeth because he is a hireling;" and with the air of injured innocence he writes long articles to prove that those injure him who condemn him for changing with the times and ruining the church by allowing its rules and the laws of Christ to be broken down.

"Bishop Edwards changed his views about instrumental music." "Dr. Davis changed the views of the church from opposing to approving of colleges;" and so, forsooth, it is right for Bishop Weaver to allow constitution and law to be broken down before his eyes, and the lodge to take possession of churches, within fifty rods of his house, with no effort, "advisory" or by "arbitrary law" to keep out the secret orders.

From beginning to end of the Bible, the false worships without any Messiah or Mediator, are forbidden, and the inventors of them stoned; or, in the New Testament, denounced as sorcerers, children of the devil, etc. But here is a bishop who has discovered that the difference between Satan's worship and Christ's is a mere question of "polity" and mode! No, the trouble is not a change of polity or the wording of a law, but plain, sinful neglect of official duty and disobedience to the commands of Christ.

LODGES OF SORROW.

These are mimic funerals and travesties of sorrow for Masons who have died within the year. They have been more common in Europe than in this country. Their cost, like that of the Mar-di-Gras in New Orleans, is immense. But no complaint is uttered by the Socialists, who denounce all other shows and waste of wealth. One of these dumb-show funerals was gotten up in the Park Theatre, Boston, about a year ago, and the concern paid so well that it was repeated in Mechanics' Hall, Worcester, Mass., March 26 last; and the old Worcester Spy gives it a send-off of nearly two columns which would excite general disgust at the sheet but for the fact that religious imposture never provokes contempt, but a kind of unconscious fear of the power of the devil which is in it. If the spirits of the holy dead still animated their remains, the bones of the good Dea. Washburne, whose money built the hall for the honor of the mechanics and convenience of the people of Worcester, must have turned in his coffin at the profanation of religion and aristocratic flummery which crammed his building. "Grand," "Associate Grand," "Illustrious Deputies," "Most Wise and Perfect Masters," and Masons representing above one thousand "degrees" taken in the folly, blasphemy and wickedness of the lodge, went through the mockery of a funeral service in which crosses were freely used and the name of Christ left out!

DEPARTING HENCE.

Help Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men. Ps. 12: 1.

Rev. John Rankin died at Ironton, O., March 9., aged 93. We have an excellent engraving of him in the volume written by Secretary Ritchie of the Western Tract Society, Cincinnati, O., and shall endeavor to give it to our readers with a sketch of his light-beaming life. The editor of the Cynosure is more indebted to Mr. Rankin for religious knowledge than to any other one man. He was our father, friend and guide. Fifty years ago he was a frequent guest with us in our Cincinnati home, and at our request preached a clear, strong sermon against secret societies in the Sixth Presbyterian church. His memories throng us. His red house on the high Ripley bluff was the north star to hundreds of hunted, fleeing fugitives, including Eliza and her child in "Uncle Tom". Dr. Bailey of the National Era, used to say: "John Rankin is one of the most apostolic men that ever lived." We shall count it long till we give his sketch to our readers.

While heaven's portals are open to receive this beloved Patriarch, another and another have passed in.

Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., the beloved instructor of the young Covenanter pastors, the courageous defender of the faith as it is in Christ against the slavery and lodge aggressions died in his bed at home. He had long been suffering from the inroads of disease, but without altogether foregoing his work in the Seminary. He laid down in peace and seemed to have had a quiet sleep, which deepened into the sleep of death.

Another hero in the strife against the enemy of all righteousness passed away March 22—President S. B. Allen, for many years at the head of Westfield College. He also had been for years a sufferer from disease, but more from the pressure of the lodge upon his institution; its incumbrance of debt giving an advantage which his enemies were not slow to use. He was among men one of the most honest, and respected far and near for his manly virtue; and in the United Brethren church he was like Abdiel—

> "Among innumerable false, unmoved,
> Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified;
> His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal;
> Nor number nor example with him wrought
> To swerve from truth."

Philo P. Chapman, noticed in another column; one of the meekest and most heaven-sent of men, was a pillar of flame against "the unfruitful works of darkness.

Mrs. Silas Willard, of Galesburg, at once a lady and a saint, and the mother of sainted children, was taught abhorrence of the lodge by her father, Col. Chambers, from his dying pillow, He had been a Mason and loathed its abominations; and when dying called his family to his bed and said, "I wish to leave my dying testimony against the lodge. Mr. Blanchard is right. A Jew who hates Christ can be a Mason, and that shows you the system is anti-Christ."

And now within a few days Mr. James M. Wiley, the father and founder of Galva, Ill., whom the writer baptized forty years ago in Brimfield, in this State, has gone with the rest. Mr. O. Hand had preceded him but a few days. "These all died in faith" and our moral heavens seem darker as they have passed out of our horizon and beyond our sight.

But "precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." The worshipers of familiar spirits have Satan's version of a great truth. We are in the midst of the spirit world, and these and other beloved ones have lost none of their ability or desire to do good. But, "taken from the evil to come," in the clear light of eternity they view and still share in the moral conflicts on earth. In Connecticut, Illinois, Tennessee and other States, the apostles of darkness are reviving the limp and worn-out secret orders. "Knights" seize public property as the devil claims to own the world, and demand "recognition" as he demanded worship; and our friends are needed on the other side, to prepare for the coming battle-day of God. "Help Lord for the godly man ceaseth."

Let our absent loved ones warn us; touch our heart-strings with their invisible fingers, and whisper, "This is the way," in our ears.

Prof. Kephart's article, in spite of its weary monotony on the Commission, is especially important in that it reveals the pit that is being dug for the United Brethren. If the professor speaks for the modifiers of the law, his argument surrenders the church to Freemasonry completely. His assumption that the lodge is not to be condemned because of its secretism is in the face of the whole teaching of the Word of God. It, moreover, justifies the pledge or oath by which that secrecy is established, and is not far from excusing the penalty. If the secrecy of the lodge is right, it is right to bind men to it, and is wrong to seek to disturb it, or to penetrate it for the sake of investigation. On this basis the United Brethren church would be estopped from proceeding with inquiry as to the character of the lodge which the terms of the Commission law imply is to be the method of dealing in future with this question; and it would be cast into the bed of spiritual adultery without the power of resistance.

Gladstone and Ireland.—The "Grand Old Man" of English history has fulfilled his promise and presented his bold measure for Irish self-government in the British Parliament amid the applause of millions the world around, while despots looked on amazed, confounded and enraged. His bill allows an Irish Parliament, but no representatives in London; the British Viceroy will be retained, but it will be a non-political office; Ireland to furnish one-fifteenth of the public fund raised by taxation to the imperial treasury; the judges and constabulary to be appointed by the central goverament. The measure, on the whole, pleases the Irish party, and with some modifications will probably pass. In any event, the matter is at last before the British Parliament in such form that it can never be shelved. The boldness of the measure and the eloquence with which it was presented entitle Gladstone to the highest honor as a statesman.

The Midland, our St. Louis United Presbyterian exchange, has not been vainly observing the tumultuous movements in that city, and thus writes of the strike: "The favorite legend of the Knights of Labor is, 'Labor is King.' They will learn that a majority of the legal voters of this country is king, and that for any lawless force whatever to attempt to assert the contrary is rebellion, if not treason, and it will not win. Railroads will learn some day that there is nothing gained by employing the worst class of men in the country because they can be had cheaply. It is generally known that when a young man is so vicious and trifling that he cannot get employment in the community where he lives, he can always find employment on a railroad. We have a complete illustration of this in East St. Louis which is almost entirely composed of railroad employes. It is the roughest city we know of in the United States. It would not cost the roads very much more to employ men whose character would be sufficient guarantee for their property in the time of a strike. As long as railroads compel men to work on Sabbath they will be compelled to employ the worst class of men. If they teach their men to violate one of the Ten Commandments they need not expect them to keep the others. Any man who will work on Sabbath day will have very little regard for what is right, and will need to be governed not by principle but by fear."

A written invitation to a synagogue of spirit or devil worshipers, which had been posted upon the door, was picked up on Madison street, Chicago, the other day. Evidently the ghost of some bandit wrote it, as it reads literally thus:

A—Notice to all peoples.

—General Agent Stoddard spent Sabbath the 11th at Bartlett, Ill, preaching morning and evening in the Congregational church. He reports Bros. Thompson, Hench and Dr. Guild in good heart and just now specially engaged in efforts to mitigate and exterminate the liquor curse which has obtained a foot hold, and planted a saloon in their midst.

—Elder Isaac Bancroft, whose faith and assiduity will long be gratefully remembered by the Wisconsin Anti-masons, passed through this city last week on his way to California.

—Bro. J. G. Mattoon, a correspondent of the Cynosure, formerly well known and as highly appreciated, was lately severely injured by a fall, the result of which may be fatal.

—Rev. C. C. Foote reports that the snow-storm of last week in Detroit was the heaviest known there for thirty years. The depth of the fall in his front yard was six feet.

—Amerika, the political organ of the Norwegian Lutherans in this city, is a fine eight-page paper. now in its second year, but with a strong list of 6,000 paying subscribers. This paper is in favor of a Christian state, with no lodgery in it. It is now printing the able addresses of some of the pastors against secret societies.

—La Trumpette Evangelique, Pastor Seguin's French Protestant paper, is again issued from 45 Blue Island avenue, in this city, and maintains bravely, amid many discouragements, a war of faith against Romanism and the lodge. It is sent for the year for $1.

—The Bible Banner, lately removed to this city from Philadelphia, is located hardly a block away from the Cynosure, on Green street. We hope the removal will prove in every way profitable to the paper and the cause of a sectarian Gospel, which its editor, Elder J. D. Brown, maintains earnestly. The Banner is warmly in sympathy also with the work of the Cynosure.

—Bro. W. O. Norval, of McCook, Nebraska, was lately preaching in a town in his vicinity where a Masonic preacher had proved that his Masonry was useless in saving him from vice and loss of reputation. Bro. Norval began to speak publicly on the lodges, showing that they were condemned by the Bible, and almost the entire community was gained over to the right side of the secret-society question.

—The Prairie Farmer of this city shows a commendable enterprise and appreciation of the intelligence desired by its patrons by devoting several numbers to special products. The potato was lately discussed, and then King Corn had a number, with fine illustrations, analyses, etc.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE NEW LABOR ARBITRATION BILL AS A LODGE MEASURE.

The notable Congressional event during the past week was the passage by the House of Mr. O'Neill's bill to secure arbitration between common carriers between States, and their employes. It seems to have been rushed through under excitement, and with very little consideration. It is held quite generally to be a very weak measure and may be proper as included among the schemes to capture the labor vote and make political capital.

Doubtless the principle of arbitration as applied to conflicting interests is correct. It is eminently desirable that it should be adopted, as at least a temporary remedy for our labor troubles; but it is by no means probable that the national Government can frame any law securing such results. Possibly this bill may pass the Senate, but if so, it will be, it is to be hoped, shorn of some of its objectionable features. The remarkable feature in this measure is its second section. After providing for a board of arbitrators and empowering them to summon witnesses, compel attendance and requiring the production of all papers and records having any relation to the questions to be considered and conferring the same powers as the courts of the United States, it declares that "in no case shall a witness be compelled to disclose the secrets, or to produce the records of proceedings of any labor organization of which he is an officer or a member." I doubt if in the entire history of legislation, there is a single instance where one party to a contract was required to give testimony and the other party excused. This I am sure is the first instance of a legal recognition of the obligations of secrecy taken in any voluntary organization. In a large number of cases the courts have decided that all such oaths of secrecy were extra-judicial and void. In numerous instances they have been prohibited by law. In all cases where the facts to be ascertained were material to a judicial decision of the question at issue, the courts have compelled witnesses to disclose the secrets of their organization and produce its records. Not only such organizations as the Mollie Maguires, the Ku Klux Klans, and the Mormon Endowment House have been subject to judicial and legislative investigation; but the Freemasons have repeatedly been required to lay bare the inmost secrets of their order so that the facts might have due weight in determining some question at issue.

In the New Berlin trials Master Masons were compelled to disclose the proceedings which as members of the order they had sworn to conceal. So also in the investigations before the legislatures of Rhode Island, Connecticut and Pennsylvania. In the case of Purple vs. Horton, Wendell's New York Law reports, vol. 13, pp. 9–22, nine Royal Arch Masons were required to testify as to what were the oaths of the Master's and the Royal Arch degrees of Masonry, and the testimony thus given was put on the records of the court and fully reported. Any other course would be not simply a recognition of a government within the government, but would give to secret government the paramount authority. The public good is the highest law, and no voluntary combination can absolve any man of his duty to the state. It is true that men are not required to criminate themselves, but the plea that the disclosure of the secrets or the procurement of the records of their order would involve self-crimination is a confession that the organization is essentially criminal.

One would suppose that in all fairness the right of concealment, if allowed to either, would be to both parties. A railroad company may have its privacies and its "records of proceedings" just as truly as the Knights of Labor. If the one is allowed the right of concealment why not the other? If the obligation entered into with the railroad corporation must be produced, why not the obligation with the Knights?

The practical effect of the passage of this bill will be that perjury will be made easy and its punishment difficult, if not impracticable. A witness who belongs to a labor union is called and sworn to tell the whole truth. But there are certain facts that he desires to conceal. These may or may not have any reference to the secrets of the order. He has only to plead that they are secrets, and no power can compel him to disclose them. What are or are not the peculiar secrets cannot be determined. Kindred to this bill is one now pending to make the various labor organizations bodies politic and corporate. There would be little objection to such incorporation provided these bodies conformed to the rules of other organizations, such as banks, insurance companies, etc, all of which are open to inspection. But with a permission of perpetual secrecy they would be but another chain that is being put on the liberties of the people.

On the 8th, Senator Platt of Connecticut is to make his speech on open executive sessions. He will have the endorsement of the great body of the people; but it is hardly expected that his resolution will pass. The Library bill appropriating one million of dollars to a library building has passed the House. It will unquestionably pass the Senate, but the one million will be but a nest egg.

Last Sabbath a Japanese missionary spoke in the First Presbyterian church. His address was one of great interest. He said that there were five points in which his country had taken advance steps: the adoption of the calendar of Christian nations; the cessation of government work on one day in seven; the adoption of a common school system; the right of free burial; and the withdrawal of support from the Buddhist temples. He predicted that Japan would speedily become a Christian nation.

MOODY IN THE SOUTH.

BY PROF. G. M. ELLIOTT.

Selma has had a visit from Mr. Moody. He reached here the 13th of March, and began his services on the 14th, which continued till the 18th. Crowds flocked to hear him. His mission was to the whites, not to the colored. They arranged for the colored people's services at 11 o'clock Sabbath. This was done without the knowledge or consultation of a colored pastor in the city. They were informed that this would be the only service for them as they would not be permitted to attend the hours arranged for white people.

Tickets were issued for the respective classes of people that were to attend. On those issued to colored people were printed the words, "For colored people only." All the colored pastors received what they called "season tickets." These admitted them to all the services. There were a number of colored people in the city who refused to have any thing to do with the service under such regulations. The protest of these few probably had something to do toward modifying the prejudice that first characterized the arrangement. Colored people were admitted to nearly all the services in a limited number till toward the last, and even a second service was arranged for them. But toward the last the lines of caste were drawn tighter. Policemen were employed to unseat colored persons that had taken their seats in the building. Prof. C. S. Dinkins, who is a minister of the Gospel and Professor of Languages in the Baptist College of this place, and who had a season ticket, was asked out of the meeting by an officer. Another gentleman of standing, who lives in a neighboring town, was asked out. When first asked out by the policeman he refused to go, stating that he had been invited there by one of the managers. The chief of the police was brought and this gentleman was asked to leave the meeting. Of course he went out. He left with no favorable impressions concerning the meeting and its management.

It does seem that when the Gospel is thus restricted there is great need of its power to remove such barriers. How Mr. Moody can go through the South preaching and holding meeting in the face of such conduct, and not rebuke it or enter his protest, is more than I can understand. I cannot believe that our Saviour would countenance such actions. Mr. Moody certainly has a good opportunity to rebuke the prejudice of the South that is such an obstruction to the Gospel, and yet I have not heard of his doing so in a single instance. He certainly was made cognizant of it in the city of Selma.

This country stands greatly in need of a purer and stronger Gospel. If such conduct as I have mentioned above showed itself in so aggravating a form at the close of a series of revival meetings, it proves one of two things or both; either that Mr. Moody's preaching did very little good, or the hearts of the people are very much hardened. I think he has need to return and preach a more effective Gospel.

Such conduct does not tend to give the colored people a very exalted opinion of the religion of a certain class in the South; neither does it tend to promote fraternal relations betwen the races. This is a thing that ought not to go unnoticed by those who wish to be loyal to Christ. When on earth "the common people heard him gladly," and none were hindered from attending on his preaching. That spirit which shuts out the Gospel from the very class that need it most is not the spirit that characterizes the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ.

May God speed the day when this senseless caste prejudice, that does not even allow persons to worship under the same roof and listen to the proclamation of God's word, shall be a thing of the past; when the power of Christ shall be so strong in men's hearts that there will be no inclination to draw a color line in God's house. I read in my Bible that in Christ "there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free." When this spirit does not prevail there can be but little spiritual growth.

LITERATURE.

The April Library Magazine opens with a defense and eulogium upon Roman Catholicism entitled the "Church and the World" "William Cobbett," "The Babylonians at Home," "Food Accessories," 'France under Colbert," "Mary Howitt's Reminiscences," "Hydrophobia," "Social Reforms as Subjects of Universal Study," and "The Swamps of the United States" are articles that will not be overlooked by the careful reader. But the central attraction is Gladstone's latest paper in his discussion with the scientists on the Bible chronology of the creation entitled "Proem to Genesis," and Prof. Huxley's reply, "Mr. Gladstone and Genesis."

The illustrated articles of the English Illustrated Magazine are: "A North-country Fishing Town," "A Country Sunday," and "The London Charterhouse." The first furnishes a number of picturesque views of a sturdy class of English yeomanry; the second is a paper from Addison's "Spectator" which quaintly portrays Sir Roger de Corverly in some of his characters; while the third is a place of some historical interest from its connection with prominent names in English literature.

The Converted Catholic, the organ of the Protestant movement begun by James O'Connor is now in its third volume. The April number is edited with spirit and gives large space to the addresses and journeys of the editor. The movements of Romanism throughout the world are discussed keenly in this journal, which must be regarded as the organ of the Christian anti-Catholic movement.

The publishers of The Century are entirely out of the April number, containing the Alabama and Kearsarge articles, and as the printers of the magazine are moving to their new quarters on Lafayette Place it will be impossible to issue a new edition without seriously interfering with the printing of the May number. In response to a cable message the English publishers are returning all the copies of the April issue they can spare,—only five hundred,

GIFTS.

"Oh, World-God, give me Wealth!" the Egyptian cried.
His prayer was granted. High as heaven, behold
Palace and pyramid, the brimming tide
Of lavish Nile washed all his land with gold.
Armies of slaves lay at his feet,
While captive-laden traffic roared through mart and street.
His priests were gods, his spice-balmed kings enshrined,
Secure till death at naught in rock-ribbed charnels deep.
Seek Pharaoh's race to-day and ye shall find
Rust and the moth, silence and dusty sleep.

Oh, World-God, give me Beauty!" cried the Greek.
His prayer was granted. All the earth became Plastic and real to his sense: each peak,
Each grove, each stream, quick with Promethean flame,
Peopled the world with imaged grace and light.
The lyre was his, and his the breathing might
Of the immortal marble, his the play
Of dauntless-hearted thought and golden tongue.
Go seek the sunshine race, ye find to-day
A broken column and a lute unstrung.

Oh, World-God, give me Power!" the Roman cried.
His prayer was granted. The vast world was chained
A captive to the chariot of his pride.
The blood of myriad provinces was drained
To feed that fierce, insatiable red heart.
Invincible legions warked every part
With serried legions and with close-meshed code.
Within, the burrowing worm had gnawed its home.
A ruthless ruin stands where once abode
The imperial race of everlasting Rome.

Oh, God-head, give me Truth!" the Hebrew cried.
His prayer was granted: he became the slave
Of the Idea, a pilgrim far and wide,
Cursed, hated, spurned and scourged, with none to save.
The Prophets knew him, and when Greece beheld,
His wistful brow wore the hoary crown of Eld.
Beauty he hath forsworn, and wealth and power
Seek him to-day, and find in every land.
Nor fire consumes him, neither floods devour,
Immortal though the lamp within his hand.

HEATHEN HISTORICAL PROOFS OF CHRIST'S LIFE, DEATH, AND RESURRECTION.

In the reign of Augustus Cæsar, about 750 years from the foundation of Rome, there appeared in Palestine a wonderful personage, who claimed to have come from God to speak with men about love, righteousness, and eternal life. He called God his father, told men they were brethren, and set them an example of a wonderful and many-sided goodness. He called disciples, taught publicly, wrought wonders; but, provoking the wrath of the Jewish authorities, he was put to a shameful and cruel death. The record relates, however, that on the third day he rose again and ascended into heaven, and that his disciples, inspired with a strange enthusiasm, perpetuated and extended the system overwhelmed by the crucifixion of the founder. The movement rapidly enlarged itself, men of all tribes and grades submitting to it, until social and political influence came under its sway, and the civilized world came to be called after a man who had been put to death on a little hill just outside of Jerusalem. Such is an outline of the story told in the New Testament, and handed down through later Scriptures and oral tradition. But the question is: Has Christ any other witnesses than evangelists and apostles? Let me cite certain witnesses, then, in confirmation of the truth of Christ's advent, and of the historical credibility of the Christian faith; and a Jew shall speak first.

Josephus was born about the year A. D. 37, four or five years after our Lord's ascension, and lived till he was 26 at Jerusalem, and must have known substantially the whole story of the life and death of Jesus of Nazareth. That he was aware of it is manifest from the little he gives us of it. He sketches the career of John the Baptist: says he was a preacher of virtue; that he baptized his proselytes; that he was imprisoned and put to death by Herod Antipas. He tells us also of James, the brother of him who was called Jesus, and of his being put to death. But the great testimony of Josephus is explicit and full as to Christ himself: and we are now permitted to quote without question, since even Mons. Renan concedes, in his Life of Jesus, that the substance of it at least is genuine.

"At that time," says the author of the Antiquities, "lived Jesus, a wise man—if he may be called a man, for he performed many wonderful works. He was the teacher of such men as received the truth with pleasure. He drew over to him many Jews and Gentiles. This was the Christ. [M. Renan says he was called elelo, Christ.] And when Pilate, at the instigation of the chief men among us, had condemned him to the cross, they who before had conceived an affection for him did not cease to adhere to him, for on the third day he appeared to them alive again. And the sect of Christians subsists to this time."

We have heard the Jew. Let us, in the next place, hear what a pagan can tell us of these things. Tacitus was born in about the year 60 of our era. He must not only have known of Christianity from the rumors and reports that came to Rome of its doings in the East, but he doubtless knew of it through its presence and growing strength in the metropolis itself. Yet he makes no direct and formal allusion to it. It is merely incidental to the order of his narrative that he condescends to notice at all what he probably esteemed another outburst of Hebrew fanaticism; and therefore his testimony, like that of Josephus, is the more valuable. Let us see how he came to give it.

Twenty-seven years after the crucifixion of Christ Nero burned Rome in a fit of reckless pleasure. To temper the horrors and hide the guilt of that atrocity, he caused to be seized, says Tacitus, "an immense multitude of men." Who were these men? The historian tells us. They were men, says he, "whom the common folks called Christians." Mark what is implied in this: that in less than thirty years after the death of Christ his followers were multitudinous in Rome. But who or what were these Christians, according to Tacitus? "The author of the name," he says, "was Christ, who, in the reign of Tiberius, suffered death by the sentence of the Procurator, Pontius Pilate. * * * This pernicious superstition," says he, "thus checked for a while, broke out again and spread not only over Judea, where the evil originated, but through Rome also. Accordingly the first who were apprehended confessed, and on their information a vast multitude were convicted. And when they were put to death mockery was added to their sufferings, for they were either disguised in the skins of wild beasts and worried to death by dogs, or they were crucified, or they were clothed in some inflammable covering, and when the day closed were burned as lights to illuminate the night." It is a fearful, tragic story, which we may read not only in ancient manuscripts, but in monumental evidences which admit of no interpolation or perversion. As we tread the dark, sepulchral avenues which stretch for hundreds of miles beneath the city and suburbs of Rome, to which the early Christians fled for shelter in times of persecution, and where they buried their dead, there we may read as we walk, by the glimmering torch, the testimonies of martyrs and confessors in multitudes, which the rocks have preserved as a witness for later times. Tombs, tier upon tier, line these gloomy labyrinths, with their inscriptions and symbols of Christian faith and hope going back to the days of primitive simplicity, testifying to the truth as it is in Jesus—affirming, with a pathos and power beyond all other witnesses, "that it is a faithful saying," etc. Here are credentials beyond all possibility of contradiction or suspicion which the victims of Nero's atrocities or Diocletian's wrath unconsciously left as a legacy for all time, which all who doubt the historical truthfulness of Christianity may read for themselves to-day and doubt no more.

I have said that much of the testimony of antiquity has been devoured by the hungry teeth of time; but in the Roman cataeombs death and the grave are eloquent in their attestation of the Gospel which Christ preached and which apostles proclaimed to the very confines of the then known world. But for the ravages inflicted by the past, we might have had to-day an authority more full and emphatic than even the testimony of Tacitus, for we read in early Christian apologists of a state paper then preserved in the archives of Rome, called the "Acts of Pontius Pilate," being a report made by the celebrated Procurator to his imperial master of his administration of affairs in Judea, in which were explicitly mentioned, it would seem, the miracles and crucifixion of our blessed Lord. To this paper Justin Martyr appeals in his apology to Antoninus Pius, about 140 A. D., where he says: "That these things were so done you may know from 'the Acts' made in the time of Pontius Pilate." This document has perished, however, and its direct value to us is lost; but we have such a document in the memorable letter of the younger Pliny, which he addressed while governor of Pontius and Bithynia to the Emperor Trajan, asking counsel as to how he should deal with those who were charged with neglecting the pagan temples and gods. "I have never had to deal with cases of this kind before," says he, "and I know not what is the custom to pursue—whether any distinction is to be made in respect of age, or whether those of tender years are to be treated the same as adults; whether pardon is to be granted on repentance, or whether it is useless to cease to be a Christian; whether it is the name that is to be punished, even when exempt from crime, or the crime attached to the name." What a strange question, my friends! A name criminal! Crime attached to a name! How vividly we are reminded of words which the New Testament has made familiar to us: "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake." "The guilt of these Christians," Pliny goes on to say, "they confessed to be this: that they were accustomed to meet on a stated day, before light, and to sing in concert a hymn to Christ as God, and to bind themselves by an oath, not for the perpetration of any wickedness, but that they would not commit any theft, robbery or adultery, nor violate their word, nor refuse to restore anything committed to their trust." While such were the numbers of Christians, even in that early age, that, as Pliny complains, the heathen temples were empty and desolate, their sacrifices and solemnities all but ceased. What a marvelous revolution in a brief space of years! Who was its author? In whose name and by whose power was it accomplished? These early Christian believers have told us, through the lips of a pagan philosopher: "They were accustomed to sing a hymn to Christ as God!"

These are merely specimen citations in proof of the divine reality of the life and work of Christ upon earth; they are familiar and trite to scholars, but they are also unanswerable. I might have marshaled many more into the line of my argument, from Jewish Targums, from Juvenal, Suetonias, Epictetus, and Aurelius; from the early enemies of Christianity: Lucian, Celsus, Porphyry, and the apostate Julian—all of whom were witnesses to the facts of our holy religion; and I have appealed to none but those who were the enemies of or aliens to the cause of Christ. These evidences are gathered from the cold, critical history of the times in which the writers lived, or in which monuments had their origin, or in close chronological proximity; and the testimony is to facts, you will observe, not to legends, or to the reveries of fanaticism, but to facts which involve the whole origin and constitution and history of the Gospel, the existence of Christ, with the time, place and characteristics of his ministry and that of his associates; his death: when, why, and through whom; his resurrection, affirmed as a fact even by his enemies, and confirmed by the faithfulness of his followers even unto death. There is abundance of other evidence, of course, to the advent and life of our Lord—the literature which Christianity produced, the new life it created, the institutions it built up, the victory it won over hoary superstitions, and false philosophy, and corrupt systems of morals, all the conspiring probabilities of which run together into a perfect conviction.—Dr. Rylance.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN A BELIEVER IN THE BIBLE.

Joshua F. Speed has just published a pamphlet giving recollections of President Lincoln, with whom he had a life long friendship. In the course of it he says:

"I have often been asked what were Mr. Lincoln's religious opinions. When I knew him in early life he was a skeptic. He had tried hard to be a believer, but his reason could not grasp and solve the great problem of redemption as taught. He was very cautious never to give expression to any thought or sentiment that would grate harshly upon a Christian's ear. For a sincere Christian he had great respect. He often said that the most ambitious man might live to see every hope fail, but no Christian could live to see his fail, because fulfillment could only come when life ended. But that was a subject we never discussed. The only evidence I have of any change was in the summer before he was killed. I was invited out to the Soldiers' Home to spend the night. As I entered the room, near night, he was sitting near a window intently reading his Bible. Approaching him I said, 'I am so glad to see you so profitably engaged.' 'Yes,' said he, 'I am profitably engaged.' 'Well,' said I, 'if you have recovered from your skepticism, I am sorry to say that I have not.' Looking me earnestly in the face and placing his hand on my shoulder, he said, 'You are wrong, Speed; take all of this book upon reason that you can, and the balance on faith, and you will live and die a happier and better man.'"

THE MIND OF CHRIST.

Yesterday I was going down a beautiful river on a steamboat. The river was very crooked, and it seemed wonderful that the great boat could go smoothly and steadily around the curves, sometimes so close to the shore that the branches of the trees brushed against her sides, but never running aground. None of the passengers would have known how to manage the boat, but the pilot knew exactly. Every time he struck his bell the engineer obeyed, and the boat went fast or slow, turned to the right or left, stopped at a landing or backed off into the stream, precisely as he ordered. Suppose when the pilot said, "Go ahead," the engineer had said, "No,

I want to stop a minute;" and when he said, "Back her," the engineer had said, "No, I want to go on," I am afraid I should not have been here to talk to you about this lesson, and try to make you understand what Paul meant when he told us that the easy and the only way to be good was to have in us "the mind that was in Christ Jesus." The mind is the pilot; he gives orders; he tells the feet where to go, and the hands what to do, and the lips what to say. Some morning you think how many wrong things you have done, how idle and disobedient and selfish and impatient you have been, and you say, "Now, I am going to be good; Jesus, help me to do just right to-day." You really try, but presently something happens to make you angry, and out comes the angry, unkind word. The good Spirit whispers, "Do not," but something in your heart says, "Yes, I will," and the tongue obeys. Or you are tempted to disobey, and while the good Spirit whispers, "Do not," something in your heart gives another order, and the hands and feet obey.

It is of no use to try to be good unless you have a pilot within your heart that will give right orders; and Paul told the people who wished to be followers of Christ a wonderful thing. He told them that instead of this mind that says to the hands and feet and the tongue, "Do wrong," "Please yourself," they might have within them the very mind that was in Christ Jesus, so that they would think and feel just as he did. That would be like having just one pilot to steer the boat, and letting him say always exactly where it should go. That would be like putting the old pilot, who was always getting us into trouble, right out of the boat, and taking the new one to direct everything for us. How smoothly the boat will go if we do that and take this mind that was in Christ Jesus to be our pilot! Listen to some of his orders:

"Little children, love one another."

"Do all things without murmurings or disputings."

"In lowliness of mind, let each esteem the other better than themselves."

"Giving thanks always, for all things, unto God."

"Walk as children of the light."

"Bear ye one another's burdens."

"Put on the whole armor of God."

Now, if the mind which was in Christ Jesus is in us, the heart will say to every order, "All right," and then obey it; and that is the easy way to be good."

We cannot understand how this mind, which dwelt in the Lord Jesus, can come and dwell in us, but God has promised to give it to us. Paul says God himself will work in us, making us wish to please him, and teaching us how to do it if we only do our part by asking that this heavenly guide may come into our hearts and lovingly listen and obey his commands.—Christian Union.

THE CHILDREN'S GARDEN.

Did you ever think, children, how much fun there would be in a garden? The way these things are usually managed, the garden is hated and dreaded by the boys and girls.

Now, that is all wrong. If you only look at it right, the garden is the prettiest and most interesting spot on the farm. Children are fond of learning things. Their bright eyes and quick ears are always open to catch something new. Well, in the growth of flowers and vegetables there is something ever new and beautiful. There is no fun at all in just dull hoeing and back-breaking weeding. But look at it another way. There is nothing prettier than rows of tender scarlet radishes, pale green onions, and bowers of climbing, curling lima beans. And when, in the midst of them, you have here and there a tiny bed of flaming phlox flowers, or a clump of brilliant carnations, you have a picture more beautiful than the most gifted painter could possibly make.

Then there are the grapes and berries—strawberries, raspberries and blackberries. They must have a place in the garden, which should be large. Then, children, you must learn all about grafting and trimming fruit. As you watch buds swell and blossoms die away, and leave the beginnings of the berry or grape that is to be, you will learn lessons in botany and horticulture that will be a valuable education to you.

A boyhood or girlhood in the bright, sweet country, where the sun shines, is worth a thousand years of life in the city.

You should have light, sharp tools to work with. Hoes and rakes made for grown people are too heavy for children's muscles. The garden should be first plowed and harrowed by a man, if it is large enough. If it is only a town garden, big enough for a few vegetables and berries, it may be spaded. The ground is not dirty, either. Earth is sweet and wholesome. A person may work in the ground all day, and if he bathes himself in the evening and gets the dust and perspiration off him, he will be cleaner than many a lady in her parlor is.

The same cleanliness should be brought to bear upon your garden, and every weed removed. Then, when you look at the bright green rows of things made by your own hands, it will dawn on you how beautiful the garden is.

MAKE SOMEBODY GLAD.

On life's rugged road,
As we journey each day,
Far, far more of sunshine
Would brighten the way,
If, forgetful of self
And our troubles, we had
The will, and would try
To make other hearts glad.

Though of the world's wealth
We have little in store,
And labor to keep
Grim want from the door,
With a hand that is kind,
And a heart that is true,
To make others glad
There is much we may do.

A word kindly spoken,
A smile or a tear,
Though seeming but trifles,
Full often may cheer.
Each day to our lives
Some treasure would add,
To be conscious that we Had made somebody glad. —Sel.

CUNNING OF THE APACHES.

The Apaches have smoke signals by day and fire beacons at night, and systems of telegraphy understood only by themselves. The displacement and overturning of a stone on a trail, or a bent and broken twig, is a note of warning, like a bugle call to disciplined troops. The many crossings dotting the road sides of Arizona and New Mexico, mark the graves of murdered men. "The country seems one vast graveyard," writes Susan B. Wallace, "if we may judge by the frequency of these rude memorials."

Trained by their mothers to theft and murder from childhood, they are inured to all extremes of heat and cold, hunger and thirst. They are cunning as the red fox, insatiate as tigers, and so ingenious in preparing for surprise, that they will envelope themselves in a gray blanket and sprinkle it carefully with earth, so as to resemble a granite boulder, to be passed within a few feet without suspicion. Again, they will cover themselves with fresh grass, and, lying motionless, appear as a natural portion of the field.—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

HARD TIMES, ITS CAUSE.

A prominent business man of Chicago, Mr. J. B. Hobbs, for twenty-five years intimately associated with the business and the philanthropies of that city, was at his own fireside discussing with some of our leading workers, the ever-pressing problem how to relieve the misery and want of a great city. The points he made were so fundamental, and their influence so far-reaching that we begged permission to give them to our readers. He kindly consented, and here they are:

We hear a great deal about hard times—men out of employment, women and children traveling up and down our streets, thinly clad, with pinched faces and sunken eyes—holding out their bony hands, begging for bread. Go to certain sections of our city and you will find them crowded together in cheerless hovels, dilapidated buildings—huddling together without fire, without food, or sufficient clothing—men seeking employment but finding none. There is a trembling, a rumbling, throughout the lower strata of society—portending an upheaval.

Merchants complain of dull times, poor business, small collections. Why all this complaint? why all this trouble? why all this sorrow, suffering, and poverty? Do people go hungry because there is a scarcity of wheat? No!! The world never produced more wheat than it did last year. The granaries of the world are bursting with abundance. The wheat trade is stagnant. Prices are low and the complaint everywhere is, Too much wheat, too much flour.

Is it because we have no corn? No!! The largest corn crop was raised last year that was ever raised in the history of this country. The United States alone is reported to have raised nearly two thousand millions of bushels. Hogs, cattle, and sheep cover our Western plains, and the products of these are piled up in our warehouses, and crowd our stores in every city, and are offered at prices lower than for many years.

Do men, women, and children go about our streets in rags because of a scarcity of dry-goods, of clothing, of boots and shoes? No!! The shelves and counters of our merchants are bending under burdens of every thing that man or woman or child can wear, which are labeled at prices that astonish the beholder.

Is it because money is scarce? No!! The official reports show that we have more money than ever before. We have about one billion, seven hundred and fifty millions of dollars—nearly $30 for each individual in the United States. This is three times as much as they had a quarter of a century ago. The vaults of our banks are bursting with idle capital, and capitalists can find no employment for their money. The earth contains unknown and unlimited quantities of gold and silver, of iron and copper, of coal and petroleum. Indeed, such another country the sun never shone on. Its broad prairies; its mineral wealth; its oceans and rivers of commerce; its abundant manufactories; its accumulated wealth; all that humanity needs, is to be had, and to be had by honest labor and proper industry. We can furnish our people with all these and then supply the balance of the world with all it needs, if called upon to do so. And yet we have the cry of "hard times.' What is the cause of it? I answer, It is the abominable liquor traffic!

The liquor traffic is sapping the foundations of our society; it is ruining our manhood and womanhood; it is filling our poor-houses and insane asylums, our prisons with criminals, and our graves with drunkards; ruining our merchants; blocking the wheels of our manufactories; causing stagnation, corruption, shame, sorrow, and death. Why? Because our people will not obey the injunction of the Scriptures, "Why spend your money for that which is not bread?" They spend it for liquor; they get nothing in return. The people earn money, but do not save it. If they would take good care of what they earn, every man could be a prince, and live under his own vine and fig tree.

The only expensive thing in this country is intoxicating liquor. It costs but little to make it, but the National Government taxes it; the State taxes it; the city taxes it. Taxes are piled up, higher and higher, and the cry is for more taxation. But the liquor tax is the poor man's tax. The few are rich, the many are poor, and the many poor pay the tax. They pay the tax for the rich man, and the rich man is satisfied, and clamors for high license.

The revenue of the city of Chicago from the liquor traffic is about $1,750,000. The total taxation of real estate, according to the comptroller's estimates, is only $2,750,000. Just think of that! The poor man pays seven-elevenths of the entire tax of Chicago. The poor man's tax is even more than that. Let us make a rough estimate: We have 3,500 saloons. They pay a license of $500 each. They pay the United States Government $25 each. They pay rent of at least $600 each, and support at least five persons for each saloon. Add to this, extra cost for furniture and free lunches—make the estimate low—and the total of these all show the saloon's profit. Then add to this amount the cost of the liquors, and we have only a portion of the poor man's tax. But this is enough to alarm us:

ESTIMATE.

3,500 saloons:
City license, $500, for each,	$ 1,750,000
Government tax, $25 "	87,500
Saloon rent, $600 "	2,100,000
Supporting 5 persons each saloon, 17,500 persons, at $400	7,000,000
Add for sundries, say, $200 each,	700,000
Total	$11,637,500
Add first cost of liquor, say	11,637,500
Total	$22,275,000

This is the poor man's drink bill. Suppose this same poor man should take this twenty-three million dollars, and, instead of paying into the coffers of the saloon, they should go to the butcher's and buy meat; to the grocer's and buy groceries; to the dry goods store and buy dry goods for his family; to the clothing store, boot and shoe store, hat and cap store; to the milliner, the furniture dealer; to the real estate man and buy a lot; then go to the builder and contract for a home, and after he has supplied himself with all he needed, lay a little by for a rainy day, what would be the result to business? Why, the wheels of commerce would commence to move; the merchants would see a revival of trade; the wheels of the manufactories would commence to revolve; labor would be in demand; hard times would disappear; poverty, shame, and sorrow would fly away; the millennium would come, and peace, prosperity, and righteousness would prevail throughout this quiet and glorious country.—Union Signal.

Religious News.

—Samuel Small, the evangelist, has given $140 for the benefit of an Atlanta, Ga., mission Sunday-school. He writes: "I hope it will do away with the necessity of an entertainment, for I do not believe these means of getting money for the Lord's work are either to its honor or glory. Try to avoid all such schemes. Let people give what they will, but please don't barter them anything for the Lord's sake."

—The Earl of Harrowby succeeds the late Earl of Shaftesbury as president of the British and Foreign Bible Society, on the list of the vice-presidents of which the name of the Earl of Harrowby has never been absent since 1810.

—The New York Chinese Mission has now between 4,000 and 5,000 Celestials in its Sabbath-schools. About sixty have joined the various churches since they began to receive instructions. The first Sabbath-school for these people was founded in New York about eighteen years ago.

—At a recent distribution of prizes to the pupils of four of the London Mission schools in Bhowanipur, India, the chairman stated that, according to the last government educational report, a larger number of the native Christian girls passed examination than of those not Christian. This he attributed to the higher motives that influenced the teachers in the Christian schools.

—A correspondent of the Examiner recalls the fact that there is in the British Museum an old proclamation, dated in the reign of Edward VI., which orders that all preachers whatsoever shall, for a certain specified period, stop their preaching and instead thereof take to praying.

—The Japanese government will send Miss Kin Kato, a graduate of the Tokio Normal School, for three years' training at the Normal School of Salem, Mass., to fit her to take charge of the normal schools of Japan. She will be the first Japanese woman educated at her government's expense in this country.

—Since the news of the murder of Bishop Hannington by a native king in Central Africa has been confirmed, the Church Missionary Society has received twenty-six offers of services—four from university and three from professional men.

—Mr. K. A. Burnell is now laboring in Southern California as "open-air evangelist of the Chicago Y. M. C. A." Judging by the appointments made for him in fourteen different places in that region, for the months of March and April, he must be a very busy man. His labors, too, are very fruitful, and he is joyfully received wherever he goes.

—"We completely acquit Mr. Moody of any desire to discriminate against negroes in his Southern campaign," says the Independent; "but he does consent to have separate meetings for them, which may mean shutting them out of his general meetings. We rejoice that the Atlanta colored people have indignantly refused the dole of separate services, and demand equal rights. In the prohibition campaign the white and colored clergymen held meetings together, and the precedent must carry."

—Major Whittle closed his meeting at Topeka with a Christian convention March 16 and 17. Ministers and workers from over 200 miles away were present, and a very profitable session was held. Reports showed a more wide-spread interest than was ever known in the State before. Of 175 churches, 100 reported special meetings and 4,625 conversions. There are over 2,000 churches in the State, many of which it is known have been greatly revived. It was estimated that not less than 10,000 conversions have occurred in all. Mr. McGranahan, who has been laid aside all winter has fully recovered, and he and Mrs. McGranahan sang at this convention for the first time since November. After closing at Topeka they made a tour of the churches where they had been, "confirming the disciples." They had their closing meeting in the State in Plymouth church, Lawrence, March 24, and departed next morning for their home in Chicago. Besides Major Whittle, Rev. Alex. Patterson and Rev. Mr. Dean of Chicago, and others, have been laboring in Kansas on the same work.

—The first session of the Icelandic Lutheran church in America was held already last June, but only now has intelligence concerning this meeting been given to the public through the new Icelandic paper, the Union. The synod was held in Winnepeg, Manitoba, Canada. Twelve congregations had subscribed to the proposed constitution, and two more did so later. One delegate is to be appointed to synod for every one hundred confirmed members. The president of the body is Rev. J. Bjarneson, of Winnepeg. In all there are about 7,000 Icelanders in the United States, nearly all of them being in the Northwest.

—About fifty German ministers of Cincinnati protest against the anti-Sabbath agitation of the German infidel Turners, and declare that they are in favor of the Sunday rest and in harmony with the law of Ohio.

—Within two years twenty Methodist missions have been planted in Chicago, eleven mission churches have been erected at a cost, including lots, of$58,000, and $18,000 have been paid to support pastors and Sunday-schools in those missions.

—The colored Methodists of the South have been increasing their contributions in a ratio even greater than that of their white brethren. Within the past ten years a table comprising sixteen negro conferences, with a membership, according to the latest statistics, of about 200,000, shows that the amount contributed for the support of Methodist Episcopal missions was $86,775.

—A correspondent of the Midland writes of the revival work under Major Whittle: "The greatest good was to the churches themselves. Major Whittle preached the old-fashioned Gospel with hell, damnation, eternal fire, and such terms all left in and emphasized. He bore down most severely on the worldliness in the church, and popular amusements, such as theatres, cards and dancing. He stiffened up the old-time orthodoxy wonderfully, and magnified the Word of God. He was very severe on clubs, etc., which means secret societies. In his address to young men he said: 'Young man, do you belong to a club? It's all I want to know about you if you do.' Personally, Mr. Whittle is against all secret orders."

—Rev. Dr. Milburn, chaplain of Congress, is a minister of the Methodist church, and a native of Philadelphia. He was chaplain of the House forty years ago. Ten years later he was appointed for the second time, and now, after the lapse of forty years, he occupies the office again. He has lately drawn to himself much public attention by his oddities in his prayers and acts. He makes pastoral calls upon the members of the House, and is popular with both Protestants and Romanists. He is blind.

—The British consul at Newchang, in China, in his later communications to the foreign office, speaks very favorably of the work done by the missionaries in Manchara. "Their labors," he says, "indirectly benefit our merchants, manufacturers and artisans. By means of these labors," he adds, "the tone of morality among the Chinese people has, during the last twenty years, perceptibly attained to a higher platform;" and to the same cause he attributes "the improved public spirit and the greater solicitude for the welfare of the people manifested by those in power."

—The death of Richard Chenevix Trench, D. D., late Archbishop of Dublin in the Irish church, was announced Mar. 28th. He was born at Dublin in 1807, graduated at Cambridge, became Hulsean lecturer and special preacher there in 1845, and professor of theology in King's College, London, 1846, dean of Westminster in 1856, and archbishop in 1864—a position resigned two years ago. His Notes on the Parables, Notes on the Miracles, his books On the Study of Words, On the Lessons in Proverbs, the Synonyms of the New Testament, English Past and Present, won for him a great reputation and are still highly valued.

—Evangelist J. F. Shorey, of the McAuley Water Street Mission, New York, is in New Orleans engaged in evangelical work with E. W. Bliss, of Boston. Among the recent converts is one of the officers of the Alabama, who was on board when she was sunk by the Kearsarge during the late war.

—A mission band of children in the little village of Kechonkson, Ulster Co., N. Y., is trying to raise money for missionary purposes by gathering and selling trailing arbutus, which grows luxuriously on the Shawangunk Mountains. The children have already received a good many orders from this and other cities where their novel scheme is known.

—The London Missionary Society announces that the first revision of the Malagasy Bible is completed, after nine years' labor, and the second is commenced.

—The high priest of the temple of the cruel Indian godess Kalee, in the district of Raipur, is to be tried for offering a human sacrifice in commemoration of the birth of a son to the Rajah.

—The Germans will not admit the Jesuits into their colonies. Any other form of priest may come, but not the Jesuit. Bismarck may flatter the Pope and be complacent to the cardinals, but the sons of Loyola, the servants of the "black Pope," he will not abide. Their missions are prohibited in all German colonies.—Presbyterian.

—Steamboat Frank, a Modoc Indian, who was captured at the time of the Modoc war, and who is still a prisoner of the United States, is attending, by permit of the government, the Oak Grove Seminary in Maine. He now calls himself Frank Modoc, and is studying for the ministry. He is making good progress in his studies, and is apparently a devout Christian. He is proud of his descent from a long line of Modoc chieftains, and conducts himself with true Indian dignity.

POINTS FROM JONES.

"If a man will admit that Jesus died to save sinners, I will chain him there, and let him graze all around that peg."

"A man gets religion a good deal like he gets the measles. A fellow gets tangled up with the measles, and in about ten days the doctor comes and gives him a cup of good hot tea, and tells him to keep on taking that until it breaks out, and then keep it broke out, and he will be all right. So some of you have got tangled up in this meeting until you feel as bad as a fellow with the measles before they break out. A few hot cups of Gospel tea will make religion break out all over you. Then keep it out, and you are all right. But, like the measles, if it goes in on you, it will kill you, sure."

"The mountains are God's thoughts piled up. The ocean is God's thoughts spread out. The flowers are God's thoughts in bloom. The dewdrops are God's thoughts in pearls."

"Religion is a beautiful casket which we show to our friends in our character; and when its secret spring is touched, heaven and eternal life open out to us."

Negative goodness! Positive righteousness! I say, brethren, when I am right, let me be right and right all over. I say I despise all sin, but, brother, we need another touch of Divine power, and that's the desire to pitch in, roll up your sleeves and go to work for God as if you were hired by the day, and work for heaven. That's the kind of Christianity to take this world.

If my boy is good for any kind of work, he does not need money to start life with, and if he is good for nothing money will only take him to hell all the faster and more surely. If I was a rich man and had half a million dollars, and had two boys, the first thing I would do would be to put $400,000 of it into investments for the next world, and the second, to put my boys out of sight of liquor. I would rather have my boy on a dead level, without a dollar in the world, than leave him half a million with the bar-room around him. I heard of a man who left the bar-rooms $3,000,000. What! Did he will his fortune to bar-keepers? No; but he left it to his boys, and the bar-keepers will soon have it all. Do you see how that thing works?

I want to say here that the most fearful sin a man commits is a sin deliberately against his conscience. When conscience says: "You ought to stop; don't do that;" "Murder, murder"—do you go on. Oh, my God! how men stab their conscience to death. I am ready to say here to-night, without any reference to any political cliques or parties, without respect to any particular churches, or individuals, that the great trouble here in America to-day is that the National conscience is dead, State conscience is dead, and municipal conscience is dead, and church conscience is dead, and individual conscience is dead. If God Almighty will come on this world, and bring conscience up out of its grave, and tear the grave-clothes off it, and let it walk abroad a living thing, a grand thing, we shall achieve a revolution in morals and politics, and in everything, and bring this country to righteousness and truth.

A man can never be worth much to others as long as he has to wait upon himself and sit up with himself and look after himself. I am sorry for any man whose only job in this world is to sit up and look after a carcass weighing about 175 pounds of solid, concentrated selfishness. [Laughter.] He has got an immense job on his hands, and I would rather try to satisfy all Chicago and minister to every man in Chicago than to look after such a character as that. Selfishness! There is not an element in selfishness that does not enter also into the punishment of pride. Hell, when you boil it down and bring it down to its last analysis, is pure, unadulterated, filtered selfishness. And oh, how unbearable that is! If there is anything incompatible with Christianity it is selfishness. If there is anything that Christianity will not have acquaintance with—if there is anything that Christianity will not have anything to do with, it is selfishness. Selfishness! If there is spirit in Christianity at all, it is a spirit of unselfishness. The grandest man in the city of Chicago is the most unselfish man in Chicago—I don't care who he is, I don't care where he lives, I don't care how much he is worth, I don't care how little he is worth, I don't care how old he is or how young. The grandest man in this city is the man who cares least for himself and the most for God and others.

OBITUARY.

PHILO P. CHAPMAN

died at Farmington, Ill., March 20, 1886, of internal cancer after a long and painful illness, in the 59th year of his age. The family, the church, and the community lose one who is sorely missed. For many years he has been identified with the prosperity of the town—more, perhaps, than anyone else, keeping many men employed and sustaining large operations. As a business man, his integrity was above suspicion. He never overreached a customer or crowded a competitor. To the poor he was a constant and invaluable friend, and their benedictions follow him now. He gave largely to all benevolent causes—more largely, perhaps, than any knew, and beyond the common measure. His place in the religious work of his church was always filled, and here he will be sorely missed. His sweet spirit reminded one of "that disciple whom Jesus loved; and, indeed, he seemed to rest very near to the heart of his Master. His devotion, constant spirit of prayer, tenderness of heart, gentleness and forgiveness towards all; his earnest wish to win men to Christ, and frequent labors for that end; above all, his sublime faith in God, were rare and beautiful. His last illness was one of great and constant pain, but he bore it all without complaining. He was ready to go, and longed to be at rest. Quietly he arranged his affairs and departed for a better world. Among his last words were these, "God makes no mistakes," and believing in that consoling truth the bereaved friends are trying to rest.

Testimonial of the Craig Folding Incubator.

[See advertisement elsewhere.]

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Nov. 17, 1885.

Mr. Craig:

Dear Sir:—I must write you what good luck I have had with your incubator. The number of eggs I put in the first time was 200, and I got out 197 chickens. The brooder I made from the plans in your catalogue is the finest thing for the young chicks I ever saw. Your incubator I know is the best one that is made; in fact, they can't make them any better. I have been a barber for about ten years, and am going to give it up now and go into the chicken business. I think that I will send for one larger than this one shortly. The incubator is no trouble to run, and works like a charm. D. C. HATCH.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People!

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of GEORGE W. CLARK, the Minstrel of Reform, a forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

IN THE COILS; —OR— The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Wat hman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

HOME AND HEALTH.

MANAGEMENT OF SCARLET FEVER.

Scarlet fever is spread by contagion—by the transfer of particles of living matter from a person suffering from the disease. These particles of living matter come from the skin, from the membrane lining of the mouth nose and throat, and perhaps also from the intestines and urinary organs. It is a disease which it is specially desirable to prevent the occurrence of in young children, partly because the susceptibility to its cause diminishes greatly with increase in age, and partly because it is much less dangerous in adults. There is reason to question the wisdom of using costly and troublesome methods of preventing the spread of measles, because the susceptibility of the cause of this disease remains in adult life, and it is, if anything, more liable to result in dangerous lung complications in advanced age than it is in children; but there can be no doubt as to the wisdom of restricting the spread of scarlet fever as much as possible.

The precautions to be taken when a case occurs in a house are in many respects the same as for a case of diphtheria, viz: to isolate the patient in an airy room having the least possible amount of furniture. The room should have no carpets or curtains, and no upholstered furniture, such as lounges, sofas, stuffed chairs, etc.

All the secretions and excretions, and all articles soiled by them, should be disinfected thoroughly and promptly while they are yet moist. A special and important precaution is to keep the whole surface of the body thoroughly anointed with some bland fatty matter, such as camphorated oil, vaseline or cosmoline, and especial care should be taken to do this when convalescence has set in and the peeling off of the skin has commenced. All toys, books, etc., handled by the child are dangerous, and had best be destroyed in the room by fire or by putting them into a vessel containing a strong solution of bichloride of mercury or of chloride of zinc.

No clothing, bedding, towels, or other woven stuffs should be taken from the room while dry; they should be placed in a tub or washboiler containing scalding-hot water, and thoroughly boiled before they are allowed to dry.

When the peeling of the skin has entirely ceased the patient should be thoroughly bathed—using warm soap and water—be dressed in entirely fresh clothing, and the room and its contents should be thoroughly disinfected. The average period during which complete isolation of the patient is required, and during which he should not go out of his room or receive any visitors, is five weeks. Usually six weeks will be required to secure absolute freedom from danger.

The walls and ceiling of the rooms should be rubbed with damp cloths, which should be at once burned or boiled. The floor and all wood-work should be thoroughly scrubbed with soap and water.

The windows, fire-place, doors, and all other outlets of the room should be tightly closed and sulphur be burned in the proportion of one pound of sulphur to each 1,000 cubic feet—that is, if the room is fifteen feet square and eleven feet high, about two and one half or three pounds of roll brim stone will be required. Put the brimstone in an iron kettle, and place the kettle on a tray of sand three inches thick, or on a platform of bricks; pour a wine glass of alcohol on the brimstone and set fire to it, leaving the room immediately, as the fumes are dangerous. Let the room remain tightly closed for twenty four hours, then open all windows and the fire place, and let the fresh air circulate in it for from twenty four to forty-eight hours.—Sanitary Engineer.

Walter M Beden, of Hadley, Lapeer county, Mich., having read in this column some remedies for diphtheria, writes that a liniment which he makes has never failed to effect the cure of this dread disease. He says he has furnished remedies for a multitude of cases without once failing. If the Cosmopolitan Liniment which he makes is as reliable as Bro. Beden, it can be recommended.

TO CURE A FELON.—A correspondent of the Michigan Farmer says: "I wish to tell those who may suffer from that terrible scourge, felons, of a painless remedy that will effect a perfect cure in twenty-four hours, as I have had occasion to prove within the last three days. A lady came here who had been suffering over two weeks with a felon on the end of her middle finger. I saturated a piece of wild turnip, the size of a bean, with spirits of turpentine, and applied it to the affected part. It relieved the pain at once. In twelve hours there was a hole to the bone and the felon was destroyed. I removed the turnip and applied healing salve, and the finger is well."

NINE WAYS TO COMMIT SUICIDE.

1. Wear narrow, thin shoes.
2. Wear a "snug" corset
3. Sit up in hot, unventilated rooms till midnight.
4. Sleep on feathers in a small, close room
5. Eat rich food rapidly and at irregular times.
6. Use coffee, tea, spirits and tobacco.
7. Stuff yourself with cake, confectionery and sweetmeats, and swallow a few patent medicines to get rid of them.
8. Marry a fashionable wife and live beyond your income.
9. Employ a fashionable and needy doctor to attend you in every slight ailment.—Dio Lewis's "Nuggets."

SORE THROAT.—Everybody has a cure for this trouble but simple remedies appear to be most effectual. Salt and water is used by many as a gargle, but a litile alum and honey dissolved in sage tea is better. Others, a few drops of camphor on loaf sugar, which very often affords immediate relief. An application of cloths wrung out of hot water and applied to the neck, changed as often as it begins to cool, has the most potency in removing inflammation.

THE TRIBUTE OF THE PUBLIC!

THE SLOANE MEMORIAL. 24 PAGES. SECOND EDITION.

Price, 10 cents. Stamps received.

The Memorial Number of the CHRISTIAN NATION was scarcely one week before the public when the entire edition, although more than double the usual size, was entirely exhausted, and orders were still pouring in. THE PUBLIC DEMANDED A SECOND EDITION, and we are glad to give it. It will be ready March 29th. The 2d edition will be a 24-page paper, and in addition to all the contents of the first edition relating to Dr. Sloane—viz: Memorial Sermon by the Rev. David Gregg, contributions from Prof. Wilson, President Hodge, President Scovel, Dr. George B Cheever and Oliver Johnson, and two original poems—will contain much new matter, including a thrilling account of the great John Brown meeting written by Dr. Sloane himself on the 25th anniversary of that event, and published in the CHRISTIAN NATION, Dec 17, 1884, additional Tributes, and the full-page portrait of Mr. Sloane, retouched and with a richer finish.

Added to this, it will contain the usual weekly contents of the paper, which include in this issue a SKETCH AND PORTRAIT of the eminent preacher, REV DR. JOHN HALL, of this city.

In response to many inquiries, we have printed on elegant heavy plate paper, 14x11, suitable for framing, our portrait of Dr. Sloane, which we are selling at 50 cents per copy, and which will be mailed, securely wrapped, to any address, on receipt of price, in stamps or otherwise. But in order to place a portrait of the loved features in as many homes as possible, we will send the portraits in clubs of five at 40c. each, or in clubs of ten at 30c. each.

Or we will send a copy of the Portrait FREE, postage paid, to any one, not a subscriber for the CHRISTIAN NATION, who will send us their subscription for one year, $2.

Address,

JOHN W. PRITCHARD,
252 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers treat the readers well.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen $3.50.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by F. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 2? cents each: per dozen $2.00

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees" 304 pages.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

FARM AND GARDEN.

A GOOD PLANT PROTECTOR.

Take four strips, one-half inch thick and one inch wide, and twelve inches long; bore a hole in one end of these, through which pass a wire, the ends of which are twisted together, but not so tightly as to prevent the opposite ends of the pieces from being spread apart from eight inches to a foot, making a tent-shaped frame. Cheap muslin is then tacked on the frame—of course spreading the pieces before doing so. The muslin should be brought down to within about two inches of the ends of the sticks, so as to allow them to run into the ground that distance when in use. When not in use, the protectors can be closed up and take but little room, and if properly cared for they will last several seasons.—American Agriculturist.

EARLY PEAS.

There are some vegetables which we can buy in market as good as we can grow at home. Peas are not one of them. We get peas from the South and they are very fair, but lack the delicacy of those from our own garden. It is desirable, therefore, to get peas as early as possible. The sweet, wrinkled peas are not, and never will be, as hardy as the smooth varieties. The same is true of sweet corn; the extra early kinds are not as sweet as the later varieties; but, like the peas, they are very good until we get something better. The small, hardy varieties of peas, like the Early Kent, will stand rough treatment. They can be sown the moment the frost is out of the surface soil, and after they are up it is seldom, if ever, that they are seriously injured by frost. A warm, sandy soil is desirable, with a southern exposure, and if on the eastern or southern side of a wall or board fence or building, so much the better. The soil can hardly be too rich It is a mistake to spade fine, light, sandy land deep for early peas. The surface soil which has been exposed to the sun is many degrees warmer than the soil below which has only just thawed. The later varieties, planted when the soil is dry and warm, can be covered with two, three, four, or even five inches of soil, deeper or shallower as the soil is heavy or light; but the small, early peas should rarely be covered over two inches deep, and if the soil is wet and cold an inch is sufficient. As soon as the peas appear draw some earth up to the row with a hoe or rake, and if the soil is dry and light half an inch or so of soil may be pulled between or over the peas. If the soil is moist and heavy, it may be well to scatter a little stable manure on the side and on the top of the row. A board placed edgewise on the north side of the row will reflect the rays of the sun.

Another method of hastening early peas is to soak them in warm water for twenty-four hours and then mix them with moss or light sand and keep them warm and moist until they sprout. Then sow them in the ordinary way, using plenty of seed. We have sown them when sprouted an inch long, but it is better, if the weather is not suitable, to check the growth of the peas in the house by placing them in a cellar or other cold place. If the land is rich thick planting is desirable, as it favors early maturity. We make the row three or four inches wide and deep, and sow the peas in the rows for their whole width, almost as thick as they will lie without touching each other. —American Agriculturist.

A Man Comes From Alabama to Express His Gratitude to an Atlanta Man.

"Is this Dr. Walter Taylor?"

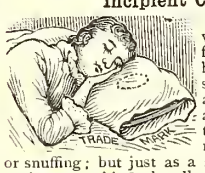
The speaker was an elderly man, of fine appearance, and evidently a stranger in the city. The question was addressed to Dr. Walter A. Taylor, who sat in his office immersed in the correspondence of his immense business.

"That is my name, sir," he replied, looking up inquiringly from his work.

"My name is Austin. I live at Culman, Ala. I have come to see you, Dr. Taylor, to express to you my gratitude."

Dr. Taylor smiled and inquired as to the occasion of his gratitude.

"You have saved my life, sir, and I come to tell you that, and to shake your hand. About a year ago I was taken with pneumonia, and it developed into a very ugly case. I was in my bed for nine months, and was harrassed and weakened with a cough that was almost constant. Nothing would relieve it. I had physician after physician, and tried remedy after remedy. I have studied medicine myself, and now in the jewelry business. I was almost worn out, and had about given up my case as hopeless. One day I staggered out of bed, to have a consultation with all the physicians, to see if I could not, as a last resort, obtain some relief from my ills. The physicians in consultation told me that they could do nothing for me, and, hardly able to walk, I made my way to a drugstore, and while in there I spoke of the consultation just held in my case to the druggist, and he said; "Here is a remedy that I hear very highly spoken of. I know nothing of it from personal experience, but it has a great reputation, and my customers like it." The remedy handed me was Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein. I took it with about the same spirit that a drowning man would catch at a straw. I had little hope of its efficacy, but I thought I ought to try everything, and therefore took the bottle. I was barely able to get back to my bed again. It was an effort for me to walk down stairs. I was disspirited, hopeless and weak beyond expression, and continually growing weaker. With the very first bottle of Sweet Gum and Mullein my condition improved. It has been less than five weeks since I began on your remedy, and now I walk and travel without the slightest inconvenience up stairs or down stairs. My cough has left me, my health almost is restored, and I am in good condition. It is my earnest conviction that Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein saved my life, and I felt that I wanted to look you in the face, and take you by the hand and tell you so. I want to tell it also for the benefit of thousands of others who are suffering, and who are growing weaker and weaker from the use of inefficient remedies."



The above is the exact statement of this remarkable case. Mr. Austin insisted on seeing Mr. Taylor's laboratory, press rooms, packing rooms, and every part of his immense establishment. He wanted to see where Sweet Gum and Mullein was made. He took the greatest interest in every part of the process, and having been a physician, was enabled to look at it intelligently and to testify to the correct curative principles involved in the materials out of which the remedy is made, and the manner in which it is compounded. After a half hour's pleasant sight-seeing, and conversation he took his departure, saying to Dr. Taylor as he went out of the door, "I am satisfied now that I have seen the man that saved my life, for I tell you Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein is what stopped the progress of my disease, when everything else had failed, and hope had almost gone." This is the testimony borne by thousands of others by letter and otherwise, but it is seldom that the proprietor of a medicine finds a man who gets on the train and rides hundreds of miles to see him that he may express his appreciation and gratitude.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

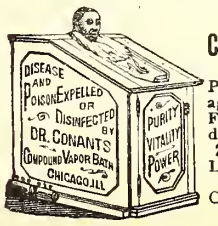
THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the Pillow-Inhaler, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

Hon. E. L. Hedden, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the Pillow-Inhaler has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."



E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

Mr. H. G. Teele, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a Pillow-Inhaler, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the Pillow-Inhaler has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEEDLE WORK

Needle-Work: A Manual of Stitches and Studies in Embroidery and Drawn Work. Edited by Jenny June.

This manual is an attempt to systematize and arrange in an order convenient for workers, the modern methods in Embroidery and Drawn Work. The author has felt the desire and the responsibility involved in aiding women to a true and practical guide to the beautiful art of needle-work. When the Angel of Mercy begged that woman might not be created because she would be abused by man, as the stronger, the Lord listened, but felt that he could not give up the whole scheme of creation, so he gave the loving Angel permission to bestow upon her any compensating gift she chose, and the Angel pityingly endowed her with tears and the love of needle-work. This book is printed on fine paper, has a handsome cover, and contains

200 Illustrations

The list of stitches, with illustrations, are: Buttonhole—Hemstitch—Brier Stitch—Crow's Foot—Herring Bone—Fodder Stitch—Two Tie—Three Tie—Drawn Work—Stem Stitch—Twisted Chain or Rope Stitch—Split Stitch—French Knot—Solid Leaf—Satin Stitch—Padding—Darning Stitch—Skeleton Outline—Couching, Kensington, Filling, Coral, Italian, Leviathan and Holbein Stitches—Applique—Interlaced Ground—Weaving Stitch—Gold and Silver Thread—Arrasene Ribbon Work, etc.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Senator Logan's bill for the increase of the army was defeated in the Senate, Wednesday, by a vote of 19 yeas to 31 nays, after a long and somewhat personal debate.

The President sent to the Senate the name of Caleb W West, of Kentucky, to be Governor of Utah.

Saturday was a field-day for bridges in Congress. The lower house passed bills authorizing the building of twenty-two bridges, chiefly over the Mississippi and Missouri rivers.

A bill has been passed by the Senate authorizing the people of Washington Territory and the adjacent part of Idaho to form a State government.

The Eustis amendment to the Washington Territory admission bill, limiting the right of suffrage in the proposed new State to qualified male electors only, was rejected by the Senate—yeas 12, nays 25.

COUNTRY.

A postal car on the Lake Shore road was burned early Thursday morning at Osk Harbor, Ohio. It contained Western mail matter for all points east of Toledo. The body of a young married woman, which was being taken to New York State for interment, was cremated in the blazing car.

A train on the Fitchburg railroad jumped the track near West Deerfield, Mass., Wednesday evening, the cars tumbling down an embankment 200 feet in height, some of them falling into the river. Ten persons were killed and thirty injured, some fatally; and it was feared that other bodies would be found in the wreck.

The Pemberton cotton mills, a cluster of large buildings on the bank of the river at Lawrence, Mass., were destroyed by fire. The loss was about $900,000, and one life was lost. In 1860 the factory was destroyed by fire after one large building, in which nearly 700 operatives were at work, had collapsed. The number killed outright or burned to death was 115, and 165 more were wounded.

A dory which had become separated from a fishing schooner drifted ashore Monday at Guyon Island, Cape Breton. In it were two living and two dead men, the latter having perished from hunger and exposure.

Thos. A. Thacher, a professor in Yale college, was found dead in his bed Wednesday morning.

Among the many tragedies which have occured at Niagara falls the death of T. G Dewitt, a New York commercial traveler, will always be remembered as of surpassing horror. While viewing the ice formation below the cataract, the unfortunate traveler slipped and shot down the mound with frightful rapidity, disappearing as was supposed, into the water below. It now transpires that he was not drowned nor seriously injured by the fall, but fell in a crevice, where he either froze or starved to death. His body will be recovered.

The Pacific Mail line has raised the passenger rates for Chinese from $25 to $70 per head for the purpose of stopping the exodus now in progress.

THE STRIKE.

The dismissal of firemen by the Missouri Pacific road at St. Louis is expected to lead to complications with the engineers. At Argenta, Ark., a deputy sheriff who had arrested one of the Knights was shot and dangerously wounded. Eight strikers were sentenced at El Paso, Tex., by Judge Turner in the United States Court, seven of the men getting ninety days in jail and one thirty days. At Fort Worth, two men implicated in last Saturday's tragedy were indicted for murder, and District Master Workman M. M Lavin was indicted as accessory to the killing, bail in the three cases being fixed at $6,000 each. Mr. Powderly has telegraphed Congressman Curtin to press the passage of his resolution for an investigation of the labor troubles in the Southwest. Another strike was ordered in the Missouri Pacific shops at Atchison, and eighteen out of the sixty one men employed abandoned their places.

In regard to the suits brought against the strikers, there are about 1,300 criminal suits pending, and the juries, as a rule, do not leave their seats before convicting the strikers. At Texarkana, thirteen strikers who have been lying in jail a week have been convicted of misdemeanor. A good many men have been arrested for contempt of court in disregarding the injunction which was recently obtained against interference with the operations of the road. The feeling against the strikers is very bitter in some sections of the Southwest.

Railway strikers Friday morning advanced upon the round-house of the Iron Mountain road at Little Rock, Ark., and were refused admission by Deputy Sheriff Williams, who was guarding the place. They fired upon him, wounding him, it is supposed, mortally. Some of the strikers were arrested.

A mob in East St. Louis Friday marched upon the yards of the Louisville & Nashville railway and were fired upon by deputy sheriffs, three men being instantly killed and two others and one woman mortally wounded. The deputies surrendered themselves to the St. Louis police. Subsequently strikers attacked deputy sheriffs in the yards of the Ohio & Mississippi railroad and killed one man. Next day over $50,000 worth of property, mostly loaded freight cars, was destroyed by incendiary fires, the work of the strikers. During the afternoon eight companies of Illinois militia were on the ground, and succeeded in quelling the disorder which prevailed. The city was placed under martial law, no one being allowed to pass over the river from St. Louis, and nearly a thousand troops guarding the place.

Everything was quiet in East St. Louis Sunday. With the arrival of additional troops, all strategic points in the city are now covered. A determined effort will be made to resume work on the several roads, and it is expected a fair test will be made of the inclination of the men to return to work when afforded protection. The funeral of the three victims of Friday's tragedy occurred Sunday morning, and was attended by 1,500 Knights of Labor, Knights of Honor, and other organizations.

FOREIGN.

The introduction of Gladstone's Irish Home Rule bill Thursday and three hours accompanying, was one of the greatest events in recent English history. The populace, cheering and excited, yet not turbulent, filled the streets from Gladstone's house to Westminster, so that the police could hardly make a passage. The bill was received with great enthusiasm by the Irish members and the majority of the Liberals, but only a single London paper favors the plan. A large number of American newspapers endorse the Irish policy outlined by Mr. Gladstone. The comments of English and Irish newspapers are varied in character, but generally in favor. Special cablegrams show that the plan is treated with scant courtesy in Austro-Hungary, is condemned as dangerous in Germany, is enthusiastically received in France, and is watched with keenest anxiety in Russia.

The opponents of Mr. Gladstone's Irish bill are beginning to admit that it will probably pass its second reading by a small majority. The press regard the abolition of Irish representation in the Imperial Parliament as the cardinal defect in the Premier's bill.

Much uneasiness is felt among the European officials in India in consequence of the existence of Brahmin plots against the English regime.

Five thieves entered the magazine at Colon, Cuba, for the purpose of stealing powder. During their operations one lighted a match, causing an explosion, which killed seven persons outright, wounded thirty eight others, and wrecked twelve houses.

Advices from Anam state that anarchy prevails in that country. Bands of robbers are scouring the land, and the people are in revolt against French authority. The rebels have attacked the French near Hue, the capital, and are advancing in numbers upon Quintone.

A collision between railroad trains near Monte Carlo, on Tuesday, resulted in the loss of many lives, some of them being English visitors.

The bill providing for "scientific temperance instruction in schools under federal jurisdiction" passed the Senate unanimously not long since. This history of the vote is told with a graphic interest in the Union Signal by Mrs. Hunt of the W. C. T. U. committee in charge of the measure. The early opposition, even to ridicule, which was early set against the measure seemed to be shamed out of sight, and when Senator Blair called it out of its natural place, low down in the calendar, no voice was raised against it. Many prayers will arise that Divine power may move upon the House in like manner. The objectors will be weakened by the action of Rhode Island the other day in coming up to the side of her New England sister, Maine, with a prohibition law and constitutional amendment. The liquor dealers make little disturbance over the matter. The State is too small to sell much in it, and as the property owners only are voters, they see liquor has no chance. With a property or educational limitation on voters in every State the liquor curse would soon be wiped out.

The decision of a Kansas judge that property investments destroyed by prohibition must be made good, seems to be indirectly sustained by the United States Supreme Court. A Chicago "drummer" named Walling was arrested in Michigan for selling liquor to be shipped from Illinois, it being contrary to Michigan law. He was convicted on two charges and fined, and, in default of payment, was imprisoned. The State Supreme Court sustained the law, but the U. S. Court reversed that decision, on the ground that one State cannot pass laws restraining commerce among States, which is a usurpation of the power conferred by the Constitution upon Congress alone. The Michigan court held that the State law was in the nature of a police regulation for the discouragement of the use of intoxicants and the preservation of the health and morals of the people. The United States Supreme Court says this would be a perfect justification of the law, if it did not act as a regulation of commerce among States. If business interests can be thus defended, property may also, so long as the infamous liquor traffic is recognized and legalized by the United States Government, by its taxes and licenses.

We decidedly favor the boycott as applied to all kinds of business which are hurtful to the general interests of society. If men engage in such business it ought to be legally suppressed. We shall continue to demand such suppression, and listen to no pleas of personal rights. There can be no right to do wrong, even though the letter of the law may sanction it. Failing to secure such legal suppression, by all means let the men who thus wrong society be deprived of all possible incentives to such business. Men do not keep dram-shops from any motives of philanthropy; it is solely to make money. Many who are engaged in this business often confess and deplore its pernicious results. "The love of money is the root of all evil," especially of this. Let the dram-shop, the distillery, the brewery, the billiard-hall, the theater and the lodge be subjected to this most effective method of moral coercion. If we cannot have these institutions suppressed by legal enactment, let them be suppressed by a higher law than any that is written on the statute-book. Let them stand in the same category where all pure-minded and honorable men place the brothel and the gambling-hell, and they will soon die for want of food. If this Irish invention shall be thus practically utilized by our laboring population, we shall be immense gainers in money and morals, and be under vast obligations to the Emerald Isle.

And for precisely the same reason that we ought to apply the boycott to that business that is hurtful to the general interests, we ought not to suffer it to be applied to such kinds of business as are needful and important to the public welfare. It is a motto of the Knights of Labor that whatever concerns one concerns all. This is a correct principle, not simply as applied to the members of an order, but to all members of the social fabric. It follows that whatever injures any legitimate business injures all the people, and as a public injury ought to be suppressed for the public good. When such boycott is declared against any useful and legitimate business, it ought to be regarded as a conspiracy against society and proceeded against as in other conspiracies.

The able discussion now going on in the United States Senate in reference to secrecy in Executive sessions can scarcely fail to be prolific of good results. It is noteworthy that the two Senators who have made themselves prominent in favor of open sessions, Messrs. Platt and Logan, are both prominent Freemasons. Perhaps they have seen too much of Masonic hollowness and folly to want to see it imitated in the Senate. At all events, Mr. Logan is quite right when he holds that the business of the United States Senate is the business of the American people, and they have a right to know how it is transacted. The plea of Senator Riddleberger is also quite in point. He said it was impossible to keep the doings of the Senate entirely secret. Most of what is transacted appears in the newspapers, but not always with accuracy. The only way to prevent the misrepresentation of Senators is to let all the facts be given to the public. Unless our public men are willing to put back the dial of progress, repeal and obliterate our public schools, and abolish the newspapers, they had better stop trying to stifle investigation, and especially of the facts that the people have a right and a mind to know.

But not only are Senatorial secrets at a discount (for they can be bought in all the news-rooms for from one to five cents), but the great secret societies that make such vast pretensions and are so intolerant and exacting, have been given away to such an extent that no man with decent self-respect can keep up the pretension that they are secret, except in the privacy of their meetings. Most of them do affect the public interests. Some of them are manifestly political in their objects, and all are matters of public concernment. As a people, we want no privileged class. Whatever is in promotion of the public good belongs to the public and ought to be known. Whatever is of special advantage to the few is a menace and detriment to the many. Secret organizations are wholly out of place in a republic.

IRELAND.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

There is a legend that St. Colomba, thirteen centuries ago, emigrated from Ireland, the Isle of Saints, to the Hebrides, and built a monastery at Islay, hoping to have a little rest from those among whom he had fruitlessly labored, whose great ambition he found was to be a law unto themselves and an annoyance to everybody else. When the tower of his new monastery was completed, he ascended it, and on looking towards the setting sun, found to his intense disgust that he could descry on the rim of the horizon the Emerald Isle. That was enough, he had the monastery pulled down at once and he set sail for Iona, where he would be out of sight of the place altogether. After thirteen centuries of opportunities for advancement, this land of saints still retains those elements which make it the dread of the politician and the aversion of the patriot.

William Pitt is reported to have said in his day, that the only cure for Irish discontent would be a twelve hours' immersion in the Atlantic. Unless Mr. Gladstone can manage to throw a rope round the island and haul it into one of the deep valleys of the Atlantic, and there leave it, the commotion will continue. With all its poverty, I find that during the last year more was spent upon intoxicants than would have paid the entire rental of the land. There is an ever increasing consumption of intoxicants, an increasing number of arrests for violation of the law, and an increasing amount of unrest and dissatisfaction. The drink traffic prospers, whatever may be the condition of trade and agriculture.

Mr. Gladstone has not yet made known the line of legislation which he desires to see accomplished with regard to Ireland. The newspapers are full of so-called revelations, which are only crude guesses. There are rumors of divisions in the Cabinet on the Irish question. They are all certain they are right, though their statements contradict each other. That, however, is a mere trifle, for as soon as Mr. Gladstone propounds his views they will each demonstrate that their words, if not based on actual knowledge, were a correct prophecy of events. I have no idea what Mr. Gladstone's proposals will be, but shall not be surprised if two or three cabinets get wrecked before Ireland gets satisfied. An old neighbor of mine, an Irish doctor, says that the only cure for Ireland is to hang the priests and wreck the whisky barrels. Most thinking people maintain that as long as the minds of the people are held in thraldom by the priesthood, and their passions are inflamed by whisky, so long will Ireland be a thorn in the side of all civilized nations. Until Ireland is freed from the perverters of the Decalogue there is very little hope of any legislation satisfying the land. Liberate her from the bondage of Rome and implant within her Protestant ideas, and then like all other Protestant nations she will enter upon an eve of progress.

How to formulate a system of Home Rule which shall not interfere with the unity of the Empire is a problem which I am afraid even Mr. Gladstone's genius will not satisfactorily accomplish. To me, at present, it seems folly to attempt to do anything more than bring the land under the control of such laws as will give freedom and protection to all honest efforts at advancement. The gallant efforts of Mr. Morley to maintain order in Ireland by means of the ordinary law are not meeting with the success they deserve. Crime continues to advance. All moral principles seem subverted.

It is reported that Mr. Gladstone proposes to advance two hundred millions of pounds to buy out the Irish landlords, and charge the Irish farmers with interest instead of rent. The wisdom of such a proposal is doubted. I think the Irish farmers will feel even less disposed to pay the State than to pay the landlords.

When Mr. Parnell first invited Irish tenants to break their contracts and retain their rents, he was freely told that he was teaching the people to play the thief. There are many virtues which neither Mr. Parnell nor the priesthood wish to see flourishing in Ireland. The government is honestly anxious to do all it can to promote the welfare of the Irish nation, but ignorance under the guidance of craft is difficult to satisfy.

Grimsby, England, Mar. 26, 1886.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

BY REV. G. W. HOWE.

The heading of this article opens a subject of such gigantic proportions that no one mind at this present time can fully measure its height, depth, length and breadth, but let me put a few thoughts into the scale of public sentiment, to be honestly and conscientiously weighed by all who shall read this article. It is impossible to get the labor and capital question evenly balanced.

We now have a population of about 60,000,000 and about 27,000,000 farmers. We want at least 6,500,000 more farmers, leaving some 26,500,000 for all other purposes. The only rule by which this problem of labor and capital can be solved is by demand and supply. When the demand is greater than the supply, the deficiency must be supplied from the labor side; and when the supply is greater than the demand, then the supply must turn their attention to some other employment—other than to be mechanics, or in any one to depend upon capitalists for employment. This will give to the nation the much-needed 6,500,000 additional farmers, and which will make a demand for a portion of our millions of acres of public lands. If there is a shortage of help on either side, it had better be on the side of labor or mechanics. The soil should be cultivated first of all, as everybody is fed from the fields, even kings.

Better have hundreds of millions of bushels of grain in store without a market than hundreds of thousands of people without bread. This will give honorable employment to all who wish to labor.

I would say to that army of young men now crowding our cities and villages, waiting for something to turn up, go West; and if you have got the snap and push in you, you will soon turn up something that will be a lasting blessing to you and the world of which you are a part.

I cannot close this article without taking a bird's-eye view of our present labor troubles. Almost every paper and every week bring to us labor strikes and crimes. Is there no remedy?

I believe that sixty years ago there was no other secret, oath-bound association but Freemasonry; and after the abduction and murder of William Morgan by the Masonic lodge, Masonry became almost annihilated, such was public sentiment against it, and it was thought by many that it would never obtain a foothold among respectable people. But how soon it has come to the front and become a giant in its proportions, and has found its way into every grade of society, and fills almost every office in the State and nation! And what is still more damning is, it has found its way into the church of Jesus Christ, and some of his professed ministers have joined the Christless Masonic lodge. As the name of Jesus Christ is never used in a Masonic lodge in their religious services, what must Christians think of a Masonic minister conducting the religious services of the lodge without daring to use the name of Him whom he professes to serve? I want to give to every Masonic minister a text to preach from the next Sabbath morning after he has conducted the religious services of the lodge—1 Cor. 2: 2: "For I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ, and him crucified," when perhaps only the night before, in his lodge-religion, he dare not speak his name. Such a minister, then, must have two religions—a Christless religion for the lodge, and another religion, all Christ, for the people of his charge. Who can have any confidence in the religion of an adhering Mason? Such double-dealing in a Masonic minister's religion destroys our confidence in the man.

Secret, oath-bound associations are the sole and only cause of all the convulsions now going on, not only in our beloved country, but also in foreign countries.

It was thought at the close of the rebellion that the ex-rebels would never obtain a political resurrection; but how soon they were found in council among the chief rulers of the nation!

Secret societies or organizations have multiplied until they are legion, and have found their way into every avenue of society, corrupting our so-called courts of justice, influencing our judges and jurors, and clearing criminals from justice. Secretism has also corrupted and demoralized our churches and ministry until they have nearly lost their power with God. How many churches are running two religions in the same church! One is the Christless Masonic religion, and the other is the pure and holy religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. There is no neutrality in religion. Jesus said: "He that is not for me is against me." Nearly every strike is commenced and carried on by secret organizations. Such secret organizations ought to be prohibited by law. Look at the crimes and murders committed against the unoffending Chinese of America.

The hop-growers of the Pacific Coast have formerly employed Chinese labor to pick their hops, but a secret organization has notified the hop-growers that if they employ Chinese help this year they will burn their hop-houses. Now, if a man should get his buildings insured for all they are worth and then burn them to get the insurance money, such a man would grace the inside of a penitentiary better than he would a civilized community. What must we say, then, of a secret organization whose mission is to destroy the property and lives of others?

No lawlessness is claimed against the Chinese anywhere, hence no excuse for their treatment. What right has any man or set of men to say whom I shall or shall not employ? Our wrongs must be adjusted without brute force.

I wish to give a few words of advice to the young men who will soon be called upon to make our laws and administer the same: Beware of secret associations. Enter not into their secret councils. Never choose darkness; if you do, your deeds will be evil; but choose the light, that all may see that your deeds are wrought in God.

Portlandville, N. Y.

DEVIL-WORSHIP IN THE LODGE.

BY REV. C. F. HAWLEY.

What do we mean by saying that the lodge worship is the worship of devils? The Holy Ghost has said (1 Col. 10: 20): "The things that the Gentiles sacrifice they sacrifice to devils, and not to God." If a Christian is joined in that false worship, he comes into fellowship with devils. He is guilty of spiritual adultery, and provokes God to jealousy.

In the patriarchical age, and during the dispensation of the law as given by Moses, animal sacrifices were offered to God by his worshipers. The false worshipers of those days patterned after the true, in that they also offered animal sacrifices in their worship. And God declares that the sacrifices in these false worships were offered to devils. Since Christ died to atone for sin, animal sacrifices are no longer offered in the true worship. God is worshiped with thanksgiving and prayer and praise by those who believe in Jesus.

Freemasonry was organized as a religious society, in the Apple Tree Tavern in London, England, in 1717. Odd-fellowship is only about half as old. They are both religious societies. Being organized in the Christian era, in a Christian country, they pattern after the true religion and worship by prayer and song, just as the false religions of antiquity patterned after the true and offered animal sacrifices in their worships.

Freemasonry pretends to teach the way to heaven; but the one, only way to God and heaven both Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship ignore and reject. For repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ and consequent redemption through his blood, and regeneration and sanctification by the Holy Spirit, Masonry substitutes the observance of ceremonies and obligations and precepts.

There is no lack of prayer in the ritual of the lodge, but the prayers of Blue Lodge Masonry and of Odd-fellowship are deistical. They utterly ignore the atonement and intercession of the Lord Jesus Christ; for neither Blue Lodge Masonry nor Odd-fellowship authorizes praying in the name of Christ. Their worship is therefore as false and deceptive, and soul-destroying as were the false worships of antiquity of which the apostle speaks. They can have no access to God, because they do not seek access to him as humble penitents through the mediation of Christ Jesus. God does not receive their deistical worship, for no man can come to the Father but by Jesus Christ.

The deistical worship of the lodge is, therefore, as really false worship and as truly the worship of devils as were the Gentile worships of which the apostle speaks; for if the false worships of antiquity, patterned after the worship of God under the law, were devil-worship, then the false worships of modern times that are patterned after the worship of God in the Gospel dispensation are also devil-worship.

To be more explicit, if the sacrifices of the false worshipers in Paul's day were offered to devils, then the deistical prayers of Blue Lodge Masonry and Odd-fellowship in our day are also offered to devils.

Do the Masons and Odd-fellows know that they are worshiping devils? you ask.

I reply, no. Like the Samaritans in Christ's time, they worship they "know not what." But God has revealed in his word the terrible truth that those who worship falsely worship devils. The authorized worship of Blue Lodge Masonry and Odd-fellowship is deistical, and therefore false, because no man can have access to God but by Christ.

The Gentiles of whom Paul speaks assumed to worship the gods; but the Holy Ghost, speaking through Paul, says they worshiped devils. Blue Lodge Masonry assumes to worship the Grand Architect of the universe; but, according to the inspired Word of God, their deistical worship is the worship of devils. Do Masons and Odd-fellows who worship devils in the lodge vainly hope to be accepted of God when they unite in worshiping him as revealed in Christ in the church? Terrible delusion! Hath not the Holy Ghost said, "Ye can not drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils; ye can not be partakers of the Lord's table and the table of devils." How horrible the spiritual whoredom that seeks to alternate between the fellowship of God and the fellowship of devils! How terribly blinded by the god of this world is that church that receives to its fellowship and communion the impenitent worshipers of devils!

God is provoked to jealousy by their spiritual whoredom, and if they refuse to obey his call to come out and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing, how can they hope to escape his judgments?

THE SUPPLY OF MINISTERS

BY REV. ISAAC BANCROFT.

There are two plans; one man's the other God's. Let us consider man's first, because that is in the ascendant at the present time.

Man's way is to convert a man, then send him off away from home among strangers to a school for one or two years, when he is fitted for college; then to stay in college for four years; by that time he ought to be fitted for a theological seminary where he has to stay for three years, making in all from eight to ten years of his life to fit him for a Christian minister, and these years the best portion of his life. Now we are to take the Word of God for our sole guide. College is mentioned only twice in the Bible. She dwelt in the college at Jerusalem. Now these colleges were not for making ministers evidently, for our colleges have no women living in them. I find no theological seminaries in the Bible and no academies, no directions for ministers to go to such places to learn to win souls to Christ, and more, I do not believe that any Christian has any business to throw away his best years of life in that way. I never traveled that road, but I have the testimony of several who have that it is a curse to the church.

Now let me give you God's way. He first converts a man and then says to him, "Go and tell how great things the Lord hath done for thy soul," and he can tell this effectually for he knows that God did it. It is said of Christ's apostles that they were unlearned and ignorant men, and while it is said that Paul was a learned man, he never spent one day in college or academy or seminary to learn how to preach the Gospel. The great Head of the church has said, "I will give you the Holy Ghost to abide with you forever; he shall teach you all things." When a Christian has that, he is qualified for the Gospel ministry and never before. The only object of life to every Christian is to save men. Jesus came to seek and to save the lost and we cannot be Christians except we are like him.

I want to give you an example first of man's way and then of God's, and the result of each. I take up the yearly report for 1885 of one denomination of Christians. I suppose it to be a good average of all. I find by calculation that on an average it took $99 and the labor of twenty-three Christians to convert one sinner to God. These churches were all working with man-made ministers as far as I know. Now you will find in the eighth chapter of Acts that great persecutions against the church scattered all the church (except the apostles) over all the country of Samaria and Judea, and they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word. This was soon after the 5,000 had been converted in a single day, these that were converted went everywhere preaching. That is the way God always does as soon as converted, sends them out to preach to others.

I have been attending a protracted effort to save sinners, made by one of these man made ministers just out of the seminary. It lasted two or three weeks and had a few conversions. He never said one word to church members about going to talk to sinners, or to his converts. I tell you that one real convert, filled with the Holy Ghost, sent out of God, would lead more persons to God in one day than sueh a minister would in a month. Many years ago I was attending a protracted meeting in Potosi. A young man attended who was a professed infidel. He had offered to discuss the truth of the Bible with any minister, but none accepted, so he was saying that all were afraid he would beat them. But a little boy was converted and went to this infidel and said to him, "I know that you are a very wicked man, but Jesus can save you, for he has saved me." The next night the young infidel gave his heart to Christ. That is the kind and way God makes ministers. Which is the best?

Note.—Elder Bancroft confounds things that differ. It is not more or less education that makes the churches so inert but less of the Spirit. For one who will agree with the above that education is a damage we can find a thousand to out-vote him. Let not the early churches be compared with those of our day; but take contemporaneous churches and compare those which have uneducated ministers and those which have not and the difficulty at once appears. Lack of Spirit power is the trouble. We doubt if the best years of a man's life come before he is twenty-five; Christ's were after thirty; and we know that with many educated men they have great success in soul-saving in college and seminary. The Spirit has chosen such men as Paul who went to Prof. Gamaliel's seminary, Polycarp, Chrysostom, Luther, Calvin, Knox, Wickliffe, Huss, to do his work best. Moody, even, who is often quoted on the other side, has made diligent use of such Biblical studies as are pursued in seminaries to prepare for work. A steel plow is better than a wooden one, but not in an unskilful hand.

THE PRODIGAL FORGIVEN.

BY REV. A. SIMS.

We come now to consider the case of the prodigal son in its most pleasing aspect—not as abandoning home rich and jubilant—then returning penniless and arrayed in rags—but the young man at home,—the forgiven restored son. Most delightful is it for us to contemplate this part of his experienee; and to view him who though awhile an outcast from society, is now a pardoned, saved youth—the joy of his own old home. "But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him." From the import of these words it would seem that his father had been looking out for his son's return; as he saw the ragged prodigal while yet afar off. Undoubtedly the dear old man had spent many anxious days and nights, wondering how his foolish child fared away from home, and ardently desiring to see him come back again. Hence, so soon as his son appeared in sight, without waitiug till he arrived at the door of the house, with a heart brimful of filial affection and tender sympathy, he ran—not walked—to welcome, embrace, and kiss him—so great was his joy. He gave his son not only a welcome, but a loving reception; and by kissing him assured him of his free and full forgiveness of all the wrong he had done.

No language could more vividly and forcibly describe the attitude of God to penitent souls than this. Deep is the pity and solicitude with which the great Father of our race yearns over those of his creatures who stray into the fatal paths of sin. Through all their wanderings he never forgets them. However deep they may sink into infamy and guilt he never ceases to regard them with the most tender affection; and he intensely longs to see them return to him. As the father of this young man saw at a great distance his son returning home and ran to meet him, so God sees, while yet far from him, a poor sinner returning from his evil ways. He sees the heaving, throbbing breast, he hears the penitential sigh, and with infiuite mercy and unbounded compassion he hastens to meet, receive and forgive his child.

The prodigal son might have expeeted on his return home his father would administer rebuke and punishment to him for his past transgressions. Possibly he expected to hear his father say: "Ah! you have been a wicked, bad son; you have just ruined yourself and brought disgrace upon the family. You went away and destroyed all the property I gave you and brought yourself to beggary and shame. You were quite contented to stay away from me so long as you could get any help without me, but now having lost all your means,—friends, clothes, and respectability, you return because compelled by famine. Why did you not return before? you ungrateful son." But did he receive such a reception as this? Oh, no! He heard no words from his father but those of love, and received no treatment from him but that of compassion and pity.

Just so is the reception the penitent sinner receives from our God. His guilty soul may expect to hear some words of rebuke for his past wickedness. He may think that there will be some cold indifference shown him—that there will be correction meted out to him because of his past wrong doing. He may look for God to say, "O you profligate, how great is your sin! Think of the many long years you have spent in open, shameful violation of my holy laws. Think of the multitudes of good things I have given you, for which there has been no return but ingratitude and disobedience. Think of all the talents bestowed upon you by my love, which you have only abused and squandered. You are a prodigal indeed! You richly deserve my displeasure. So long as you did not feel yourself in any want, so long as sinful merriment could be had, you disdained and spurned my commands. But now, finding that the service of sin is a destructive, degrading, famishing one—that you are miserable, forlorn, hungry, thirsty, wretched, undone, an outcast, yes lost, you come to me in your extremity. Why did you not come long ago?

Ah! Surely no penitent on his return ever heard such language as this fall from the lips of the loving God. When he beholds his wandering child coming to him, his compassionate nature is too full of love and gladness to utter one word of rebuke. Only the voice of pardoning mercy is heard and the manifestation of love seen.

While the prodigal was being received by his father he made a penitent confessiou to him of the guilt he had contracted, and of his unworthiness to be any longer his son. But while he was yet speaking and before he could make his application to become a servant, his father interrupted him by bidding his servants, "bring forth the best robe and put it on him, aud put a ring on his hand and shoes on his feet." He was not desirous of listening to any more expressions of penitence from his son. He could see how deeply sorrowful he was for his misdoings; and, like a tender father, he not only forgave him his folly, but adopted him into his family agaiu and conferred upon him all the blessings and privileges of a son. Hence, he was not only clothed, but adorned with "the best robe." A ring, as a mark of dignity and honor aud as a token of his being owned as a branch of the family—was put on his hand; and on his feet,—perhaps sore with travel—shoes were placed to make him easy. But his reception did not end here. In addition to his having "the best robe," he was now to have the best food. He was not fed on mere bread, but feasted on the best provision of his father's house. "Bring hither,"—not the scraps from the cupboard—what was left from yesterday's dinner—"but the fatted calf;" the one that has been reserved for some special occasion—"and kill it, and let us eat and be merry."

Thus was he treated not only like a son, but like a prince; and to crown his reception, at the command of his father, the family celebrated their feast with great rejoicing. What a glorious and sudden transition from famine to plenty—from the tattered rags of sin to the robe of righteousness. Oh, what a striking, vivid picture this of the blessed reception the poor, trembling, humble penitent meets from his loving God. With deep contrition of soul, kneeling before mercy's footstool, the guilty siuner exclaims, "Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee;" thus earnestly does he sue for pardon. But while he is praying the compassionate God answers by a display of his pardoning love. The rags and filth of sin are exchanged for "the best robe"—the robe of salvation. "A ring on his hand," or the witness of the Spirit in his heart, is given him. His feet are shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace;" and his hungry soul feasted on the best of all provisions—the bread of eternal life.

Such an event as this is an occasion of great joy before God—he bids his children celebrate it with rejoicing; and all heaven is jubilant with songs of adoring gratitude.

"Ring the bells of heaven
There is joy to-day."

Such a welcome as this may every unsaved soul receive by turniug to God. Reader, have you been saved?

Uxbridge, Ont.

By the use of natural gas in the manufacture of glass, Pittsburg is able to compete in quality with the best French and German plate glass, and can produce it at a very much lower price. This is a very important item for the building interests of this country. Litchfield, Ill., the "Oil City" of Illinois, has been using natural gas six months for lighting and heating, and recently a new well was struck yielding a pressure of 120 pounds of gas to the square inch.

LOOK OUT FOR THE THUNDERBOLTS.

["Rev. Dr. John Hall, referring to the great criminals of New York city, said: 'When men set themselves to debauch the public conscience, and reduce the public sentiment to the level of their own, then look out for the thunderbolts! Crime so audacious does not usually run long.' This warning expressed a feeling which has since become common to all thoughtful men in the community."]

From poverty to wealth he strode;
Thorns turned to flowers upon his road;
Strong arms were raised to bear his load.
His humble hut became
A palace fit for any king:
Alladin's lamp on everything
Was turned for him, but failed to bring
The auroral light of fame.

He raised and lowered the price of stocks;
He turned the key in Mammon's locks;
He clipped the fleece of golden flocks;
He gloried in his shame.
He purchased parliaments of men;
He silenced tongue and pen;
He staked his fortune; lost it; then
Came not the chime of fame.

The huzzas of the multitude;
The tumult of the masses crude,
Are empty as the wind that brewed
The storm of rain and flame.
One way it blows the clouds to-day,
The next it blows another way,—
And all the weather-cocks obey;
But they're not birds of fame.

Blessed is he whose life is just,
Whose word is like a bond of trust.
His deeds smell sweetly from the dust
And like a censer flame,
Dispensing odors at the tomb,
For him the flowers of memory bloom,
Their light and beauty and perfume.

SUNDAY RAILROADING.

A wise pastor was one asked, in my hearing, whether he would discipline a member who was a train hand on a railroad for going over the road on the Sabbath.

"Very likely I might," was the shrewd reply. "I do not say that I would not; but if the president or one of the stockholders of the road belonged to my church I would commence with him. I would begin with the engiue, not with the wheels."

This question of Sunday work is an intensely practical one to a large number of families in our Christian land. Have you ever been face to face with famine? That is what the loss of a situation means to thousands whose only trade is "running on the road." Only to-day I heard a railroad man say, apologetically: "If I 'kick' against Sunday work I 'kick' myself out of a situation, and I don't know where I could find another." It is comparatively easy for some of us to sit in our easy chairs and say to such a man, "You ought to do right, regardless of the consequences." Are we ready to share the burden with the man who does lay down all his living for conscience' sake? There is where the question becomes a practical one for us.

For not every conductor will fare as well as one whom I knew, who ran a passenger train on one of the divisions of the old Erie road. He was converted and joined the church. He regarded the Lord's day as a true successor of the Jewish Sabbath. To pursue his daily calliug upon that day was wrong. So he waited upon his division superintendent and respectfully told him that he could not take his train out on Sunday morning. He expected to be discharged, but was not. Some one with a more elastic conscience took his place and wages for that day. Perhaps the superintendent congratulated himself on haviug a man of principle under him; possibly he also felt pleased that he had other men who would take his run on Sundays.

A certain freight agent in a prominent Western town required his clerks to work on Sunday. One of them, a member of a Baptist church, refused. He was willing, he said, to work nights, but work Sundays he would not. The freight agent thereupon discharged him. I have been young, and still am not old, but I have lived long enough to see that discharged clerk president of the road, and the freight agent, still in the same position, make his reports to him as his superior officer.

But it doesn't always turn out so, and as both parties may not find themselves on the same line in the other world, perhaps it will not do so there. I knew a man who threw up a lucrative post and brought his family back to their native village at the end of the first month, because he would not work on the Lord's day. I doubt if his worldly prospects will ever be so good as they were when he set off to take that place. Ask him whether he regrets it, and that is quite another thing; the dear Lord is filling his soul with peace unspeakable, and his noble wife and children are proud of him; yet his own brother called him a fool for throwing up the situation.

It may be that these words will be read by some who own stock in railroads which place just such temptations before Christian brethren. I never expect to, but if by bequest or gift I found myself in such a position, I think I would first use my prerogative to demand of my servants, the directors and officers, that they should find some means of administering my property in the fear of God; and if remonstrance failed, I would sell out or give it away. It is better to enter the kingdom maimed of railroad stocks than to cause one of these little ones to stumble; at least that is the way I read the Sermon on the Mount, nineteenth century version.—J. H. Walton, in Evangelical Messenger.

SOCIAL PURITY IN INDIA.

Bombay, India, March 10, '86.

Editor Cynosure:—You may remember me as the editor of the India Methodist Watchman and book agent five years ago, and I then enjoyed seeing your paper frequently. By copies of the Purity Trumpet sent, you will see that the Lord has placed me in a most difficult field. But the cross of fighting the dirty demons of vice must be borne by some one, and so we obey the call. Mrs. Gladwin has a Rescue Home, and I push the publishing and book work of purity; also hold meetings.

As America has never been cursed with the abominable "C. D. Acts," legalizing vice, you can scarce appreciate the terrible battle we have. But those who promote these wicked laws have tried to get them into the United States; and the purity workers of England have done much by their exposures and teachings to keep these acts out of America. But the question of vice is world-wide. As your paper fights so boldly upon every other question, it should speak out upon this also. God help you to do it. During my boyhood in Iowa, what vulgar rubbish I had to hear year after year, and often from the lips of professed Christians! Quack-doctor books and bad young people teach the young, while good old people show their virtue by shutting their eyes, ears and mouths, and letting the devil have it all his own way! For God's sake, speak out! Let the word of God be your guide in these things, and his Spirit will bless it.

I cannot ask you to exchange with so small a paper as my Trumpet, but if you can send the Cynosure to me for the good of our Purity Mission I shall thank the Lord. May his grace bless your heart and your work abundantly.

Yours in the kingdom, W. J. Gladwin.

MASONIC HEATHENISM.

If anything were necessary to convince the candid man, whether Mason or otherwise, that the Masonic institution is essentially heathenish in inception and character, it would be the recent utterances of Masonic journals. The Masonic World for April has an article on "The Symbolism of the Ancient Egyptians," which regard for moral decency prevents our publication, but which is published to show the origin and character of Masonic symbolism. The entire article is redolent with pantheism and impurity both in matter and suggestion. If Christian ministers could but realize that not the representation of John the Baptist and John the Evangelist, but the vilest of pagan symbols are nightly paraded in these lodges, and that the whole system is patterned after the old sun worship, which, under Mosaic Law, was punished with death, they would surely be ashamed of themselves.

The boycott is an Irish invention for the purpose of forwarding the Hibernian idea of liberty. That idea is the liberty to enslave another man. The fundamental idea of our republic is equal rights—a government by the whole people for the whole people—a government of equal and exact justice, of equal laws and equal protection under the laws. The boycott is the edict of a secret and irresponsible tribunal, dooming a man to despoilation and ruin without a trial, without law, and in violation of justice. "But," the boycotter may say, "have we not the right to refuse to trade with a man we don't like?" Certainly: but you have no right to deprive other people of the right to trade with him when they wish to. As we said, the idea that these foreigners have of the use of liberty is to deprive American citizens of their liberty. These secret conspiracies against property, liberty, and personal rights have their temporary success, but a reaction always comes with the momentum of the whole body of society.—Interior.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

THE "INTERIOR" ON THE GREAT LABOR STRIKE IN THE SOUTHWEST.

If this violent seizure of the property of others had even the apology of being made for the benefit of labor, it would be a mad movement. The Knights of Labor not only quit work themselves, but they have deprived not less than twenty thousand workingmen, who have no interest in their quarrel, of work. How can that be in the interest of labor which paralyzes labor? It is absurd to say that the leaders of this insurrection have the interests of the laboring man at heart. What they are after is the seizure of property and the exercise of despotic power. And no such ruthless despotism as they seek to inaugurate exists anywhere in the world to-day. Where ever before in the annals of tyranny was a man mauled and mangled and killed for no other reason than that he sought to do honest labor for the maintenance of his family? The pretense of love for honest work which those men put forth is the baldest sham. They seek to seize upon and control property that they never created nor earned. They seek to levy tribute on labor for their own benefit—and the men whom they eventually expect to fleece are the farmers. They expect to compel farmers to pay more for reapers and all sorts of agricultural machinery than it is worth. They expect to levy a confiscating tax for railroad transportation on their wheat, corn, cattle and all sorts of produce. Does anybody suppose that these men are philanthropists? that they are thinking, not of themselves, but of the welfare of their fellow citizens? Hardly. As usual when an emergency arises which calls for courageous maintenance of principle, the truckling class of the press, religious and secular, is clamoring for surrender. Suppose the surrender made, how long would it be before the insolent demands would be doubled? But we are told that unless all be surrendered to socialism then anarchy will come. If that be the alternative of peace or war, let the war come. Between the mob and the military despot no people has ever failed to choose the ruler whose sceptre is the sword. But not once only, but a number of times, the American people have been asked to choose between anarchy and military despotism, and each time they have risen in their might and answered, "Neither," and they have defended, maintained and more firmly established liberty, law, order, and human rights—and they will do it again and again, forever. Our people are as slow to accumulate momentum as the avalanche, but when they move they move like one. In the present conflict the people have not much sympathy with Mr. Jay Gould. That absence of sympathy with a gigantic monopolist is right—but the way to get at monopolies is not by turning the blind and irresponsible mob to rampaging up and down the national highways, trampling private right and liberty under foot. We shall get at these abuses of capital in a lawful and constitutional and orderly way in due time. The people will lay heavy hands on the mobocrats, and they will lay quite as heavy a hand on the autocrats. The scales of justice will be on a true and even balance.

ROB. MORRIS AND MASONIC ANTIQUITY.

We have received the April number of The Masonic Chronicle, published at Columbus, Ohio. The most notable article is from Dr. Rob. Morris, of Kentucky, describing the dedication of the Masonic chapel and lecture-room in connection with the Widows' and Orphans' Home at Louisville, Ky.:

"After twenty years' progress in collecting funds and building, the Kentucky Freemasons have at last crowned their work by completing and dedicating the chapel for worship, lectures, etc. This apartment is the most beautiful room of the class I have ever seen. On the 11th of April, deputed by the Grand Master, I performed the ceremonial of its dedication. As there is no precedent for a work of this class, I have originated one, of which here is a copy. The closing pages, particularly, your readers will admire."

After scattering corn, wine and oil, all of which Mr. Morris said he brought with him from the Holy Land, he, acting for the Grand Master, said:

"In the name of the great Jehovah, I do solemnly dedicate this chapel to Freemasonry, to Virtue, and to universal Benevolence!"

The Grand Master proceeds:

"The words of the wise King Solomon, our first Grand Master, when dedicating his temple, three thousand years ago, are grandly appliable to the present occasion. I will repeat them as I took them down from the lips of a venerable Bedouin chief, a Freemason, whom I met at Jerusalem. He had learned them seventy years before from his father. You will perceive that King Solomon first pronounced solemn invocations upon the corner-stone, the walls, the covering, the builders, and the worshipers, ending with a sublime apostrophe to Almighty God. I have merely rendered his language into English:

"'Oh, thou Corner-stone, massive and grand! stand firmly in thy socket, Oh, Corner-stone, whatever storms and earthquakes may threaten to move thee from thy base!'"

This is a specimen of the page of rigmarole that follows, and is unlike anything which could have come down from the wise king as could well be imagined. We wish just to say that, by his own confession, Dr. Morris extemporized it for the occasion. Mr. Morris is, we believe, an elder in the Presbyterian church, and will recognize the authority of the Christian Scriptures. We note one passage: "Wherefore, putting away lying, speak ye truth every one with his neighbor." Now, Mr. Morris knows perfectly well that the story that King Solomon was "our first Grand Master" is pure fiction, has not the slightest historical basis, and is discarded by the great body of the intelligent Masons. We have no knowledge as to what some Bedouin chief may have told Mr. Morris, but surely he does not expect sensible people to believe that the rigmarole here cited was used at the dedication of the temple three thousand years ago. We can accept fables and legends when presented as such; but when a man who wishes to be considered a gentleman, a scholar and a Christian attempts to palm off such nonsense, we find no better reply than that of the distinguished Mason, T. S. Parvin, to similar folly: "I must declare that such stuff, while it may be 'told to marines,' certainly to all such heresies we may apply the injunction of David in his lament over Saul: 'And tell it not in Gath, nor publish it in the streets of Askelon.'"

During the late railroad troubles in the southwest the mayor of Fort Worth, Texas, issued a proclamation, in which, among other things, he ordered that all the liquor saloons should be closed for a prescribed time. This was prohibition enacted and made effective for a few days by the will of one man. It was a measure demanded for the public safety. Most of the thoughtful and sensible persons in this country have reached the conclusion that the public welfare and safety demand that to be permanent with the mayor of Fort Worth deemed to be a necessity for a few days. The liquor business is dangerous and deadly not only in times of public excitement. Its power to do harm is increased at such time; but is continually doing its death dealing work. It is strange that the people do not all see this. If under the frenzy produced by liquor a dozen or so of citizens should be destroyed by a mob, the country would be horrified; but a hundred thousand lives may be destroyed every year in a comparatively quiet way, and multitudes hardly give the matter a thought. The law making and law executing authority of the country must make proclamation that prohibition is permanent. Nothing short of this can meet the demands of the case.

Reform News.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

NO COMPROMISE.

Very much credit is due to the members of the U. B. Conference, met in council at Eaton Rapids, Mich., on the 13th, 14th and 15th inst. They were men of conviction and courage, and conducted their deliberations with candor and ability. They spoke, prayed and acted like men possessed by a great purpose, which they had well considered and were bound to maintain at any cost or sacrifice of self for God and his church. They were of one mind, and showed a knowledge of the secret system and its dangers and methods of work rarely met with. Without bitterness or malice, they reviewed the work of the "Commission" and the course of the "nullifiers," and characterized the effort to abolish the testimony against secrecy and open the door of the church to members of the lodge as unconstitutional and a wicked conspiracy against Christ, and in conflict with the creed, usages and teaching of the covenant they had solemnly vowed to maintain. During the entire conference not one word was spoken or intimation given favoring any compromise or quarters to the lodge or its aiders and abettors, but a high resolve to maintain the old landmarks and contend for the faith delivered unto the saints. The sessions were harmonious, and the local interest was shown by a good attendance at every meeting and the hearty participation of all in the devotional exercises. It was evident to all that these Brethren were "led by the Spirit of God," and were doing the work of "the sons of God."

The Michigan State Association met in connection with the conference, to review the work of the year and plan for the future. Reports were encouraging, and the friends in Michigan have resolved to do more and better work in the year to come. Bro. Richards was continued in the presidency of the association, and Bro. Day as secretary. An official report by the secretary will appear in due time, and I am sure the friends in Michigan will feel encouraged, and will see the necessity of extending to their leaders a hearty co-operation, and sustaining them by their prayers, their counsels and their contributions. THE WORK IN OHIO.

Columbus, O. Apr. 15, 1886.

Dear Cynosure:—Owing to the bad condition of the roads for the past week or more, I am not able to report much in the lecture line. It would have been almost impossible to have gotten anyone out to a lecture, especially those living on what is called a mud road, as contrasted with the pikes, which are built quite extensively through this section.

As the spring advances the roads improve, and we hope to report good meetings yet, before the lecture season closes. Last evening I spoke to a fair audience in a Quaker church, at a little place five miles from this, called Camp Chase. Quite a number showed an interest by asking questions. An elderly man inquired what I thought about the Grange. Said he was a Granger, and could see nothing wrong about it. As I happened to have a manual of the Grange in my pocket, I used it to good effect; showing the similarity of the Grange to its Masonic parent. A general discussion followed which will, I trust, lead many to the light.

I expect to take the train at 4:30 this afternoon for Leonardsburg, Pagetown, and other points in Morrow county. After holding such meetings as it may seem best in this section, I will, D. V., go on to Wooster and attend the National Reform Convention which is to convene the 21st. The 27th I am to be at Loudenville, Ashland county, and speak for Rev. S. P. Long's congregation. Any friends in this section desiring lectures should address me at Wooster. W. B. Stoddard.

FINANCIAL REPORT FROM OHIO.

Received at the Columbus convention in redemption of former pledges: Geo. Richey, $5; J. P. Lytle, $5; K. A. Orvis, $2.50; H. R. Smith, $2.

Received since the convention and not yet reported: Dr. J. G. Corson, Xenia, $4.50; Caleb Lyons, Utica, $60; Wm. Weir, Washington, Pa., $1; Dan'l Briggs, $1; Wm. Winton, $3; E. J. Heyse, Sr., $5; J. W. Loyne, $1; Wm. Constance, $5. Total, $95.

One or two former pledges have been paid to our agent, Mr. W. B. Stoddard, and have not yet reached me. He has secured also a number of additional pledges, and considerable cash. He is doing a good work, and we sincerely hope that the good people of Ohio will see to it that he is supported. The way in which he is swelling the Cynosure list is very gratifying. If men will read, we may hope that many of them will see the light more clearly, and will feel it to be a privilege to do more for the cause.

REPORT OF THE MICHIGAN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The twelfth annual convention of the Michigan Christian Association, fifth of incorporated association, opposed to secret societies, met at Eaton Rapids, Michigan, April 13, 7 o'clock P. M., and a very interesting meeting it proved to be. U. B. constitutional convention of East district of Michigan, of which Bro. J. Blanchard will editorially speak more particularly, was held at same place same date. Michigan Christian Association proper was called to order Wednesday afternoon by President D. A. Richards.. Some important changes were made in constitution and by-laws of association. Election of officers resulted as follows: President, D. A. Richards, Brighton, Mich.; secretary, H. A. Day, Williamston, Mich.; treasurer, Geo. Swanson, Jr., Bedford, Calhoun Co., Mich.; board of trustees, H. F. Buffham, S. C. Buck, M. Veenboer, B. Hamp, C. C. Foote, S. E. Lane; president, secretary and treasurer ex-officio members. It was decided to employ two suitable colporteurs for three months, which were readily found. It was also decided to hold a fall meeting, the time and place of which was left to president and secretary. Report of treasurer was encouraging, and the outlook for the year to come hopeful. If all will stand to their post, the coming year may be our very best. With two efficient corporations in the field we can, before the fall meeting, stir the whole State, and get up a rousing meeting at the appointed time. Books were opened for membership, and fourteen united with the association, seven of whom paid their fee, and took one share each in the corporation.

The way was opened for a glorious work among United Brethren, and we were much edified and encouraged by having met them in this place. Our interests are one. We felt we were all united brethren in Christ. From the very first the presence of God was realized. Those fathers of reform, Bros. Clark, Blanchard and Foote, were present with their counsel and encouragement. Altogether the meeting was a glorious one, and those who failed to be present have missed a great deal.

TO THE FRIENDS OF MORAL REFORM IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Gilford Village, N. H.

Would it not be well for us to make a little extra effort to keep Bro. S. C. Kimball, our State agent, in the field all the time. A few friends have taken hold of the matter in earnest. Now if others will aid, a good work will be accomplished. Perhaps churches that are in sympathy with the work of the N. H. C. A. in opposition to popular evils, oath-bound secret societies included, would do well to let their light shine.

The following is a copy of the letter from the Freewill Baptist church at Gilford Village, to the last session of the Belknap Quarterly Meeting, read before and endorsed by the church:

On the moral questions of the age we wish to let our light shine as the Bible directs.

As we understand the sentiments of the W. C. T. U. they express our convictions as to the alarming evils of intemperance, and the most reasonable way to remove them from our country.

The views and action of the National Divorce Reform League, in our opinion, presents wise methods to counteract the loose views entertained by many as to the sanctity of the marriage relations.

We deplore the laxity existing as to the sacredness of the Sabbath day, and would greatly rejoice to see a better sentiment prevail, so that Sunday newspapers, railroad travel and worldly amusements would cease to exist.

And in accord with the teaching of our fathers, the written law of our denomination, and the example and teachings of Christ, we are opposed to Freemasonry and all oath-bound secret societies, believing that they are not only antagonistic to civil and religious liberty, but that their influence hinders rather than helps whatever is good. Simon Rowe.

TO OUR WISCONSIN FRIENDS.

Menomonee, Wis. Apr. 13, 1886.

Dear Brethren:—Bro. Stoddard writes that Bro. C. F. Hawley is prepared to spend some time at work in our State if wanted. The decision of our Executive Committee will doubtless soon be given on the matter, we should hope in the affirmative; in which case it will be especially desirable that all who can do so, send in money to carry on the work. He ought to be kept in the field at least till our next State Convention. Please forward funds to Bro. M. R. Britten of Vienna, Wis., accompanied with earnest prayer. W. W. Ames, Cor. Secretary.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A WORD CONCERNING MY PROPOSED PLAN.

South Oil City, Pa.

Nearly all that is objectionable in Mr. D. G. Strong's communication I have already refuted in my tracts and articles concerning the Methodist Episcopal church, and I will not now ask for space in which to repeat. I wish, however, to refer briefly to two of my critic's utterances. He says: "Without fighting secrecy, let us urge entire sanctification as a distinct work in the soul of the believer." Why did he not urge the editors and publishers of the paper which printed his article either to throw away their present method of warfare, or else blot the Christian Cynosure out of existence? If his policy ought to be adopted in reference to Freemasonry, then, in order to be consistent, it would be necessary to apply the rule to many other evils, and this would not only destroy my "plan," but it would destroy the plan of Jesus Christ himself. The "holiness movement" has certainly done much good; but when we read this queer piece of advice along with the astonishing statement that "it would be straining a point exceedingly to allow that membership in any of these orders is an offence against either the doctrine or discipline of the Methodist Episcopal church." We are satisfied that that movement has sadly failed to accomplish a very important work in Mr. Strong.

Again, Mr. Strong writes: "Neither the quotation from Bishop Simpson's 'Yale Lectures' nor the definition of Masonry as quoted from the cyclopedia are settled as standards of appeal." But Bishop Simpson, in the citation which I gave, referred to the doctrine which teaches that every one who is saved through Christ, and every prayer which is acceptable to the Father, reaches him through Christ. It also teaches that even those who may offer acceptable prayer, and who may be saved in heathen lands before they hear the name of Christ, are saved through Christ; and this doctrine is not only one of "the standards of appeal" in the Methodist Episcopal church, but it is one without which the Methodist doctrinal system would go to pieces. The definition of Masonry which I took from Macoy's Cyclopedia is based on a Masonic doctrine which proclaims that Masonry does offer salvation to its members, and that this offer is made in accordance with a theory which excludes Christ even in this country, and, before the faces of ministers of the Gospel who are connected with the institution, has been proved over and over and over again in these columns. If it is right to appeal to the Methodist doctrine of the person and work of Christ when one of the ministers of the Methodist Episcopal church imbibes certain Unitarian and Universalist notions, it must be right to appeal to this same doctrine when ministers of this same church, claiming at the same time to be loyal to its doctrinal standards, become connected with one of the most disgusting, outrageous and subtle forms of infidelity which has ever blackened the history of mankind.

As to Mr. Sholes' note, I will say that I do not fail to realize that the condition of the Methodist Epispocal church is truly deplorable; but I believe that if those who are in it and who are lovers of righteousness will not come out of it at once, they should go to work to produce a crisis where they are. I do not want a crisis simply for the sake of making a disturbance, but as a means to an end. There are thousands of members who would rise up in resistless indignation against the wretched impositions to which they are now subjected, if the whole truth were once thoroughly brought before them in such a manner that it neither could be sneered down nor set aside in any other way before it had accomplished its purpose. There are many communities in which a Masonic minister would not be recognized as a representative of Christianity if the facts in reference to his relation to Masonry were fully known. I have no expectation of purifying the Methodist Episcopal church, but I am satisfied that my plan, if properly executed, will either bring about a great reformation within that church, or the workers of the plan will be thrust out. My opinion is that the latter would be the immediate result; but the end in view would be accomplished—the light would blaze in dark places; thousands would be caused to take a stand in reference to this adulterous union of church and anti-Christ, while a sentiment would be produced which would be of incalculable benefit to generations to come.

I may be allowed to state here that the proposed "plan" is simply a supplement to my "Candid Appeal to the Holy People in the Methodist Episcopal church." I would gladly place a copy of this tract in the hands of every member in that denomination, but this I am not able to do. I hope, however, that everyone who is interested in the matter will secure one or more copies, and do all that can be done to give it a wide circulation. I have no pecuniary interest in view, as I do not receive one cent from its sale. The tract is published by Rev. B. T. Roberts, North Chili, Monroe Co., N. Y., and is sold by him at the rate of ten copies for fifteen cents. If you will read it carefully and prayerfully, and if you will consecrate as the light shines, I believe you will see before you a path of duty which, while it may not be free from thorns, will surely lead to victory and reward. J. T. Michael.

GOOD NEWS FROM WAHOO, NEBRASKA.

Wahoo, Neb.

Editor Cynosure:—Last summer I wrote you in regard to J. B. Montague, temperance worker in Wahoo. Since that time our blue-ribbon club have met once a week. Before the city election this spring the W. C. T. U. engaged Joseph Critchfield, a noted temperance worker. The result was that Wahoo elected a Prohibition Council; hence eleven saloons will be closed this spring. One year ago Wahoo was classed among the worst whisky towns in the State.

WHIP AND SPUR.

CINCINNATI, O.

We know the use these little instruments are ordinarily put to, but there are other fields of usefulness in which they can be made to thrive, as the following will show:

A few years since, there resided an old man in Cincinnati, Ohio, by the name of Brown—an old pioneer of the town, and one well fixed in this world's goods, and among other accomplishments which graced the old man's name was an inside knowledge of Freemasonry. This brought forth the story of our article. On the home-place of Brown was an abundance of fruit, and this became in time a temptation to the boys of the neighborhood, and the old man waxed angry at the young urchins; and when at last he saw a boy at one of his fruit-trees (where the fence was broken down and nothing to hinder him from going to the tree), Brown got his rifle and took deliberate aim by resting against a pillar of the porch of the house, and shot the boy dead. Now there was great commotion, and it was supposed by all law-abiding citizens that old Brown would have to suffer the penalty due his crime; but in a few days thereafter the Cincinnati Commercial, a leading paper of the town, came out with the announcement that Mr. Brown, a few years ago, in England sat in a lodge of Freemasons with the Prince of Wales, and that he ranked the Prince in the lodge; as much as to say that "this man Brown is a brother Mason and 'high up;' so see to it that you govern yourselves accordingly,"—plying the whip of the lodge-oath to all who might feel like bringing justice to the old brute. What was the outcome? The old man was never brought to justice, and died shortly after without ever having been brought to answer in any way for his action. W. A. SHAW.

HOW A LODGE DISPENSED JUSTICE.

BYRON CENTER, Mich.

I know that Freemasonry is good in its place, for it helped a friend of mine out of a trouble that would have sent him to Jackson penitentiary if he had not been an Odd-fellow. In short, he was a local preacher and a doctor. He was attending a lady, and calling one day and finding the husband gone and the wife alone, he took the opportunity to insult her. When her husband came in she informed him. He, though a brother Odd-fellow, was furious and overreached himself, getting out a warrant and having his "brother" arrested. The lodge took the matter in hand, and decided that it was contrary to their law for lodge brothers to go to law with brothers. So he was obliged to withdraw the suit from the court and try it in the lodge. His wife was not an Odd-fellow, so she could not be allowed in the lodge to testify; hence the husband could not prove his case. So you see those orders are good in time of need!

L. PLAUTS.

OPEN LETTER ON VOTING OUT SLAVERY.

TO THE EDITORS "CHRISTIAN STATESMAN:"—Do you propose to assert, after carefully looking over your reply to President Blanchard, in your issue of the 14th [Feb.] that our late lamented President, Abraham Lincoln, violated the Constitution of the United States in putting down the late rebellion?

If you do, I would ask, What did the "Seceded States" rebel against when they went out of the Federal Union? I think the weak-minded Buchanan informed the nation that he had no authority to say to the seceding States, You can't break up the Union and no power over them if they should break it up. Poor man! he gave the country an unmeasurable amount of trouble by his imbecility.

Mr. Lincoln took all the written Constitution and from it extracted an unwritten Constitution. And by these two and on these two Constitutions he stood in maintaining the Federal Union. And Constitutionally put down the rebellion. But while you seem to think "it was not votes that abolished slavery," but "bullets," I think Abolition votes did it. What about "the blood of the martyrs," etc.? The fact is, there was nothing that laid the broad foundation for the late civil war and that abolished American slavery equal to Abolition votes. If there had never been any Abolition votes cast in the United States, there would have been no antagonism between North and South. When the great Methodist Episcopal church in the United States divided on Abolition votes, it was said, "This division is the entering wedge to the abolition of slavery in the United States."

It seems to me that to say Abolition votes had nothing to do in the abolition of slavery, is equal to the old Quaker who said, "If thee had not been in the way of my fist thee would not have been hit;" or that Dennis Kearny's Sand Lot balderdash, a few years ago in California, was not the cause of depression in business in the State, but that the then depression of business was the difficulty; or, that the depression of business, and not Kearny and his gang, had caused the depression of business; or that our present so-called Sand Lot orator causes the city of San Francisco no trouble at all, but the officials give the city trouble in taking any notice of this man and his followers.

So I think with President Blanchard, that votes did do the work of abolishing American slavery, and that it is the man that votes who can consistently talk about the rights and wrongs of constitutions and who will by his vote help regulate government affairs. It is the man who votes with the majority who has the parliamentary right to move a reconsideration of a resolution passed. J. T.

PITH AND POINT.

DON'T FOOL THE OLD SOLDIERS.

I see in your paper the obligation of the G. A. R. society. Now I am an old soldier and have joined the G. A. R., but the obligation is different from the one I read in your paper. Now what I want to know is, which is right? I I would like to know if the G. A. R. are fooling me, or not. I am not a very strong secret society man at the best. Please let an inquiring mind know about this matter.—G. H. DICKSON, Tipton, Iowa.

NOTE.—The oath quoted in the Cynosure was probably from the old ritual, which was changed a few years since. However that may be, we believe the G. A. R. is fooling you. Take the Word of God for your guide and read prayerfully all those passages commanding men to walk in the light, condemning secret practices, and sworn associations with unchristian men, and you will regard the order as not helping you on to heaven.

THE RECORD OF OUTRAGES.

Yes, by all means, let us have the "Masonic outrages" printed in a book. I venture that there is "millions in it" for the writer and publisher, and let the senior editor of the Cynosure prepare the work.—J. V. TURNBULL, Peotone, Kans.

PROHIBITION GAINING.

The Salvation Army are doing a good work. The town election on the 5th shows quite an advance. At the Presidential election there were 88 Prohibition votes. Now there were 126 Prohibition, 276 Republican and 152 Democratic votes, which is a fair advance. The current is evidently running that way; but the secret empire is strong and undisturbed. I should have been glad if the General Agent could have come a little further North.—F. PORTER.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON V, May 2, 1886.—Jesus at the well—John 4: 5-26.

GOLDEN TEXT.—God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.—John 4: 24.

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

1 Christ's humanity. vs. 5–9. As none of the disciples have approached so close to the mystery of Christ's divine nature, so none have seemed to come quite so near to his human side as the beloved John. But it is not in the pathetic touches with which he is shown to us sitting weary and thirsty on the well, that his intense humanity most appeals to us. It is when he forgets his weariness to talk with an outcast Samaritan woman, and instead of addressing her from the height of an infinite superior, comes down to her level on the plane of a common want. Christ's divine tact in dealing with this sinful soul is a lesson for all Christian workers. He knew human nature. His humble request, "Give me to drink," would incline her to feel more kindly towards the strange Jew; more ready to accept an infinitely greater gift from his hands.

2. The living water. vs. 9–15. The woman's words were not a refusal of that for which he asked, but the natural outbreak of her surprise that a Jew should ask so much as a drink of water of one of the despised Samaritan race. But Christ recognizes no race line, and it is enough to show the anti-Christian character of the Masonic and Odd fellow orders that they receive none but free white males and consider all colored lodges clandestine. It may be said, however, that there are many churches which in spirit if not in letter recognize the color line. Lamentably true as this charge may be, there is one wide difference between them and the lodge. The latter is only true to the selfish and exclusive principles on which all secretism is founded, while a church that so discriminates is false to the whole genius of its mission, false to its Founder, and possessed with the spirit, not of Christ but of anti-Christ. Jesus at once proceeds to excite her curiosity farther. If she but knew the gift of God and who it was that said to her, Give me to drink, she would have been the suppliant instead, begging of him the water of life. The most perfect knowledge of the springs of the human heart is shown in the way he leads her on,—patient even though she cannot or will not understand his spiritual meaning, though her thoughts are all of the earth, earthy, never rising even by chance into the light of any higher realm.

3. The spiritual nature of true religion. vs. 18–26. A shaft was needed keen enough to pierce her soul with a knowledge of her great need of a Saviour. She was a degraded, sinful woman, but woman still with a sense of shame, for she tries to turn the talk from her past life into a mere theological controversy It is possible that many of our religious controversies would be met by Christ were he on earth—not by taking part with the combatants on either side, but by leading both to deeper and higher spiritual views. At last he touches a responsive chord in this woman's better nature, not yet wholly smothered by her life of sin. She too looked forward like the Jews to a coming Messiah, and with perhaps juster ideas of the coming One than many a Pharisee held she understood that this new era of spiritual power would be inaugurated only when he appeared. She is now ready to hear in believing faith Christ's revelation of himself, "I that speak unto thee am he."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What is the gift of God? Eph. 2: 8. What is the living water? Isa. 12: 3; 41: 17, 18; Jer. 2: 13; Zech. 13: 1; 14: 8. How was salvation of the Jews? Isa. 2:3; Rom. 9: 5.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"Near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph." There can be no doubt that, in speaking of Jacob's gift to his son Joseph, John refers to Gen. 48: 22, where the Hebrew word for "portion" is identified with Shechem. Here Joseph was buried (Josh. 24: 32).

"Now Jacob's well (fountain or spring, a water-course) was there." Jacob's well is on a knoll, really a spur of Gerizim, 18 feet high. It is now about 60 feet deep, but was once much deeper. There is now water in it only during the rainy season.

"Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink." Observe how insignificant a request he makes the occasion for a deeply spiritual religious conversation; and how natural the transition from the material to the spiritual. Observe, too, that by asking a favor he opens the way to the granting of one. He thus verifies the truth that the way to gain another's good will is not at first by doing, but by receiving a kindness.—Abbott "And he would give thee living water." "Living water," then, denotes the gift of the Holy Spirit. This was pre-eminently the promised gift of the Father (see especially Isa. 44: Joel 2) beautifully and aptly symbolized by the fresh, springing water, which, wherever it comes makes the desert rejoice and everything live (Ezek. 48: 9). —Schaff. Living water here signifies the whole sum of blessings which Christ furnishes for renewing the souls of men and making them tranquil and happy. It also signifies the happiness itself which is bestowed.—Clark.

"Shall never thirst" Literally, will certainly not thirst for ever, for the craving is satisfied as soon as ever it recurs.—Cambridge Bible. This does not contradict the beatitudes, "Blessed are those that hunger and thirst after righteousness," but it declares that there is an unfailing supply always at hand for the thirst. Life is made up of a succession of thirsts and their satisfaction. There is no enjoyment unless there is a thirst, and unless the thirst be satisfied. This satisfaction is what is promised in this verse.—P.

"Shall be in him a well of water." The water being within can never fail to be ready to satisfy any thirst that may arise.

"Springing up into (unto) everlasting life." Not that eternal life is some future result to be realized hereafter; it is the immediate result. The soul in which the living water flows has eternal life.—Cambridge Bible. And it will continue to flow forever.

"Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband." This is in appearance a break in the conversation; it is in reality the first step toward granting the woman's request, "Give me this water;" for the first step is to convince of sin and of the need of a better life.

"He whom thou now hast is not thy husband." She had not been lawfully married to him. Perhaps, also, she had deserted her last husband, or he had not been properly divorced from her. Dr. Van Lennep (Bible Lands, p. 557), referring to the terrible frequency of divorces among Jews and Muslims at the present day, says, "We have known a man not forty years of age who had successively married and put away a dozen wives. . . . Women, too, not far advanced in age, are sometimes met with who have been married to a dozen men in succession." Jesus showed her that all the incidents of her wicked life were perfectly known to him.—Clark.

"Jesus saith unto her." The position of Jesus is a delicate one. He cannot deny the truth, and he must not repel this woman. His answer is admirable.

"In Spirit and in truth" "In spirit" designates the worship of the mind and heart, a real, spiritual worship of love, adoration, and obedience as distinguished from any mere formal worship, that rests in ritual, or ceremonies, or words, or postures. These are good only so far as they aid spiritual worship. Worship "in truth" is in sincerity, in the true way, in recognition of the true nature of God in obedience to the truth. These correspond with the first three commandments, and the fourth provides for this worship.—P.

OBITUARY.

Pres. S. B. Allen was born January 17th, 1830, near Harrisburg, Pa., and died at his home in Westfield, Ill., March 23nd, 1886. Dr. Allen began a special preparation for his life-work at a very early age; so early that at the age of fifteen he found himself face to face with it. In his case there was no waiting for something to turn up, but at this age he entered his race as a teacher, in which he has been so successful. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Smith near Vincenes, Ind., A. D., 1858, and graduated with honor at Otterbein University in 1859, after which he spent some time in the Theological seminary at Oberlin, Ohio. He spent twenty-two years as teacher in some of the best institutions in the country, fourteen of which years he was president of Westfield College. Dr. Allen was one of the foremost educators in his church, an able preacher and a true friend. He would, as many who read this can testify, sacrifice everything for what he believed to be right. With all his wonderful force of character, he was mild and considerate in all his work. His friends, which are many, entertained hopes of his recovery until the last, but too soon disease triumphed, and one of the greatest sons of our Zion passed triumphantly and peacefully away. In his death we have lost an able and fatherly counselor; and the distinguishing principles of this church have lost an able and fearless defender. But we cannot believe that to the principles of the church he is dead, but that his great soul, with its past work is still marching on, and will continue to mingle with other true souls until victory perches upon the side of right. The ministers of Westfield had a meeting, at which they passed resolutions of high appreciation. Also the college faculty and students passed resolutions, indicating that he was esteemed very highly by them. The funeral was held March 24th in the college chapel attended by a very large and appreciative audience. * * Thus a mighty man has fallen. Upon whom shall his mantle fall?—Conservator.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised hy the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon he not only echoed hy their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in easting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted hy our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract lahor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arhitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1886.

Shakespeare says that hypocrites who put on the appearance of piety—

> "Steal the livery of the court of heaven
> To serve the devil in."

But secret temperance lodges, which adopt the secrecy, degrees, and features of the Christless Masonic lodges, steal the livery of the devil while pretending to serve God! They claim that it gives them popularity and money—and it does! But as in our war, the man who wore gray was a rebel. So lodge uniform proves that the wearer is in the devil's brigade.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

MICHIGAN EAST DISTRICT CONFERENCE OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST, HELD APRIL 13TH, 14TH AND 15TH, AT EATON RAPIDS.

This was one of a series of local conventions to terminate in a general convention of that church some time next July. By mutual agreement, the Michigan State Christian Association held a small meeting at the same time and place, which, by uniting counsels for future co-operation, must aid the reform greatly in that State. Bro. Swanse, treasurer of the Christian Association, reported above $150 in hand. Three United Brethren were placed on the State Committee. New annual subscribers to the fund were added. An estimable brother, Mr. Lane, and his wife, who speak well in public, contemplate entering the work as colporteurs; and Rev. N. A. Day for, years the judicious and popular State Agent, is urged to resume his former charge, and will probably do so. The "Knights of Labor" have convinced thinking business men that the only safety for property and life lies in enlightening the honest laborers of this country, and so rescuing them from the snares of the secret lodges.

But the Eaton Rapids meeting was called by United Brethren to rescue their church from the evils of the lodge serpent. Presiding Elder Ferguson was their present and efficient chairman, and a Bro. Keeney, once a lawyer but now a clergyman, was secretary. Before his conversion he had been a Mason, and the master of his lodge was an absolute atheist. They were initiating a Methodist preacher, who was so overcome and confused by his conscience or rough handling that, when put on one bare knee, stripped and blindfolded, and told to pray, his tongue refused its office, and the atheist lodge master did the prayer for him, to the great merriment of the lodge.

The whole meeting was one of great power. A Bro. Northrup, a friend and neighbor of ex-Gov. Horatio Seymour of New York, had left the M. E. church on account of Masonry, and a year and a half ago started in with the United Brethren with only four members. He has built them a fine church at his own expense, and it was crowded during the evenings of the convention.

Rev. William Dillon, of the Conservator, Dayton, opened the sessions with a discourse of great force and directness; and his argument against changing the constitution under which the church has flourished since 1841 for the proposed new one, made on purpose to let in the lodge, was a masterly and convincing effort. We hope to give it to our readers, as also the paper read by Rev. Mr. Titus, which excelled everything else presented to the body. None could resist the wisdom and spirit with which he (Mr. Titus) spoke. A cloud of glory seemed let down from God on the house. Some shouted, some shook hands, saying, "Hallelujah!" and all sang aloud:

> "Hold the fort, for I am coming:—
> By Thy grace, we will;"

while some old veterans sat still, with tears rolling down their faces, as when the second temple was dedicated to God through the Messiah and God's pure worship restored. The readers of the Cynosure are to have Mr. Titus's paper.

Never till this meeting have we fully believed that the foes of truth and right in the U. B. church are to be defeated. The lodge party, like the pro-slavery wings of the national churches before the war, has risen from a lean minority at Lebanon, Pa., by craft and money and outside aid, till it now seems formidable and strong. But the human chances are now ten to one in favor of the anti-secretists in the Brethren church. Except the fraud and funds of the lodge, the outside pressure will favor the reformers. They are now on open, clear and substantial ground. When the Cynosure first began to expose the duplicity and craft of Bishop Weaver & Co. it was boycotted by some good men, who now see that we were right. Masonry has been growing unpopular, and the Knights of Labor have got into Harper's Weekly in the speaking pictures of Nast. Joseph Cook is drawing on his gauntlet and gloves. The business men of the country will now pay cheerfully for lectures and papers for the million; and the very silent, sneaking, crawling character of the lodge system makes it good for nothing for a stand-up fight. Whenever the United Brethren hold their series of conventions, let the prayers and persons of God's children rally to them. And if their next General Conference can be carried against the lodge by an overwhelming majority, and the U. B. church will escape its fangs, then, as goes that church, so will go the country. Let now the National and State Associations push the work to the utmost. We are persuaded that money will not be wanting for this holy work.

We were entertained at Eaton Rapids in a family whose female members descended from Huguenots, who in mid-ocean covenanted for themselves and posterity to the latest generation to be the Lord's. A brother, a man of fine genius and talent, went into the Methodist ministry, and was drawn into the lodge. His sisters were in agony, and an older brother, not knowing that he had joined the lodge, dreampt that he saw his brother, and that a snake had bit his lips together so that he could not utter a word. The elder brother ran and pulled the serpent off, and said to him, "You've lost part of your lips, sir!" So, indeed, he had lost the use of them to speak God's truth against the lodge. But he wrote to his lodge for a discharge, but some said the Masons poisoned him to ensure his silence; others thought his mental agony hastened his death.

GEN. A. B. NETTLETON.

Minneapolis, Minn.

Dear Sir,—Some one has laid the Cynosure under an agreeable obligation by sending us the Saturday Evening Spectator, containing your very able paper read before the Minneapolis Congregational Club: "Phillistines, Neutrals and Reformers." We ran over your easy, flowing paragraphs as one drinks magnetic spring water; at once cool, clear and bracing. We rejoiced to see reformers designated as "the world's helpers; simply salt of the earth." Under their guiding hand we saw civil despotism turned to a "gibbering ghost," slavery dead under "their hammer;" liquor turned from "a symbol of hospitality to a recognized colossal curse;" and, in the near future, bigotry, polygamy, and war, even, existing, like dead snakes, only in the museum of memory. And we longed to fill your description of true reformers; uniting sense with self-denial, and "courage" with "discretion;" though doubting somewhat, whether attacking evils, as John Van Buren said he attacked slavery in 1848; "as a naked operation of principle," could hope to be regarded as discreet, by those who put the "sin of indiscretion at the top of the calender" of sins to be reformed. For discretion, with those brave soldiers of reform who have never been under fire, generally has to wait for recognition till it is crowned with success. And "good digestion" and "enlightened self interest" are apt to find the camp better suited to them than the battlefield; and to shrink from following a leader who once sought his breakfast on a fig tree and failed to get it; and whose "enlightened self-interest" gave him nowhere to lay his head. But while admiring your handling of reforms past, and possible we beg to say we were surprised at your shunning all mention of a giant evil which now threatens civil society wherever civil society exists. You have seen secret societies in Europe, America, and indeed around the globe, boldly presenting themselves as rivals and substitutes for all known government and religion. You have read D Israeli's declaration; while he was prime minister of England, and dealing with the governments of the earth, that "secret societies laugh at governments," and dominate mankind while recognizing no laws or tribunals but their own. Now, at this writing, 300,000 men calling themselves knights, and assuming to protect labor, have sworn absolute, unquestioning "obedience" to invisible heads; and you have read the declaration of one of the heads (Mr. Irons) that unless their terms are complied with and satisfied they will stop every freight train between the oceans, and, so far as stopping supplies can do it, coerce fifty millions of people into submission to their invisible courts. You have seen men who said they were satisfied with their employers and their wages, not only quitting their work, but forbidding others to take that work; and seizing public property, freight trains and their lading belonging to thousands of people, like brigands; yet, unlike brigands, seeming to believe their secret oaths and obligations, justified them in so doing—that their secret allegiance justified and made their conduct honorable; and demanding the recognition of their organization by the people and laws of the United States; as if theirs were an independent separate government, differing from a European or South American State, only in this, that the United States have to furnish them roads, bridges, asylums, poor-houses, and protection from foreign invasion, while they respect neither laws, courts, persons or property which come in their way.

> "As he may censure who hath written well;"

And your reading must be very deficient unless you have seen that these secret orders claim religious as well as civil jurisdiction over their members, so far as to assure them of heaven if they have obeyed their laws, or rather the rescripts of their invisible irresponsible heads. And you, General, in your able, exhaustive paper on Reforms and Reformers, read to the clergy of Minneapolis, found neither time nor space nor inclination to consider these secret usurped governments which are sinking our court-houses and churches into popular contempt, by their rival oaths and religious rituals, claiming jurisdiction over our interests and hopes for time and eternity! We respectfully beg that you will give the public your views respecting these "orders" which are absorbing our young men and their money by thousands; and the Cynosure will print your paper and its supplement.

THE IRISH LAND BILL.

Some years since, that distinguished philanthropist and statesman, Peter Cooper of New York, wrote to the Prime Minister of England that the only practical solution of the Irish land question was to purchase the lands of non-resident owners and sell them on long time and at a low rate of interest to the occupants. To this letter he received a courteous reply, thanking him for the suggestion. It is a matter of no small gratification as well as surprise that Mr. Gladstone's pending land bill for Ireland embodies substantially this feature. It grants this and more. It makes the payment of the land to consist in twenty years of rent; and in connection with this it gives home-rule, and leaves the management of Irish affairs in Irish hands. This is a vast concession. Ten years ago Ireland would have been satisfied with far less. Now this is the least that she will willingly accept. Should this measure fail, the next demand and only real solution of the problem will be absolute separation. It is earnestly to be hoped that this measure, with or without some modification, will prevail, and that this distracted island may come into peaceful relations with her sister isle. Henceforth may secret conspirators find their vocation gone, and Protestant Christianity not be rejected simply because it is English. The state of Ireland for the last three hundred years proves conclusively that remedy for bigotry and ignorance, her two greatest evils, is not coercion, and that the lessons of rational liberty can only be learned by those nations that are practically free.

THE "ITINERANT" AND THE LODGE.

"Dr. Davis, in a recent number of the Conservator, states that he prefers to stand with Otterbein, Boehm and Geeting in the United Brethren church opposed to secret societies. Now, we believe that every United Brother stands where the doctor prefers to stand. But we do not believe, nor can the doctor prove to us, that Otterbein, Boehm or Geeting would have favored such a radical law on the subject of secret societies in our time. We doubt very much whether they ever favored it; we believe they would come up boldly and say that, while that law fulfilled a mission back in the earlier part of the century, to-day it must be annulled and new methods must be followed to bring men from the snares of oath-bound secrecy. Doctor, if you come East for three months and travel over the historic ground of United Brethrenism and feel the pulse of the present membership, you will also prefer to stand with us who are liberal, and where Otterbein, Boehm and Geeting would stand if they were living to-day."

The above, from The Itinerant, gives the real animus of those who seek for a modification of the rule of the U. B. church on the subject of secret societies. It assumes that the rule may have been a very good one when these secret orders had but few members and little influence; but when they become one of the great controlling forces in society, then the church must bend before them and accept their fellowship. This is confessedly the wisdom of the world, which, we are told, is "earthly, sensual and devilish;" but the wisdom from above, which is "first pure and then peaceable"—that wisdom which would bring the church up to the Divine ideal of "a holy church, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing," would adopt just the opposite policy, and, in proportion as the evil becomes more prevalent and powerful, make the principle of exclusion more absolute and unchanging. It may be impossible to prove what the holy men referred to would do in the present emergency; but the Divine Master, who denounced the most respectable professors of religion in his day as "serpents, a generation of vipers," because they were "hypocrites," and who made the scourge of small cords to drive out the buyers and sellers from his temple, surely would not make a truce with iniquity because it was popular, and consent that a law should remain while it had little or no practical application, and demand its modification as soon as it was confronted with open violation. We commend to our cotemporary the study of the Bible, and especially the example of Elijah, who stood alone of all the prophets of the Lord while the king's court and 450 prophets of Baal were arrayed against him.

The following comes, as we suppose, from a colored pastor in Savannah, Ga. Who will answer his questions?

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Kind Friend:—Oh, how I bless God for your paper! You are doing a great and good work. How I mourn daily for the condition of our churches and my poor race! Do all you can to scatter light among us before it be too late. Get the American Missionary Association and other denominational missionary societies to speak now before it be too late. "Christ is King." A word from the A. M. A. and others will do much good. May God's people give you money to carry on this great work! A great many of my people join these societies because they help in sickness and aid in death, like the Knights of Wise Men. Tell something about this order in your paper, please. Are there any national, open benevolent societies for colored people, with local branches?

One More Saved for Christ.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard preached in the M. E. church at Wheaton on last Sabbath, the 18th, and left for New York on Monday.

—Mr. H. H. Hinman spoke in the College Chapel on Sabbath evening on the subject of the anti-Christian character of war, and the relation of military principles to civic and social organizations.

—We called recently on Hon. Philo Carpenter, who has for some weeks been in very feeble health. Though confined to his room, he was free from suffering and cheerful in spirit.

—It is reported that Rev. Samuel Collins, president of the N. C. A. National Convention, is lying sick at Pittsburgh.

—We have received the first three numbers of the Social Purity Trumpet, published at Bombay, India, by W. J. Gladwin. As its name indicates, it is replete with facts and arguments on this most important, world-wide question. We rejoice that in all English-speaking countries the subject is receiving in some degree the attention it deserves.

PROF. KEPHART AND SECRECY.

The following letter from Prof. C. J. Kephart is in reply to a criticism in our last issue:

"I had not expected to be drawn into a discussion with the editorial department of the Cynosure, nor do I expect to enter such discussion. I wish, however, to correct some wrong impressions that might grow out of a recent editorial note.

"In the first place, I spoke in my discussion with Bro. Floyd, for myself and for nobody else. I take all the responsibility of what I have said. In the second place, I did not say, as the Cynosure said that I said, that 'the secrecy of the lodge is right.' No proper construction of my language will find any such meaning in it. I do say, however, that neither the Bible nor right reason holds that secrecy as secrecy is wrong. Notice what I say. I am not talking about organized secrecy, nor of any other class of secrecy, but of secrecy in general. I do not say that all secrecy is right. I simply say that it cannot be shown that secrecy is wrong in itself. Hence, I said in my article that the church has no authority to condemn secret societies simply because they are secret—purely on the ground of secrecy. I hold they must be judged by their character, which must be determined by an investigation of their principles that determine their attitude to God and to humanity at large. I hold, further, that the fact that an organization refuses to allow such an investigation should be taken as presumptive evidence of its evil character, and subject it to disapproval or condemnation."

Note.—We think that, in fairness, Prof. Kephart is entitled to the above explanation, but think his argument decidedly lame. He says: "I am not talking about organized secrecy, nor any other class of secrecy, but secrecy in general." He holds that the principle of secrecy is not wrong, and therefore secret societies should not be condemned simply on the ground of secrecy. Let us look at the Professor's proposition as a syllogism. 1. Secrecy, as a principle, is not necessarily wrong. 2. Secret organizations include this principle of secrecy. Therefore secret organizations ought not to be condemned on the ground of their secrecy. But the conclusion is by no means legitimate; for, though secrecy as a principle is not necessarily wrong, organized secrecy among Christians and under a free government is wrong. Neither the principle of secrecy nor of organization is wrong, but the two principles associated constitute a wrong against the church and against republican equality. Prof. Kephart may have been thinking only of secrecy in the abstract, but the editors of the Cynosure had in mind the vast horde of secret orders that honeycomb society and will bring division and death to the U. B. church if their influence is not arrested. We have no time to split hairs on abstractions; the whole matter is eminently practical. Let there be no trifling on a question of such magnitude.

H.

THE RHODE ISLAND ELECTION.

The following is the official vote on the constitutional amendment at the election held April 7th:

Counties.	Amendment. Approved.....	Rejected.....	*Attor'y-Gen'l. Metcalf, Pro. and Dem...	Colt, Rep.....
Bristol	796	576	808	611
Kent	873	839	1,102	1,134
Newport	1,465	821	654	1,826
Providence	9,546	6,532	9,447	7,403
Washington	2,095	378	1,741	1,158
Totals	14,775	9,146	13,752	12,138

*Scattering, 81.

Majority for the Amendment	5,629
Majority in excess of three-fifths of the total	423
Metcalf's majority over Colt	1,614

At the same election, the straight Prohibition vote for Governor amounted to 2,328, against 1,206 last year and 938 for St. John in 1884.

How the work was accomplished, will be seen by the following report in the Voice of the work of the W. C. T. U.:

"I think we laid our plans broadly and tried to look out properly for the details. One of our chief plans was to enlist every clergyman in the State; and a circular letter was accordingly addressed to each of these reverend gentlemen. Afterwards we sent to each minister a circular letter asking him to preach upon the subject the last Sunday in March. To this request we had quite a general response; but as some ministers in the cities failed to indicate their intentions, we arranged for a ministers' meeting to be held here and addressed by Mrs. Foster and Rev. Dr. Plumb. We also inaugurated work for the children, sending out great numbers of an attractive circular appealing directly to them to induce their fathers and friends to vote right. Mrs. J. K. Barney went through the State devoting her entire time to planning for meetings in the various cities and towns. One of the principal secrets of our success is in the fact that every place, however remote, was reached by some person who thoroughly understood the subject and knew how to put it right."

It is noteworthy that the Attorney-General, who was the incumbent and the Republican candidate, was believed to be in complicity with the liquor-sellers, and in face of a large Republican majority for Governor was defeated by more than 1,200 majority, and a staunch Prohibitionist elected instead.

AN EXCELLENT SPINE.

The little Sabbath-school girl's misreading of the character of Daniel in whom was seen "an excellent spirit", is most happily illustrated in the following incident from the Independent, which is told of Ferdinand Schumacher, who is pretty well known to the Cynosure readers through the letters of the editor and the General Agent. We all, with one accord, can join in the three cheers:

"Schumacher, the Ohio oatmeal king, who has recently suffered greatly by a fire—to the extent of the entire loss of his immense flour mills at Akron—is a man of power, pluck and principle, and hence is a very hard man to kill by reverses of any sort. A few days after the fire two men from Cincinnati appeared in Akron, and called on Mr. Schumacher for the purpose of buying a vast quantity of grain which had been more or less damaged by the great conflagration. The matter was at once talked over, a price for the entire lot was agreed upon, and a check was being drawn for the purchase, amounting to thousands of dollars, when one of the buyers, as the check was about to be handed to Mr. Schumacher, carelessly remarked that the damaged grain 'would make a very large amount of whisky.'

"'What! Do you want this grain to make whisky of?' inquired Schumacher, stepping back a few feet.

"'Yes; we are distillers in Cincinnati.'

"Then, gentlemen, you cannot buy any grain of me. I have no grain to sell to be made into whisky. Good-day.'

"We have no personal or business relations, past or prospective, with him, and do not know him at all except from this incident; but we predict that the mills of Mr. Schumacher will be rebuilt, and that his oatmeal will, with a better and purer flavor than ever before, be in very great demand; for all buyers and consumers of this healthful and popular food will be sure that Schumacher's principles are not mixed up and sold with his oatmeal. Readers of the Independent hereafter should not, and we know will not, fail, in making their purchases in this line, to call for the 'Schumacher brand.' Three cheers for Schumacher and his oatmeal!"

Literature.

Alden's Cyclopedia of Universal Literature, presenting biographical and critical relics and specimens from the writings of eminent authors of all ages and nations; Vol. 2, New York, John B. Alden, publisher, 1886. Price 60 cents. We have looked through this neat volume of 478 pages with great interest. It is, as its title indicates, a resume of choice literature both ancient and modern, and especially from the earliest English writings down to the present year of our Lord 1886. The student of English literature will find it of much value, while the journalist will be greatly aided in selections and suggestions. The general reader will find a fine compilation of history, biography and poetry, which cannot fail to please and interest. It has our cheerful commendation.

Chicago has two bookstores, which are among the best and largest in the world. It has a publishing house which has issued during the past three years books by the million. Its issues of standard authors, in cheap but attractive form, have been something enormous. And the sale of these speaks well for the literary taste of Western readers. The class of books drawn from the Public Library is constantly improving. The city is full of literary and scientific clubs of one sort and another, whose activities—if reported as other things are in the papers—would be a revelation to many. The Chicago Literary Club, the Fortnightly, and similar organizations, include gentlemen and ladies of the highest culture, and whose spoken thoughts, in one form and another, are a power not in the city only, but through the land.

The copy-right issue has two sides to it. Abstractly considered the author has a right to the money-value of his pen. Is he not frequently like the proverbially poor inventor? A company gets the large profit and his pockets go empty. Suppose that an international copy-right were established, would the writers of England and America be better paid? The great publishing houses would gather in the grain and authors would be left to glean. Besides, book-piracy, as it has been termed, is not so very common. The monopolists in the book-trade are the declaimers against this species of free-trade. They cry out for protection because it brings sheckels into their purses, and prate over the robbery of their clients because it will evoke sympathy.

[illegible] evening: a little boy speaks, "I tread
[illegible] and they bring me to you."
[illegible] coast, where mountains meet the sea:
The [illegible] of our earth's divinest things,
[illegible] tears with the lifelike voice,
[illegible] and the pathos of the sea:)
[illegible] built nowise orderly,
[illegible] niches natural
[illegible] rags, whence every day at dusk
[illegible] light gleams like a lofty star:
[illegible] of broad wave-bordering sand
[illegible] snowy line of breaking surf:
[illegible] verdure of far-rolling slopes.
Where [illegible] warble, sheep-bells tinkle soft,
[illegible] lashes a purple deep as dawn;
[illegible] still the giants of the hills,
That [illegible] mighty shoulders through the clouds,
[illegible] themselves in ecstacy of light:
[illegible] these are of the wild choral winds,
[illegible] of the fair ghosts of silvery mists,
[illegible] rude of strong and stormy streams
That [illegible] gray gorges swoop amain
[illegible] grander of their power and joy:
[illegible] granite arms sleep gleus of green,
[illegible] bright tarn of lonely blue—
[illegible] of peace so still and far away,
[illegible] from the murmurs of the world,
[illegible] with the quiet of the sky,
[illegible] might look to see immortal shapes
[illegible] and to hear the harps of heaven.

[illegible] kingly peaks that northward tower,
[illegible] their sundering gullies, silent poured
[illegible] of sunset, and rau reddening far
[illegible] sandy flats, and, Christwise, changed
[illegible] ashen waters into wine,
[illegible] we wandered toward the church of eld
[illegible] brink of the bluff headland stood

BIBLE WOMEN AMONG THE HEATHEN.

Another of our verses was this: "God willeth that all men should be saved and come to a knowledge of the truth. For there is one God, one mediator, also, between God and man, himself man, Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all, the testimony to be borne in its own times."

"What is that you are reading?" said a silk-weaver, leaving his loom and coming nearer the woman. "The testimony to be borne in its own times?" "I am reading God's proclamation," said the Bible-woman. "Your time and the time for Madura to hear has now come."

"Then read it to me," said the weaver. So she began the verse. He stopped her at almost every word. He questioned her closely on whether she herself had "a knowledge of the truth," and how it was to be had. The word "mediator" seemed to reach his soul. "That's the word for us," he said; "and here is His name given." He seemed greatly interested in hearing how this very same Jesus came down from heaven, the glory shining all around, until this poor world was reached. The Bible-woman told him that knowledge of the truth meant knowing all about this Mediator and our hearts went out to him as a living, present, personal friend. Her narrative greatly interested us all as she went on to describe this man's helplessness. Her own enthusiasm was enough to rouse any soul.

Another Bible-woman was passing the head of a lane, and heard a voice calling her. She found the mother of one of our pupils standing on the door-step, with a group around her. "Come here," said the woman, "and read what you read yesterday about that Mediator, and how the Swamy gives us all knowledge." The Bible-woman is rather shy, and a survey of the situation disconcerted her. The central figure below the steps was a soothsayer with his drum. He had intended to frighten that household into banishing the Bible-woman. So, beating away on his horrid drum, he finally, in a slow and solemn tone, said:

"Your Swamy is very angry at something that is being done in this house."

Beating his drum again in a mysterious-sounding thud, he stopped.

"You must give that up, or the Swamy will send a plague upon you."

"No, he won't," said the woman fearlessly. "He is the Creator, and he wishes to save us, not punish us; and there is a Mediator for us."

The woman was going beyond her depth when, as she afterward said, "The Lord himself sent the Bible-woman to pass that way." In obedience the Bible was opened, and there, under the clear sky, in that remarkable assembly, these wonderful words were read.

"There! that's it, and I like it," said this fearless woman. "I like that word Mediator; the great Swamy has let us know about him. He is not going to send a plague upon us."

The soothsayer was completely silenced at first; but as he turned away he gave his testimony. Said he: "These women, carrying a book about, are to be found in every street and every lane. There is no end to them. They get inside all the houses and tell all their things till the women's heads are turned." And away he stalked with his poor, old, little drum, leaving the Bible-woman with her words of blessing instead of his words of cursing.

"Blessed be the Lord, for he hath showed me his marvelous kindness in a strong city," was the fitting close to this most interesting narrative.

The last verse was this: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

I have no words to describe how the glory and beauty of this message broke over the groups of women to whom I read it. Whether interpreted as the glory of heaven yet to be revealed, or the unspeakable comfort of peace that environs us when in our distress we turn from all else and cling to One mighty to save, there was a reality that seemed like a seal of blessing from God himself. One woman said:

"Have you been to God's place to see, so that you know?"

A few days after, one of these listeners was herself in suffering, and there was reason for anxiety. She was using the expression, "O Lord Jesus, have mercy on me, body and soul!" Some one said to her, "Say, 'O Menachi, save me!' Don't say that other name."

"No, I will not say Menachi. If I am going to die, I am not going to Menachi. I am going to the Lord Jesus Christ in heaven, and he is the one to whom I am going to call." The Lord heard her, and spared her to give her testimony to her faith in him again. Her husband was taken with the cholera in the dead of night. The relatives proposed going to Menachi Temple to break two cocoanuts, and that two cocoanuts should also be broken by the sick man, and Menachi invoked to save. To this the dear woman quietly replied, "I do not trust Menachi, and I need no cocoanuts." As she told the Bible-woman: "I went into that room and shut the door, and raised my hands to heaven to the Lord Jesus, and told him that my only trust was in him; and then I did everything I could for my husband, and I all the time felt that he would not die." The Bible-woman read our precious verse again to her, to meet her warm response. Those of us who have known her for three years were much rejoiced over her.

A Bible-woman going into a house that seemed to offer no listeners, heard voices in an inner room, and hearing the word Lazarus, stopped to listen. To her surprise and delight, she heard the parable of the rich man and Lazarus told, with many Oriental touches; but the one fact that God loved the lonely and deserted man, and sent angels to take him to heaven, was dwelt upon with evident comfort. Going into the room, she found two women who have always been interested listeners to Bible-readings. One was lying down with her foot badly burned, and the other was kindly endeavoring to divert her. "You see," said she, "our kind of stories are always the same; but your kind are always like new ones, and I thought I would tell this one to cheer her." The Bible-woman read our precious verse, and they both saw how God's love shines through all his Word.

I must allow myself but one more incident. Bible-woman Harriet, going to one of our pupils whom we think of as a Christian, found that she was prostrated from a recent attack of cholera. This was her account of it: "I was taken at midnight with great severity. I begged my brother to go for you, but he did not think best. I then shut my eyes and thought of the Mission Compound, and the trees, and your face and the lady's face. Then I thought of heaven and the Lord Jesus, and it was comfort. I said: 'O Lord Jesus, if it is thy will that my time to die has come, forgive all my sins and take me to heaven. If it is thy will that I get well, thou wilt help me. Thou knowest that I love all thy verses.' " She then asked that all these verses be read to her. She had heard them all before, but she seemed like one with a new experience, who expected a new revelation.

MORE DISCOVERIES IN AFRICA.

Bishop William Taylor, of the Methodist church, who sailed for the western coast of Africa on his own motion, without a dollar from the missionary fund, and against the protest of the authorities, is creating a sensation by the discoveries which he has made. The following is an extract of an account of this newly-found region:

"This region, which is about 250 miles long and 100 wide, is some 700 miles east of the Atlantic ocean and 350 south of the equator. Four years ago two noted German explorers, Dr. Pogge and Lieut. Wissmann, visited this district. Dr. Pogge spent nine months among the Tushilange, Basonge and Beneke tribes who inhabit it. He died on his way back to the coast, but his journals and Lieut. Wissmann's narrative tell a story that would be almost incredible were it not for the high character of the two witnesses, who as yet are the only white men that have visited these tribes. One of the chief attractions to-day of the Ethnological Museum of Berlin is the wonderful collection of native weapons, carved ivory, baskets, inlaid wares, and copper and iron utensils that Wissmann brought home from the Tushilange country. He describes the district as a fertile, well-watered, and densely-populated plain. He says he and his companion were astonished by the vast numbers of the Tushilange tribe, who flocked around them by thousands. The neighboring Basonges were even more numerous, and Wissmann has told many things to illustrate their friendliness, their industry, and their high degree of skill in many manufacturing arts. No one has ever seen in other parts of Africa such native towns.

" 'Their villages,' says Wissmann, speaking of the Basonges and the Benekis, 'are models, well built and clean. Their houses, many of them stone, are arranged in streets and surrounded by neatly-kept gardens and palm trees. It took us from four to five hours to march through some of these towns, which had two or three rows of houses or streets. The population must number hundreds of thousands.' In this favored region, which, according to these scientific travelers, contains the most interesting and remarkable people of Africa, Bishop Taylor resolved to plant his missions. 'We intend to strike for these people,' he said, 'and we hope to be self-supporting after we get there.' So one blustering morning, a year ago last winter, a band of nearly fifty men, women and children set sail for Africa, singing, 'We will meet on that beautiful shore,' as they waved their last adieux to weeping friends who stood on the New York pier. Bishop Taylor's plan was to start inland from Loanda, the large Portuguese town south of the Congo, and plant a series of stations, each in charge of a missionary, from the sea to the Tushilange country. The stations were to be built within easy reach of each other, and, as the bishop pushed into the unknown, he intended them to maintain his communications with the civilized world, and insure a line of retreat in case misfortune befell him. This scheme he has been carrying out with dauntless zeal, and with a degree of success that no one but his own enthusiastic self dreamed he would attain. Several of his party returned home, having proved unequal to the work. One lies buried at Loanda. The others are scattered among six prosperous stations which they have founded from the sea to Casange, more than half the way to the fertile homes of the three wonderful tribes."

RELIGIOUS FESTIVALS IN MEXICO.

The night of the 5th of May is the beginning of a religious holiday week, in honor of the patron saint of the place, San Antonio de Padua. A large concourse of people had gathered there from all quarters. Peddlers of every description of vendibles, gamblers, horse-racers, and chicken-fighters are drawn, and each one does a good business in his line. Several priests are present to receive the vow money or offering to the saint; if it is money it goes into the box, if wax candles they are received, passed out of the back door and carried into the plaza for sale again. They are ready to conduct special mass, to baptize, the baptisms being one dollar and twenty-five, and the masses from one dollar to any thing they can get; they are selling relics of saints, blessed ribbons, pictures etc. They are there, in a word, just as clerks are in a store. The sacraments and blessings are asked for by the people and what will be the cost. They are told so much, if the person can pay it it is done, if not he will try and get it cheaper.

Out in the square, full of huckster stalls, they were trading. The gambling tents were full, the fandango harbor was full all the time, and the dance kept up nearly all night, the click of the game and chance tables was almost constant. During the day horce-racing and chicken-fighting were witnessed. Over two hundred and fifty chickens were killed in the pits. Taking this all into consideration and adding to it the drunkenness, cheating, stealing, and other crimes, and a good idea may be had of what is a holiday week in the Catholic church, and it lasted for eight days and nights, the number increasing every day. The people look forward to the feast with pleasure, and they commence to save their earnings to spend at that time. I was very sorry that my visit happened at that time, but did not know of it. —Sel.

THE BABY.

Oh! this is the way the baby came:
  Out of the night as comes the dawn;
Out of the embers as the flame;
  Out of the bud the blossom's on,
The apple bough that blooms the same
  As in glad summers dead and gone—
With a graee and beauty none could name—
  Oh! this is the way the baby came!

And this is the way the baby 'woke:
  As when in deepest drops of dew
The shine and shadows sink and soak,
  The sweet eyes glimmering through and through,
And eddyings and dimples broke
  About the lips, and no one knew
Or could divine the words they spoke—
  And this is the way the baby 'woke!

And this is the way the baby slept:
  A mist of tresses backward thrown
By quivering sighs, where kisses crept,
  With yearnings she had never known;
The little hands were closely kept
  About a lily newly blown—
And God was with her. And we wept—
And this is the way the baby slept!

TOM FAIRWEATHER AT BOMBAY.

His business finished, Captain Fairweather said to his son: "Come; we will take a carriage and drive through what they call the native town. Perhaps you will be more interested there."

It certainly was something novel, for when they reached that quarter the streets presented a very different appearance. The bright and fanciful costumes, varying with the religion and race of the weavers, had all the pleasing effect of a kaleidoscope as the people moved in and out and from street to street. Here the European shops gave place to Oriental bazars, where were displayed precious stones and costly fabrics in some, and in others curious carving in sandal-wood and ebony; in others, still, were all kinds of merchandise, from calico to china-ware.

They entered one of these shops to look at shawls. "Now, Tom, said his father, "you will see a very shrewd attempt to swindle. This man won't demand for his goods what they are really worth, but what he fancies I will give for them."

But as the demure-looking merchant displayed his shawls, Tom thought it impossible that he could be a rogue. And then he was so well-mannered. Unlike those in the United States, he did not urge one to buy against one's will, but patiently waited till his purchaser pleased his own fancy. While his father was busy with the shawls, Tom looked about and found some pretty work in woven silver wire.

Tom turned to his father, who had selected a small chuddah shawl and was now settling upon a price. This determined satisfactorily, what was Tom's surprise to hear the man propose to toss a rupee with his father, to see whether he should pay double the price or have the shawl for nothing!

Captain Fairweather declined the offer, and explained to Tom as they went out that these fellows were inveterate gamblers, and would lose a shawl worth hundreds of dollars without showing the least concern.

Walking about grew to be unpleasantly warm work; so they called up their carriage, and said to the driver, "Victoria Gardens."

These gardens extend over more than thirty acres, and are very artistically laid out with lakes, rustic bridges, and mounds. There is in them a deer park, where black and spotted deer, elks and antelopes roam about. A little farther on is a menagerie, with tigers, bears and panthers, and here Tom made quite a long visit. Driving in these gardens was a pleasing change from the hot town, and our friends had a capital opportunity to observe the various classes of people strolling about.

One of the most interesting of the many short trips Tom made during his stay at Bombay was a visit to the Towers of Silence—the place where the Parsees deposit their dead.

"Who are the Parsees?" inquired Tom as they drove along. They were mounting a hill which finally ended upon a ridge commanding a magnificent view of Bombay.

"Who are the Parsees?" repeated his father. "Let me see. To begin with, they are Fire-worshipers who left Persia after its conquest by the Mohammedans, as they disdained to change their religion. They first went to the beautiful island of Ormuz in the Persian Gulf, and later migrated to India, where, after the arrival of the English, they prospered and many acquired great wealth and prominence. Some have been made knights and baronets. They are among the most respected citizens of Bombay.

Arrived at the entrance to the inclosure where stand the Towers of Silence, their card of admission was presented and they passed into this very curious place. The towers were five in number. At a short distance from them was a house of prayer for persons attending a funeral. There was also a little temple in which the sacred fire is always kept burning, and from which its rays, escaping through apertures in the walls, fell upon the towers. There was a well laid out garden, in which an excellent model of a tower was shown to the visitors by an English-speaking attendant.

In explaining this model and the manner of conducting a funeral, the man said: "The corpse of a deceased Parsee, clothed in white, is brought up the hill on an open bier, covered with a white cloth. In front of the bier walks a man carrying a loaf or two of bread, and in the rear, at a short interval, a man leads a white dog. Then follows the procession of priets and relations of the dead, who, also clothed in white, walk in pairs, each holding a handkerchief between them.

"When the procession arrives near the tower, the dog is made to look at the features of the dead man, and is then fed with bread.

"Meanwhile all the followers go to the house of prayer, and chant prayers until the corpse-bearers enter the tower with the body." Pointing to the model, the man continued: "You see here is a door leading into the tower. The interior, which is open to the sky, has a circular flooring sloping downward on all sides to the center, where is a pit. The outer ring of the flooring is for men, the middle one for women, and the inner one for children. In a niche in these rings the body is deposited. Now, if you will look out at the towers in the garden, you will see that on each one of them is a number of vultures. As soon as the body-bearers leave the tower, these birds swoop down and strip the body of every particle of flesh in less than two hours. After a few days the bones are collected and deposited in a well in the center, where they are decomposed by the air and rain."

Tom listened to this description, and as it was finished he looked in silence at his father, as though he would like to know what he thought of this extraordinary custom.

Captain Fairweather asked, "Why do they have a dog to look upon the body and eat bread?"

"It is the belief of the Parsees that, unless this be done, the soul of the dead man will be assailed by evil spirits."

The garden itself was green and inviting, but a very short walk seemed to satisfy father and son, for the vultures, perched before their very eyes, effectually prevented a pleasant impression.

On another day a visit was made to the infirmary for animals, an institution maintained by the Hindoos. Aged and worn-out animals were kept here and provided with food. There were horses and cattle, sheep, monkeys, and even porcupines; in fact, the very lowest orders of animal life were preserved with every care. The class of Hindoos who have this queer hospital are Banias, whose religion teaches, among other things, the greatest veneration for animal life.

One morning, at a very early hour, a steam-launch came alongside the Neptune for Captain Fairweather, Tom, and as many others as could be spared from the ship. Their Bombay friends had planned a trip to the Caves of Elephanta, on an island some six or seven miles up the bay.

In less than an hour they were on the island exploring these remarkable caves, which are supposed to have been excavated 900 years ago. It was a wonderful place, indeed. In the cave were rows of massive columns, cut out of the solid rock in such a way as to form three grand avenues from the principal entrance to a colossal idol. Besides this idol, the walls of the the temple were adorned with sculptured figures, which are joined to the wall only by the backs. The great temple is 120 feet long, and there are chapels and chambers opening out and extending farther into the rock. The figures were mostly in a dilapidated condition, but enough was to be seen to indicate the stupendous work in carving them. They were from ten to fourteen feet in height, while a great three-faced bust of the Hindoo Trinity was nineteen feet high. Nothing accurate is known about these caves, but they were evidently a place of worship in the centuries past.

The effect on Tom was rather awe-inspiring as he moved about in the dim light. He had never seen anything of the kind before, although he was now told that there were many similar caves in India, and that these were called Elephanta from the fact that a statue of an elephant, cut in black stone, used to stand near the landing-place.—*Lieut. TEMPERANCE.

THE PAWNED WATCH.

Several years ago Mr. A. was the pastor of a large parish in a town in Central New York. He was then a comparatively young man, and as it was his first charge, each week brought an amount of toil that was far beyond his strength. His people wanted two well-written sermons each Sabbath, full of original thought, and so well in mind as to allow large freedom from his notes. Then there were funerals to attend, pastoral calls to make, and social visits, which absorbed a large part of every week.

For a time all these calls were faithfully met; then the brain began to refuse to work, the reaction from overstrain making him utterly powerless to produce the former results. Feeling that something must be done, he went to a prominent physician in his church and stated his symptoms. After examining his case, the physician said:

"My dear sir, you are very much run down. You need tonics, and I would recommend a glass of good old Bourbon after dinner every day. I think that will soon tone you up to your usual pitch."

The clergyman followed the doctor's advice, and was astonished to find what relief it gave him. His thoughts flowed more rapidly, and he could work longer with half the fatigue.

So the months rolled on, and people from other churches flocked to hear the brilliant young preacher; yet even he was unconscious how much he depended upon the stimulant which had come to be a necessity before those eloquent sermons could be written. But alas! that which he thought to use only as a servant became too soon the master. Ere long whispers of strange conduct on the part of their pastor began to float through the congregation. Then there came a minister's meeting at his own house, when the painful fact that he was drunk was evident to all present. It was a fearful revelation to those good men. How could a man of such apparent sincerity and devotion to his work thus throw himself away and bring such terrible disgrace on his Master's cause?

The next day two of his associates called upon him and remonstrated with him in most urgent terms. To them he confessed how the temptation had arisen and the habit had been formed, and solemnly promised to go on with his work without the false strength he had so learned to depend upon. But he found he could not accomplish the same results without it. His people were not satisfied; he saw that he must resign or be requested to leave.

Disheartened, yet struggling with the fierce tempter his appetite had now become, he went away among strangers, and began in a new and more retired field; but there his old enemy still pursued him, and once more he fell into disgrace. Trusting in his own strength instead of the All-Powerful, he found it a broken reed, and, utterly discouraged, he seemed to lose all effort to restrain himself. His conduct brought such scandal upon the church that he was expelled from the ministry.

Three years from the day he first called upon his physician for aid he again stood in his office, a pitiable object, with tattered garments, blood-shot eyes, and trembling limbs. Taking out a handsome gold watch from his vest-pocket, he said to the doctor, "I've come to you for help once more, but it's money I need now. I want you to give me a hundred dollars and take this watch in pawn till I can redeem it. It was my father's, and cost more than I now ask for it. I am going to make one more effort to release myself from the fiend who has me in his clutches. I am going as a self-appointed missionary to the Indians. I hope to get beyond the reach of temptation. But, doctor, you see the wreck I have become. Beware how you advise such false supports when young men of high nervous temperaments and over-wrought brains come to you for aid. I know the judgment of men upon me will be that I had no force of manhood or true Christianity thus weakly to yield to temptation; but, sir, the foe had mastered my strength ere I knew I was in danger. What agony I have suffered since no words can tell. I know you did not mean me harm, but I warn you to be careful how you play with such deadly poisons. Better let the young sink into an untimely grave than fall the victims to a soul-destroying habit."

Dr. C. was much overcome. Grasping his former pastor's hand, he said earnestly, "My dear friend, I never meant to do you such grievous wrong. Your words have taught me a lesson I shall not forget. Gladly will I do anything in my power to aid you, and I shall pray God to give you strength to regain your manhood and retrieve the past."

With a mournful shake of the head, Mr. A. replied: "If I could get beyond the reach of all sight and smell of alcohol, I might overcome the appetite. You can't understand it, doctor, but let it be near me and the desire rushes upon me like a frenzy. How can I reform when at every street-corner the demon is awaiting me?"

After some more conversation, Dr. C. gave him the desired loan and took the watch, to hold as a sacred trust: then they parted, never to meet again.

Whether Mr. A. fell a victim, finally, to his appetite in the slums of some Western city, or struggled through and carried out his plan of reform and work among the savages, beyond the pale of civilization, God only knows. The watch has never been redeemed.

Ward writes from Secunderabad, Deccan, India, Jan. 27th: "We are just nearing the end of our seven years of sole dependence on Jesus's word for all things, and our testimony is that not one word of God's good promises gives way under trial. Our God is true, and loves immortal souls as we do not, or we would give more and do more. Our little mission company now numbers ninety-three souls. It costs about $400 a month for the maintainance of these ninety-three, comprising eight American missionary workers, and ten native workers, nine little children and sixty-six orphans. I may say, were all our workers on the pay of a subsidy missionary society, we would have about $500 per month in salary alone, and our orphan subsidy $150 more a month. We all have enough and to spare, and need but little more than half this amount, and of this we earn ourselves more than half, this year. The longer I am in India the more fully I am wedded to the missionary policy of Bishop Wm. Taylor, no foreign subsidy of salary or sustenance."

—The Dutch-Lutheran missionary, A. Festersen, whom the Government would not permit to settle in Palembang, has made several visits to Southern Sumatra, in search of a suitable field, and believes that he has found one in Passuma-Ulu-Manna. This little territory in the mountains is wholly inhabited by heathens, who are divided among four tribes, of which the largest has ten and the smallest four villages. The Missions Zeitschrift suggests that he might find a more promising and a more useful field of labor if he should ally himself with the Rhenish missionaries in Northern Sumatra.

—The following, being a part of decrees of the Plenary Council of the Roman Catholic church, contains much that is valuable and worthy of imitation by other religious sects:

One of the most important decrees is that concerning matrimony. Since marriage was raised in the law to the dignity of a sacrament, it belongs solely to the church, to whom the administration of the sacrament was entrusted, to pass judgment on the validity, rights and obligations of marriage. This being the case, and the marriage tie being indissoluble, it is obvious that there is no power on earth which can dissolve Christian marriage. Against such as infringe these laws severe penalties are to be enforced. No legal divorce has the slightest power before God to loose the bond of marriage and make a subsequent one valid.

All secret societies which are secret as the church understands this term, such as Masonic lodges and other similar confraternities, are not to be joined by Catholics.

The Council directs the pastors to have in every church a free space, and admonishes them from humiliating people in public if they do not exactly keep within the limits of that space. The Council also ordered that no clergyman shall ever prosecute a layman for money due to the church, even for pew rent, unless he has asked leave from the bishop.

Another thing done by the Council is the prohibition of picnics and excursions by night, on Sabbath, or on other feast days or fasting days. This way of making money for church purposes will be hereafter forbidden, and only allowed by the bishop with necessary prudence and reserve. The sale of intoxicating liquors will not be allowed in any case.

Fairs, also, are not to be held hereafter without a special permit from the bishop, and not on Sabbath, and no intoxicating liquors can be sold by them. Suppers and dinners, social parties and balls, given at night, for raising money, are prohibited.

—The Norwegian missionaries in Madagascar regard the sufferings which the country has endured from the French war as a chastisement of the Hora kingdom, and a means of purification from the bad social conditions which have prevailed there. The prevailing hypocrisy made such a dispensation timely. Now the pride of the people has been broken. A more devout spirit prevails in the churches, with a fuller attendance at the prayer-meetings, and conviction of sinfulness is more generally felt. It appears that the old heathen idea that the relation between God and man is one of mutual service had not yet been fully dispelled.

—West China is shortly to be connected by telegraph with East China and the world. The line to Hankau is to be extended through Ichang to Chungking, and from Chungking to Cheutu, the capital of Sz Chuen province, thence to the capital of Yunnan, and ultimately to Bahmo. This is of immense importance to civilization as well as to China, and it will be a source of protection to missionaries and others in the far-away provinces. British consuls still refuse to give passports for the provinces of Kwi Chau and Yunnan. Americans obtain passports for all parts of the Empire. In the province of Sz Chuen missionaries have free access to the natives, but are as yet able to report but few conversions. There is quite a large sale of Scriptures in the province.

—Dr. Wangermann has returned from his visitation of the African stations of the Berlin Missionary Society. The comparison of the conditions as he found them on his first visitation, eighteen years ago, with those now e isting, revealed great progress. He was received with most manifest pleasure and respect by the native Christians wherever he went.

MR. HAMMOND'S LABORS IN LONDON.

During the past six months the Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been holding meetings in various parts of London. At the beginning of his labors, a large and influential committee composed of leading Church of England clergymen, and leading ministers and laymen of London, was formed to assist him in carrying out his plans for labor. This committee, early in the year, decided as to the localities in which the meetings were to be held. Only part of the invitations received could be accepted. It was decided to continue the services two weeks in each place. The meetings commenced at the Mildmay Conference Hall, and the first Sunday over 3,000 were crowded inside and over 1,000 attended an overflow meeting.

Mr. Hammond has held meetings in fourteen different localities—north, south, east and west. All denominations have united in the work. It is remarkable with what interest Church of England people, sometimes those called High Church, have entered into the work. In some places the meetings have been more largely attended by them (Church of England) than by any other denomination. He has held meetings in four Church of England churches and three Church of England buildings. While the Rev. W. Hay Aitken was working among the Episcopalians in the United States, Mr. Hammond has been doing a similar work in England. Frequently, in places where he has been, 500 and 1,000 have given their names, professing conversion. The work is usually begun among the children.

In addition to the regular services which Mr. Hammond has conducted in the above-mentioned localities, he has conducted drawing-room meetings for the upper classes and policemen's meetings. At one of the former a sister of Mr. Aitken, the wife of a Church of England clergyman, was present at a drawing-room meeting, with an invitation from her husband to Mr. Hammond to conduct a service with him.

It is said that there are in London over 1,000 converted policemen. These drawing-room meetings have been attended very often by people who seldom hear the Gospel; and the power and rapidity with which the truth has taken hold of those present, both young and old, has been most astonishing. It has seemed to come to them like a "new Gospel." The Christian and Word and Work, edited by Dr. Sinclair Paterson, have contained reports of Mr. Hammond's meetings nearly every week since he arrived in England, a year ago last October.

These reports, we have reason to believe, have stirred up others to work in a similar way. One young merchant from the north of England, by reading these reports was led to attend Mr. Hammond's meetings in Sheffield, and since that time has been conducting meetings somewhat similar to Mr. Hammond's, and has been the means of leading many to Christ.

When Mr. Hammond was in England in 1867, it was through his influence and meetings that the Children's Special Service Mission was inaugurated. The influence of this association, it is not too much to say, has been felt all over the world. No less than 250,000 are members of its Scripture Union, whereby they promise to read a certain portion of God's Word every day. Picture leaflets are issued in twenty-seven different languages, which are thus scattered all over the world.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People!

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of GEORGE W. CLARK, the Minstrel of Reform, a forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages. Price 10cts, postpaid. Address

IN THE COILS; —OR— The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

HOME AND HEALTH.

SWOLLEN TONSILS.

Even if the phrase "swollen tonsils" be limited in meaning to express only a condition of some duration, it does not always mean the same thing. In health the tonsil is very small—so small that some who have studied throat diseases particularly think that it does not exist in the sense of being a visible prominence. Now, when the tonsil becomes enlarged and remains so it may be from removable causes and conditions, or it may not. The one group of cases may be considered as those in which much of the enlargement is due to an excess of blood in the tissues, and the other group contains cases in which actual overgrowth of tonsil has occurred. In the former cases the enlargement may diminish until the tonsil, while still larger than proper, gives no very great trouble. In the latter the most experienced observers doubt if any treatment short of removal of the tonsil by some means is of much value. The popular ideas about outgrowing the condition are based partly upon the false assumption that what is really a considerably enlarged tonsil is the natural state of things, and partly upon the inability of non professional observers to distinguish between the temporary swelling of the tonsils, the chronically engorged tonsils, and the really overgrown tonsils. The opinion of the most "experienced mother" can be of no value here. She cannot at the outside have seen more than two or three cases of the last mentioned variety. Ball's Journal

HEALTH HINTS.

It is not a good habit to keep a lamp burning in the bedroom.

A good laugh is worth a hundred groans in any state of the markets.

Common baking soda is the best of all remedies in cases of scalds and burns.

File the top of an ingrowing toe nail very thin and place cotton under the ingrown part.

Never go to bed with cold feet, but first soak them in hot water, then dash on cold water, followed by thorough friction.

For earache fold and dip a small towel in hot water, wring and lay on the ear; then cover with two or three folds of flannel; repeat until relieved.

If you will cut the hind legs of your chair a little shorter than the front ones, the fatigue of sitting will be lessened, and your spine will be in a better position.

If wakeful at nights get up, walk about the room, go to the window and take a dozen deep breaths, rub your skin all over with a coarse towel or with the hands, then crawl into bed and go to sleep.

SLEEPING UNDER THE CLOTHES.

Miss Nightingale gives the following advice: There is no reason to believe that not a few of the apparently unaccountable cases of scrofula among children proceed from the habit of sleeping with the head under the clothes, and so inhaling air already breathed, which is futher contaminated by exhalations from the skin. Patients are sometimes given to a similar habit; and it often happens tha the bed clothes are so disposed that the patient must necessarily breathe air more or less contaminated by exhalations from the skin. A good nurse will be careful to attend to this. It is an important part, so to speak, of ventilation. It may be worth while to remark that when there is any danger of bed sores, a blanket should never be placed under the patient. It retains dampness and acts like a poultice. Never use anything but light woolen blankets as bed covering for the sick. The heavy, impervious cotton counterpane is bad, for the very reason that it keeps the emanations from the sick person, while the blanket allows them to pass through. Weak patients are invariably distressed by a great weight of bed clothes, which often prevents their getting any sound sleep whatever.

MILK DRINKING AS AN ART.

Milk should not be taken in copious draughts, like beer or other fluids which differ from it chemically. If we consider the use of milk in infancy, the physiological ingestion, that is, of food provided for it, each small mouthful is secured by effort, and slowly presented to the gastric mucous surface for the primal digestive stages. It is thus regularly and gradually reduced to curd, and the stomach is not oppressed with a lump of half-coagulated milk. The same principle should be regarded in the case of the adult. Milk should be slowly taken in mouthfuls, at short intervals, and thus it is rightly dealt with by the gastric juice. If the milk be taken after other food it is almost sure to burden the stomach, and cause discomfort and prolonged indigestion, and this for the obvious reason that there is not sufficient digestive agency to dispose of it; and the better the quality of the milk, the more severe the discomfort under these conditions.—Popular Science Monthly.

THE TRIBUTE OF THE PUBLIC!

THE SLOANE MEMORIAL. 24 PAGES. SECOND EDITION.

Price, 10 cents. Stamps received.

The Memorial Number of the CHRISTIAN NATION was scarcely one week before the public when the entire edition, although more than double the usual size, was entirely exhausted, and orders were still pouring in. THE PUBLIC DEMANDED A SECOND EDITION, and we are glad to give it. It will be ready March 25th. The 2d edition will be a 24-page paper, and in addition to all the contents of the first edition relating to Dr. Sloane—viz: Memorial Sermon by the Rev. David Gregg, contributions from Prof. Willson, President Hodge, President Scovel, Dr. George B. Cheever and Oliver Johnson, and two original poems—will contain much new matter, including a thrilling account of the great John Brown meeting written by Dr. Sloane himself on the 25th anniversary of that event, and published in the CHRISTIAN NATION, Dec. 17, 1883, additional Tributes, and the full-page portrait of Mr. Sloane, retouched and with a richer finish.

Added to this, it will contain the usual weekly contents of the paper, which include in this issue a SKETCH AND PORTRAIT of the eminent preacher, REV. DR. JOHN HALL, of this city.

In response to many inquiries, we have printed on elegant heavy plate paper, 11x14, suitable for framing, our portrait of Dr. Sloane, which we are selling at 50 cents per copy, and which will be mailed, securely wrapped, to any address, on receipt of price, in stamps or otherwise. But in order to place a portrait of the loved features in as many homes as possible, we will send the portraits in clubs of five at 40c. each, or in clubs of ten at 30c. each.

Or we will send a copy of the Portrait FREE, postage paid, to any one, not a subscriber for the CHRISTIAN NATION, who will send us their subscription for one year, $2. Address,

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1 00

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents, per dozen $3.50.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each: per dozen, $2 00

National Christian Association.
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

General Washington Opposed to SeCRET SOCIETIES. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees [illegible]

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on MaSONRY. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

FARM AND GARDEN.

THE BEST LIGHTNING-ROD.

In general, lightning-rods cost a great deal too much, and are often badly made and set up. They are not things to play or fool with, and a had rod is worse than none, for it may attract the lightning and then fail to earry it off without damage. The hest rod is of three-quarter inch round iron, drawn to a long, sharp point, which should be made smooth, and gilded or coppered. The scctions must be fastened together with serew ferules, and the ends filed smooth and bright, and be fixed in contact. It is quite safe if fastened to a pole a few feet higher than the building and set near to it, and it should extend ten or twelve feet ahove the pole. There is no need for glass fittings, as insulators; iron eyes screwed into the pole, or hooks fixed to bands to fit around the pole, are quite as safe as glass holders, which are useless when wet.

The chief point is the ground connection. This should be carried into permanently moist earth, or, better still, into water. We might give reasons for all this, but if one wishes to know the why and the wherefore, he should study a hand-book of electricity, and he will learn enough to make him quite a mateh for the peripatetic lightning-rod agents, who, as a rule, are not desirable visitors. A perfectly safe and effeetive rod may be put up in the way above described for ten to twenty-five dollars, and will be worth more than any of the patent fancy things, in too common use.—American Agriculturist.

RAISING SQUASHES AMONG POTATOES.

I tricd the plan of raising Hubhard squashes among my potatoes. I got over two wagon loads of squashes in connection with a small patch of potatoes, and think the squash vines were a benefit to the potatoes, as they helped to shade the ground and keep it moist during the dry spell in July and August. Am going to plant squashes among all my potatoes, as I think they are a benefit to the potato crop, although squashes are not worth much here in market. I sold a few as nice Hubbards as I ever saw at 50 cents per dozen, but then they are excellent for stock. I saw the plan recommended in the Farm, Field and Stockman last spring, tried it, and sold enough squashes to pay several times the eost of the paper.

DIFFICULTIES IN GRAPE CULTURE.

One of the most important matters connected with grape culture is the selection of the proper variety for the soil and climate, as no particular grape can be made to suit all sections. It is well known that in places where the Concord has proved successful the Catawha cannot be made profitable, yet in some locations the latter is better than any other grape. Hence, the beginner should make diligent inquiry regarding the variety to select before attempting operations.

In the next place, too much vine and too many laterals are usually left to grow the first season. The knife should be used freely until the vine has been properly trained. No grapes should be allowed to grow until after the vine is three years old. Something depends on the character of the soil. Grapes are said to do well on gravelly soil, hut it is because such soils are dry. Dampness is not conducive to the thrift of the vines, and within the past five years it has been demonstrated that drain tile laid between the rows of grape vines has been of great improvement. On light soils the vines are put down deep, and the roots well covered with wood mould. Only a little fertilizer is required the first year, but 200 pounds of ground bone, scattered on the surface covering the vines, and around them. has been practiced with success. If stable manure be used it should be well rotted, as fresh manure induces fungoid growth. Frequent cultivation should he given, in order to keep the ground clean, but the use of the plow is unnecessary. The best fertilizer for the bearing grapes is a mixture of 300 pounds muriate of potash, 200 pounds superphosphate, and fifty pounds nitrate of soda per acre. The winter is the best time for pruning and arranging the shape of the vine.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

For Sick Headache.

Dr. N. S. Read, Chicago, says: "I think it is a remedy of the highest value in many forms of mental and nervous exhaustion, attended by sick headache, dyspepsia and diminished vitality."

A Man Comes From Alabama to Express His Gratitude to an Atlanta Man.

"Is this Dr. Walter Taylor?"

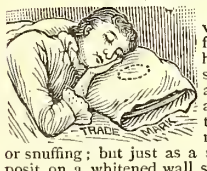
The speaker was an elderly man, of fine appearance, and evidently a stranger in the city. The question was addressed to Dr. Walter A. Taylor, who sat in his office immersed in the correspondence of his immense business.

"That is my name, sir," he replied, looking up inquiringly from his work.

"My name is Austin. I live at Culman, Ala. I have come to see you, Dr. Taylor, to express to you my gratitude."

Dr. Taylor smiled and inquired as to the occasion of his gratitude.

"You have saved my life, sir, and I come to tell you that, and to shake your hand. About a year ago I was taken with pneumonia, and it developed into a very ugly ease. I was in my bed for nine months, and was harrassed and weakened with a cough that was almost constant. Nothing would relieve it. I had physician after physician, and tried remedy after remedy. I have studied medicine myself, and now in the jewelry business. I was almost worn out, and had about given up my case as hopeless. One day I staggered out of bed, to have a consultation with all the physicians, to see if I could not, as a last resort, obtain some relief from my ills. The physicians in consultation told me that they could do nothing for me, and, hardly able to walk, I made my way to a drugstore, and while in there I spoke of the consultation just held in my case to the druggist, and he said; "Here is a remedy that I hear very highly spoken of. I know nothing of it from personal experience, but it has a great reputation, and my customers like it." The remedy handed me was Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein. I took it with about the same spirit that a drowning man would catch at a straw. I had little hope of its efficacy, but I thought I ought to try everything, and therefore took the bottle. I was barely able to get back to my bed again. It was an effort for me to walk down stairs. I was disspirited, hopeless and weak beyond expression, and continually growing weaker. With the very first bottle of Sweet Gum and Mullein my condition improved. It has been less than five weeks since I began on your remedy, and now I walk and travel without the slightest inconvenience up stairs or down stairs. My cough has left me, my health almost is restored, and I am in good condition. It is my earnest conviction that Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein saved my life, and I felt that I wanted to look you in the face, and take you by the hand and tell you so. I want to tell it also for the benefit of thousands of others who are suffering, and who are growing weaker and weaker from the use of inefficient remedies."



The above is the exact statement of this remarkable case. Mr. Austin insisted on seeing Mr. Taylor's laboratory, press rooms, packing rooms, and every part of his immense establishment. He wanted to see where Sweet Gum and Mullein was made. He took the greatest interest in every part of the process, and having been a physician, was enabled to look at it intelligently and to testify to the correct curative principles involved in the materials out of which the remedy is made, and the manner in which it is compounded. After a half hour's pleasant sight-seeing, and conversation he took his departure, saying to Dr. Taylor as he went out of the door, "I am satisfied now that I have seen the man that saved my life, for I tell you Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein is what stopped the progress of my disease, when everything else had failed, and hope had almost gone." This is the testimony borne by thousands of others by letter and otherwise, but it is seldom that the proprietor of a medicine finds a man who gets on the train and rides hundreds of miles to see him that he may express his appreciation and gratitude.

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the Pillow-Inhaler, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

Hon. E. L. Hedden, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the Pillow-Inhaler has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

Mr. H. G. Teele, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a Pillow-Inhaler, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the Pillow-Inhaler has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEEDLE WORK

Needle-Work: A Manual of Stitches and Studies in Embroidery and Drawn Work. This manual is an attempt to systematize and arrange in an order convenient for workers, the modern methods in Embroidery and Drawn Work. The author has felt the desire and the responsibility involved in aiding women to a true and practical guide to the beautiful art of needle-work. When the Angel of Mercy begged that woman might not be created because she would be abused by man, as the stronger, the Lord listened, but felt that he could not give up the whole scheme of creation, so he gave the loving Angel permission to bestow upon her any compensating gift she chose, and the Angel pityingly endowed her with tears and the love of needle-work. This book is printed on fine paper, has a handsome cover, and contains

COUNTRY.

Arbor day was fitly celebrated Thursday at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Erie, Pa., among the trees planted being a car-load of young oaks from Culp's Hill, at Gettysburg.

The Evangelical Conference closed its sessions at Freeport, Ill., at 11.30 Friday night, after the bishops had made the appointments for the coming year. It was almost unanimously resolved to dissolve the Preacher's Mutual Aid Society, which paid to families of deceased members $600.

The late Ann Jane Mercer, of Philadelphia, bequeathed her estate in Montgomery county, with buildings, furniture, horses, etc., for the establishment of a home for aged and infirm clergymen of the Presbyterian faith, who do not use tobacco in any form, and set aside a sum of $100,000 to maintain the establishment.

Seventy-two newspapers openly advocate the cause of prohibition in the State of Texas.

The running of street cars by electricity was begun Thursday at Montgomery, Ala., the machinery working perfectly.

A centrifugal milk separator burst in a creamery at Burlington, Ill., Thursday morning, killing O. S. Dunn, the forman.

While a marriage was being celebrated Wednesday, in a church at Rice's Station Minn., the structure was wrecked by a tornado, thirteen persons, including the officiating clergymen, being killed.

A cyclone devastated Monroe Township, Nodaway county, Missouri, Wednesday night, leveling all kinds of structures and destroying live stock. Three persons were killed, and several wounded, some fatally.

Mr. Powderly appeals to the Knights of Labor to send subscriptions to aid the strikers on the Gould lines in the Southwest. He states the order is not fighting capital, but monopoly, and that the battle against Gould must be fonght out manfully. The order is asked to watch Mr. Gould's actions, and to also keep an eye on the doings of Congress.

The school boys in numerous instances have, in imitation of their elders, gone on a strike for shorter hours and more play. At Green Point, L. I., the mother of the leader forced him into the schoolhouse and the rest followed. In other cases violence has been threatened and policemen called in.

Judge Hughes of the Coles County (Ill.) Circuit Court, called the atteution of the Graud Jury to extensive relations of the laws in reference to raffles aud lotteries by the merchants.

Alderman Riley, a saloonist and Democrat of Joliet, has come out a strong Prohibitionist and teetotaler.

The Milwaukee brokers have determined to have shorter hours, more wages, and that non-union mcn shall not be employed.

In tenaments at Cincinnati, occupied by Italian peddlers, who were arrested for counterfeiting, were found concealed large numbers of knives, daggers and revolvers, of all sizes and patterns, together with a supply of cartridges.

Mr. Jay Gould states that Mr. Hoxie has full powers touching the trouble on the Southwest system, and that he will enter into no further negotiations for the settlement of a strike, which, he says, is now a thing of the past.

The trustees of Chicago University have decided to offer the insurance company $200,000 as payment in full of its indebtedness, and thus have the university property restored to them.

Thaddeus Fairbanks, the scale manufacturer, died Monday at St. Johnsbury, Vt., at the age of 90.

The Rev. Sam. Jones preached at Louisville, Monday night for the benefit of the Holcomb Gospel Missiou. and $5,000 in small sums were subscribed.

The New York House Monday passed a resolution tendering sympathy to the people of Ireland, and expressing respect for Mr. Gladstone.

FOREIGN.

A French fleet in command of an admiral, is said to be in the South Pacific, with the object of annexing the Leeward Islands. It is said that some of the Society Islands will also be declared French territory.

There has been an elaborate discussion of Mr. Gladstone's Irish Home Rule measure which has developed an earnest opposition which endangers its final passage. It will doubtless be modified, but seems to meet the expectations of the moderate party among the Irish, and be opposed to the extremes on both sides.

On the 16th Mr. Gladstone introduced his Irish land bill. It proposes in substance that the payment of twenty years' rent, or in exceptional cases twenty-two years, shall be equivolent to a purchase and the land shall be owned by the occupants. Meanwhile the sum of £50,000,000 is to be raised on 3 per cent consols for the benefit of Irish landlords which sum is to be repaid by the Irish Government. Mr. Gladstone spoke for an hour and thirty-five minutes, and concluded amid great applause.

Irish members of the British Parliament are not prepared to express an opinion on Mr. Gladstone's land measure as a whole, but they dislike the idea of a Receiver General, and insist that a twenty-year's rental purchase is alogether too much. An honest and intelligent revaluation will probably be one of the things engrafted on the bill. The Liberal whips are confident of a majority for the Gladstone bills at the second reading of between 40 and 50. The Nationalists agree with this estimate, while the Conservatives are equally sure the bills will be defeated.

Mr. Sampson Low, the oldest London publisher, died Saturday in that city, at the age of 89 years.

There were sixteen deaths from cholera at Brindisi, Italy, from the 8th to the 16th inst.

All Germany was mourning last week for the great poet, Scheffel, whose funeral was celebrated at Carlsruhe with great pomp and ceremony.

Last Sabbath the labor organizations had a great procession and speeches, ostensibly for the eight-hour movement, but really for communism. Red flags were conspicuous. The cry of "Down with the capitalist!" was most prominent. A great wagon-load of beer was freely dispensed to the thirsty and suffering multitude. It was the fitting epitome of the recent strike and the practical triumph of law-breakers.

The almost universal celebration of Easter indicates the growing tendency in all the Protestant sects to imitate the Roman church in the adoption of religious observances and celebrations that have no warrant in the sacred Scriptures. It is a deplorable fact that just in proportion as churches become ritualistic they decline in spirituality, and that the multiplication of man-projected observances always goes hand in hand with the neglect of what is unmistakably of Divine appointment. Never has the Protestant world so generally celebrated Christmas and Easter, and never has Sabbath desecration been so flagrant and the tone of church morality so deplorably low. Not what men invent, however plausible, but what God commands should be considered.

That this Easter celebration, like Christmas, is of purely heathen origin, and, in common with the rites of Freemasonry, has come down to us from the old sun worship, is abundantly evident to all who have given the subject a careful attention. The learned Dr. Schaft, speaking of these man-made festivities, says: "We cannot possibly mistake the succession of the pagan worship of gods and heroes." Well might the heathen exclaim: "Wherefore must we forsake gods which the Christians themselves worship with us?" Such, according to Augustine, was their language in his day, and such it might be now.

We are glad to note that the press, both religious and secular, is beginning to speak out with merited severity of the outrages of the secret, irresponsible conspirators who, in the name of labor, are making war alike on the rights of capital, labor, individual liberty, and the established laws of the land. For a long time their language has been timid and apologetic. Even now our politicians in Congress are careful not to offend the organizations that can control half a million of votes, and in their committee-rooms as well as in attempted legislation always preface their declarations with a recognition of the rights of organization and of secrecy. But the average public sentiment is manifestly changing. The derangement of business, the denial of personal rights, the crimes against life and property, and the vast expense, that must be borne by the people, for civil and military suppression of riots, are at last enkindling a public indignation something akin to that which greeted the gigantic aggressions of the slave-power in the years 1850–'61. For a while the despotism of the secret lodges may prevail. It is interwoven with the very frame-work of society, but it is writing its own death warrant, and every act of menace and violence but hastens the day when all these "unions" and "orders" will be held to be so many conspiracies against God and humanity, from which all good men will insist on protection by the laws of the land.

The brave and timely address on "Social Purity the Latest and Greatest Crusade" by that queen of reformers, Miss Frances A. Willard, was given at the twelfth anniversary of the W. C. T. U., in the First M. E. church of this city. The uprising of Christian sentiment that grew out of the exposures of the Pall Mall Gazette, and the subsequent imprisonment of Mr. Stead, has extended to all English-speaking peoples. It has awakened American Christians from their moral lethargy and inspired Christian women with courage to speak out against the social inequalities and wrongs which their sex has been compelled to endure. Numerous petitions have been presented to either house of Congress, and bills are now pending to secure national protection to girls in the District of Columbia and the national Territories. We heartily commend this good work to all Christian reformers.

The idea that our foreign-born population are an obstacle to the prohibition of the liquor traffic, though having some basis in fact, is probably exaggerated. Of the States in which constitutional prohibition has been carried by large majorities, Rhode Island has 26 per cent of persons of foreign birth, Maine 9, Iowa 16, and Kansas 11 per cent; while Ohio, which gave nearly, if not quite, a majority for prohibition, has 12, Illinois 19, New York 23, and Massachusetts 24 per cent. On the other hand, the South, which has a much smaller proportion of persons of foreign birth than the North, has made faster progress in prohibition. Georgia, which is practically a prohibition State, has but six-tenths of one per cent of people who are foreign-born. The result of the late Rhode Island election shows that neither the number of foreigners nor a large proportion of city population are insurmountable obstacles to legal prohibition.

In that most wonderful of State papers, the last Inaugural address of President Lincoln, he expressed his astonishment that men should pray to God for help to "wring their bread from the sweat of other men's faces." The great reason why men join the secret orders, and especially the trades unions and assemblies, is to live at some other men's expense—to get their bread by the sweat of other men's faces. Strikes are welcomed, and the command of the union to stop work is obeyed on the instant, because the organization promises to support the strikers while they are idle. To the unthinking this idea of support in idleness has a special charm. They fail to realize that while they get their bread by the sweat of other men's faces, they must eventually suffer the penalty of all who attempt to cheat society out of their maintenance. Compelling others to be idle that honest industry shall not be rewarded is even worse. It is the enslavement of labor to an irresponsible despotism and a conspiracy against the general interests of society. Just as surely as the rebellion against republican equality was put down and the shackles fell from every American slave, just so surely will all these secret labor organizations that seek to satisfy the greed of the few at the the expense of the many be obliged to give way before the universal demand that all labor shall be free.

IN THY PRESENCE, FULLNESS OF JOY.

Psalm 15: 11.

BY REV GEO. B. CHEEVER, D. D.

THY loving presence is the light
Our daily life doth fill:
The soul of all our happiness,
Our shield from every ill.

"More blest to give than to receive:"—
Thy words, O gracious Lord,
May we in loving faith believe
And spread this life abroad.

And ev'ry day, each flying hour,
May we make haste to see
And show, with but an infant's pow'r,
Examples learned from Thee.

If aught of blessedness we know,
It is Thy gift alone;
And if we offer aught to Thee,
We give Thee but Thine own.

From day to night, from night to dawn,
Thy mercy is our guide;
We never can be far from Thee
Who in Thy love abide.

NATIONAL REFORM—A NEW HYPOTHESIS.

BY REV. J. B. GALLOWAY.

New to many who neglect future history as revealed in the prophetic Word, and who make no proper distinction between the church, the world, and the kingdom. There is a class of Scriptures which seems to be entirely and studiously overlooked by those who are at the front in the discussion of this subject; and hence they are continually setting before the church and the world a false hope. If these Scriptures were received in the fullness of their teaching, a new face would be given to the whole subject, and these apostles of reform would then go forth in the spirit and power of Jonah and John the Baptist to the rebel nations of to-day.

The controversy seems to bring on the question: "What is Christ's present relation to the kingdoms of the world? Is he now defacto King of nations, or is what he said true, 'My kingdom is not of this world'—i. e., not of the present order of things—which, in another place, is denominated 'the present evil world?'"

Now, there are many Christians just simple enough to believe this particular Scripture, and, consequently, that this world will be evil as long as it lasts, or until "the dispensation of the fullness of times." "Earth's foundations are all gone out, of course;" and so they will remain until government shall revert to Him whose right it is. This evidently has not taken place. But this is just the point in the controversy.

Does Christ not say, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth?" Yes; but this does not prove that he has entered upon this all-power. David was anointed king long before he took the throne, and he is a very vivid type of the Christ. From eternity Christ was Prophet, Priest, and King, yet he did not literally exercise the office of a prophet until he was made flesh and dwelt among us; and later still he exercised literally the office of priest when he entered into heaven itself with his own blood, where he ever liveth to make intercession for us. But never yet has he literally exercised the kingly office, although born to this end.

We meet still another objection: "Does he not rule and defend the church, restrain and conquer all his and her enemies?" Yes; but this does not necessarily imply kingship. The father of a family does all this, according to his measure, and yet he is not king in any correct sense. But this is the very way in which Christ exercises authority over the church. "He is the head of the body, the church." We are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones, and partakers of his resurrection life.

It is a far closer relationship Christ sustains to the church than that of king; he is absolutely one with it. The church is part of the government; so that when he judges and reigns she shall judge and reign with him. Now, his present relation to the State or Gentile supremacy must also be settled by the infallible Word.

1. It is absolutely certain that he will reign. All the kingdoms of the world are to become one kingdom in his hand, and this, when it takes place, will be a literal fulfillment of ancient prophecies. Daniel, in vision, saw one like the Son of man come to the ancient of days and receive the dominion. He also saw him begin the exercise of his authority over Gentile powers, under the figure of the little stone. Isaiah (9: 6) sings of him as though the first and only child ever born to Israel, and he says "the government shall be upon his shoulder;" not a government, as Britain or America but the government—all government—shall be upon his shoulder. Just as surely as God hath spoken and as Christ hath literally exercised the offices of Prophet and Priest, so surely will he, without a rival, exercise the office of King.

2. Both Scripture and the present state of the world agree in declaring that Christ has not yet entered upon his kingly office. Nothing can be plainer than that his kingly prerogatives over the nations are held in abeyance.

(1) As to Scripture teaching: "The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool." (Ps. 110.) This is the position which Christ now occupies and will occupy until he receives the kingdom. I am aware that national reformers will claim that the work of subduing enemies is gradual—has been and is now going on by means of the Gospel. We do not deny that the Gospel is a subduing and restraining power in the world; but Scripture reveals another method God has of reaching enemies, viz.: the judicial or punitive; and, clearly, this is the method referred to here, and also in the 2nd Psalm and many other places. To speak of those who are brought under the saving power of the Gospel as being made the footstool of Christ, or being broken with a rod of iron, is utterly repugnant to all Scripture and to those who have known the manner of the Father's love. The Gospel does not make men bite the dust, but "lifts the beggar from the dung-hill and sets him among princes." With this agrees also Rev. 3: 21: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." Not till he takes his own throne will he exercise the kingly office. And we are not left in doubt as to what and where his own throne is: "And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." (Luke 1:32.) This of course is yet future, and agrees well with 1 Tim., 6. 15: "Which in his own times he shall show who is the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords." When man's day of shameful failure has come to an end, then the Lord's day of glorious triumph will begin. It will require no argument then to convince men that Jesus reigns. He will show it, for it will be the time of his manifestation. For this time of his glorious appearing every believer ought to be waiting, "even as also the creation waiteth for our revealing." (Rom. 8: 19.) There can, therefore, be no complete or permanent national reform until his own times.

The only hope for distressed nations is the dethronement of Satan by the Lord from heaven in flaming fire. When he who has gone into the far country receives the kingdom the proclamation will follow, as thunder follows lightning: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ."

(2) The state of the world in the past and present gives an emphatic denial to the idea that Jesus is reigning. He is waiting and we are waiting with him, and this is "the patience of Christ." Saul is still on the throne, although our David has been anointed. There is not a government on earth that believes or acknowledges that Jesus is King; there exists no such thing as a Christian nation. The most that can be said of the best of them is, Christianized civilization. What would be thought of the Czar, the Queen, or the President whose subjects neither acknowledged nor obeyed them? Such an one would be branded as an imbecile and the reins snatched from his hand. It is irreverent to think of Christ, whose name is "Wonderful Councilor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, and the Prince of Peace," as the present executive in such maladministration as blackens the world to-day. Satan is the ruler of the darkness of this world (and will be until he is chained and sealed in the pit); and Gentile government always has been, and is to-day, part of this darkness because Christ is not in it.

Now if Christ, as is claimed, has really entered upon his kingly office, why find fault with his constitutions and his administration of them? Only infidels find fault with his work as Prophet and as Priest; and, on the same principle, only infidels can find fault with his kingly work, for all must be alike holy, just and good.

The truth is that God hath ordained the powers that be, and is dealing with them in grace because of the presence of the church, and "until it is fully gathered." (Rom. 11: 25; Acts 15: 14.) We are, therefore, forced to the conclusion that Christ has not yet taken the reins into his own mighty hands, but is still the Prince of the kings of the earth, awaiting his own times.

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

In our busy, hurrying age, so full of intensity and strain, the temptation is to lay too much emphasis on the "Do this" and "Do that," and too little on the simple "Follow Me." But the whole rubric of Christianity is contained in those two short words; and I am not sure that it was any harder to follow Christ in the days when it led literally to prison and to death than it is now. The cup of persecution is only a tonic to brave souls. In our day the world, the flesh and the devil have found this out, and they give us nepenthe instead. So the church is full of drowsy Christians who can't see any harm in church fairs, or secret societies, or any of the popular evils of the day. The trouble with them is they are spiritually drugged, and the adversary takes care to keep them in that condition. No wonder they follow afar off.

I know that the spirit of persecution has not died out. I know that in silence, here and there, brave souls are suffering for their loyalty to Christ, in deranged business, in obloquy and abuse, in peril of their very lives; while the church they love stands dumbly by, with never a word to say in condemnation of the dark, secret power which perpetrates such outrages on her most faithful servants. But even to such I would say, "Better the tonic than the nepenthe."

"Jesus calls us o'er the tumult
Of our life's wide, restless sea;
Day by day his sweet voice soundeth,
Saying, 'Christian, follow Me.'"

And our hearts respond, "Dear Lord, we will follow thee whithersoever thou goest," and we mean it. But when we have come down from our delectable mountains or our heights of Pisgah, or wherever else we have been, and the world crowds in with all its cares and bewildering distractions, you and I know how it is, or, rather, how it is apt to be;—how the glory dies out and the voice sounds afar; and for the moment we almost bitterly wonder if there is really any difference between ourselves and others who have never seen that glory or heard that voice.

I remember once talking with a young Christian friend about the then lately published biography of Frances Ridley Havergal, and her naive remark has often occurred to me since: "It was such a beautiful life; but don't you think it is hard to be so good all the time?" I wonder if there have not been moments when we have all said the same in our hearts. Yesterday it was easy to act right, and feel right, and speak right; why is it hard to day? We have forgotten, perhaps, that the way to follow Christ is always to go where he leads; and a thought let in that he would not think, or a word said that we would not say if he were beside us in visible presence, may be enough to dim the print of the divine footsteps.

But across these eighteen centuries comes an answer: "Lo, I am with you all the days." And if all the days, all the hours, the minutes, the seconds. Isn't it because we lose the consciousness of this constant presence that we so often fail to follow him in the way he has promised to be with us—all the days; not on the dark days or the bright ones merely—not alone when we are on the hilltops or in the valleys, but on the levels of life when there is no particular sorrow or joy to drive us to him for refuge or in thanksgiving? Let us be as "diligent in business" as we please, but don't let us forget, as we go about our daily toils, to keep a hidden shrine of quiet and silence in our inmost hearts, undefiled by the world's tread; a little chamber on the wall where its tumult is shut out, and where in our busiest moments we can always hear the sweet voice sounding. For I believe that is what the apostle meant when he wrote to the Thessalonian Christians, "Pray without ceasing."

SOCIALISM AND SECRETISM.

"Working-men! Throw aside your tools; take to guns; destroy your oppressors; tear down the barriers which close the way to happiness, to true manhood and freedom; secure for yourselves such conditions as shall enable every one who is willing to work to enjoy to the utmost the fruits of his labor! And you tramps, who, hungry, cold, and homeless, wander through the country, a moving picture of our splendid civilization, while a lazy, paltry crowd in their well-warmed palaces treat themselves to the products of your labor,—you may yet hope soon to have a reckoning, and take what belongs to you. You, too, will yet be able to enjoy life if you will resolve to use the power which nature has given you, and which makes it possible for you to produce riches. Band together, then, and arm yourselves! To the fight, working-men! up, proletariat! . . . Among the friends of freedom, socialists, and other revolutionists, the fixed idea is still met with, that the good must in the nature of things certainly prevail sooner or later. This, too, is a remnant of religious superstitution. For the idea can only be maintained on the assumption of a certain conformity to a purpose in the course of history; and this in turn pre-supposes the existence of a higher conscious being. That this idea must enfeeble and nareotize the energy is evident. It is the most dangerous opiate that there is for revolutionists. Religion, authority, and State are all of a piece. To the devil with theory! The saviour of the present world must be one who will free us from the saviour of the old world. . . . His common name is 'Reason.' . . . His proper name is 'Atheism,' or 'Disbelief.'"—The Anzeiger, New Haven, Conn., February, 1885.

NOTE:—The foregoing from a leading socialistic journal of New England shows the drift of sentiment among the secret labor organizations of the hour, and goes far towards warranting the prophecy referred to by our correspondent as "The Fall of the Great Republic." In that remarkable book the overthrow of the nation is traced to these organizations and principles. We do not believe that the mass of working-men who make up the "unions" and assemblies" have yet adopted the pernicious principles of this article. We believe they are well-wishers to their native or adopted land. But we do believe that they have committed themselves to principles and influences, that must, if not abandoned, result in the collapse of all patriotism, morality, and religion. Most earnestly would we lift our warning voice against the practical atheism that puts the commands of a secret organization in place of enlightened self-interest, of conscience and of law. We are on the eve of a great crisis. The contest is not between capital and labor, but between Christianity and good government on the one side, and atheism and anarchy on the other. Let every Christian laborer absolve himself from these organiztions and seek other means for the improvement of his material interests.

WAGES IN 1800.

In the great cities, unskilled workmen were hired by the day, bought their own food, and found their own lodgings. But in the country, on the farms, or wherever a band was employed on some public work, they were fed and lodged by the employer, and given a few dollars a month. On the Pennsylvania canals, the diggers ate the coarsest diet, were housed in the rudest sheds, and paid six dollars a month from May to November, and five dollars a month from November to May. Hod-carriers and mortar-mixers, diggers and choppers, who, from 1793 to 1800, labored on the public buildings and cut the streets and avenues of Washington City, received seventy dollars a year, or, if they wished, sixty dollars for all the work they could perform from March 1st to December 20th. The hours were invariably from sunrise to sunset. Wages at Albany and New York were three shillings, or as money then went, forty cents a day; at Lancaster, eight to ten dollars a month; elsewhere in Pennsylvania workmen were content with six dollars in summer and five in winter. At Baltimore men were glad to be hired at eighteen pence a day. None, by the month, asked more than six dollars. At Fredericksburg the price of labor was from five to seven dollars. In Virginia, white men employed by the year were given sixteen pounds currency; slaves, when hired, were clothed, and their masters paid one pound a month. A pound Virginia money was, in Federal money, three dollars and thirty-three cents. The average rate of wages the land over was, therefore, sixty-five dollars a year, with food and, perhaps, lodging. Out of this small sum, the workman must, with his wife's help, maintain his family.—McMaster's History of the United States—a mirror for our times.

THE Dime Savings Bank at New Brunswick, N. J., has been wrecked by the peculations of its cashier, Arthur G. Ogliby, and closed its doors March 11. The deficit is $86,182. The dispatch significantly adds that there are "more than twenty bank cashiers and presidents in the New Jersey penitentiary serving time for wrecking banks."

A writer in Harper's makes the good suggestion that the eight-hour-per-day rule be strictly enforced upon those laborious individuals, the dram-shop keepers.

PROF. SLOANE'S ACCOUNT OF THE JOHN BROWN MEETING.

[In connection with the portrait of Prof. J. R. W. Sloane we print from his letter to the Christian Nation, describing a wonderful meeting held in New York, in behalf of a fund for the family of John Brown, soon after the death of the old hero:]

The events connected with the John Brown raid have become a matter of history, and are too well known to require repetition here; suffice it to say that the old martyr-hero was captured on the 18th of October, and hung, while yet unrecovered from his wounds, by the excited and frenzied Virginia authorities of that day, on the 2d of December, 1859.

By this tragic event his family was left entirely destitute. In the number were three widows, his own wife and the wives of the two sons who died fighting by their father's side in the struggle in the now well-known "John Brown's Fort" at Harper's Ferry. It immediately occurred to some benevolent anti-slavery people to attempt to raise a fund which might place these sorrowful and destitute persons beyond the fear of want; it was in aid of this fund, called "The John Brown Fund," that the meeting was called; it was therefore for a purely benevolent purpose, and as the programme shows, designed to be of a somewhat religious character.

The meeting was appointed for the evening of the 15th of December, while all the circumstances of the tragic event were fresh in the minds of the people, and the South still shaking from the fright that the attack on the peculiar institution had caused. It began to be rumored a few days before the meeting that an attempt would be made to excite a riot and either prevent it from being held altogether or break it up if it should go forward. The day preceding the meeting, Thaddeus Hyatt, who had been one of John Brown's men in Kansas, came to my house to inquire whether I was willing to meet the emergency, or would prefer that they should endeavor to get some one to take my place. I was not at home, but my representative told him that she did not think I would hesitate a moment.

At the time appointed the great hall of the "Cooper Institute," as it was then called, was filled to overflowing. On the platform were seated "Shelton's Band," the officers of the meeting, whose names I cannot recall, the speakers, and a large number of anti-slavery people of New York.

The audience, as it appeared from the platform, was quiet, respectable and unexcited; the friends of the meeting were congratulating themselves on a great success. We shall see by and by.

The programme gives the following order: Music, "Oh, come and let us worship;" prayer; music, "Pleyel's German Hymn;" opening address, Rev. George B. Cheever. Up to this point all was quiet; silent, respectful and even reverential. Dr. Cheever, as shown above, was the first speaker. He was at that time in the height of his power, with enough of brains, as Dr. Stephen Tyng, Sr., said, to set up half a dozen ministers. He was fiery, impetuous, impassioned, vigorous; master of a fine style somewhat rhetorical, abounding in metaphor and illustration, all interspersed with hard hits which on one occasion Mr. Phillips designated "the thunderbolts of Jove." Some idea may be formed of the impression which he made from another remark of Mr. Phillips. Sitting beside him on one occasion while Cheever was speaking, he said, "I wish they had let me speak first; what I have to say will be cold and tame after Cheever has poured out his red-hot lava." At this time, as many of our readers will remember, he was pouring out his "red-hot lava" on successive Sabbath evenings, in the "Church of the Puritans," which at that time stood on Union Square. The Doctor had not spoken more than a few sentences when a decently dressed man sprang up immediately in front of the platform, and shaking a stout cane at the speaker, declared with horrible imprecations that he would make a martyr of him. Then the tumult began, breaking out in all parts of the hall apparently at once—shouts, hootings, hissings, cat-calls, groans, "Order! Order!" "Put him out!" "Down with him!" "Go on!" demoniac yells, cheers, counter-cheers, and —who can describe Pandemonium? Precautions had been taken to secure a number of policemen; about thirty, I believe, were scattered about the hall. They did nobly, struggled bravely with the rioters, and occasionally plied their clubs effectively, but they were too few in number and unable fully to cope with the mob. Dr. Cheever stood to his post; the friends of the meeting encouraged him with cheers and cries of "Go on! Go on!" and he did go on until the last sentence was completed, although but short portions of his noble speech could be heard. During the greater time of the delivery of this speech a large proportion of those in the audience and on the platform were on their feet. It was, perhaps, about the time that this speech was closing that the chief of police, a Mr. Pillsbury, with seventy-five men behind him, entered the hall. The chief took his stand on the platform, and the men distributed themselves about the hall and engaged the rioters.

The next speaker was Wendell Phillips; he stepped forward to the front of the platform, calm, collected, dignified, with that severe down-bearing look that was peculiar to him. It would have been hard to determine whether in his expression there was most of pity or scorn for those baying hounds of the slave-power. There was still much confusion and an occasional struggle with the police; but what with the charm of the great orator, and the failure of their attempts to break up the meeting, the tumult was somewhat allayed. The writer heard Mr. Phillips frequently, but never heard him rise to grander heights of eloquence than on this occasion. The storm called out his noblest powers; he was above it as if guiding it. One illustration of this, but imperfectly recalled, may serve to give an idea, although a faint one, of his peculiar power: "All that John Brown did was to endeavor to help men to liberty; did he do right?" "NO!" from a hundred murderous throats. "Well, I was born at the base of Bunker Hill, and I say he did do right; if not, answer, Byron, from your marshy bed at Missolonghi, why did you go to help the Greeks? if not, answer, Kosciusko, from your tomb on the Hudson, why did you come to help us? If not, answer, Lafayette"—— "We were white men!" again roared the many-headed beast. "Yes," (with ineffable scorn) "you were white men! Lafayette said that if he had known that he was fighting for a white slave-republic he would never have drawn his sword for America!"

The next speaker was the Rev. Hiram Mattison, of the Methodist Protestant church, pastor of a congregation then worshiping in Forty-second street. Professor Mattison, as he was called, was an able, accomplished and scholarly man, fearless in his denunciation of slavery, and ready to make any sacrifice for liberty. He was at this time in delicate health, and was not able to command sufficient volume of voice to enable him to be heard amid the confusion and jeers of the rabble; otherwise his speech was every way worthy of himself and the occasion.

The writer was assigned the last speech. While the band was playing a sacred march, a friend of the meeting came and told me that there would be an attempt made to put me down, that they might have it to publish to the country that the meeting broke up in a general row. I suppose this was told the chief of police, for when I arose he stepped forward and took his stand by my side, and at the first outbreak reminded the rioters that the gentleman must be heard. Suffice it to say that he was heard, with comparatively few interruptions, until his speech was ended. The band played, the friends in the audience cheered, those on the platform shook hands and congratulated one another on the great success, and the meeting quietly dispersed. I have none of the accounts given by the papers at hand. The Herald, however, pronounced it one of the roughest meetings ever held in New York, while some of them had in large head-lines, "Free Speech Vindicated!" "Free Speech Triumphant," etc.*

With a few incidents connected with the meeting we close our account. At one time there was a violent rush made for the platform, with the design, it was said, of hurling the speakers from it. About thirty of the rioters succeeded in gaining it, but for some reason did not make the attempt. One of them was close at my side. A lady, touching my shoulder, whispered, "Do you know that man?" I replied in the negative. She said, "Take care! that is one of the worst ruffians in New York." He was displaying his courage by muttering curses through his closed teeth. A friend who had been in the audience afterwards told me that Morrissey, the Sullivan of that day, was present, surrounded by a band of kindred spirits helping to swell the uproar. Many ladies were present, displaying great self-possession and keeping their places to the last. Also, I could recognize in the audience the faces of a goodly number of Scotch Covenanters. Their presence was an inspiration; it seemed to say, "Never mind; if the worst comes to the worst, we are here!"—men of that class of whom it was eloquently said that "they never beat on their drumhead the hollow sound of retreat." We could see from the platform an occasional rush to some point in the hall, a confused struggle, the clubs of policemen waving above the heads of the contestants, and hear a scream of pain as some rioter received a blow and was hustled to the door; that was not a pleasant sight or sound. The police station gathered in between thirty and forty, many of them with very sore heads, among them some few who were not accustomed to such associations. The amusing side of the matter was that these fellows had utterly failed to break up the meeting, their own heads being the only thing that was broken, and had helped to swell the "John Brown fund," as every one of them was compelled to pay an admission fee of 25 cents in order to gain entrance to the hall.

Whence came these ruffians? For the most part from the slums of the city, hired to attempt this enterprise by men who took care to keep their names from notoriety and their bodies out of harm's way. The custom-house is said to have been the place where this valiant scheme originated. This was the current rumor. One thing is certain: they were all good Democrats. Their political successors will bear

* [The New York Tribune's account of the meeting contained the following reference to Mr. Sloane's own address: "The Rev. J. R. W. Sloane came forward, and in the course of his address he succeeded, by describing the characteristics of the turbulent element which had disturbed the meeting, in quieting the rioters, and in fact caused many of them to hang their heads and leave the room!"

Grover Cleveland on their shoulders to the Presidential chair on the 4th day of March next.

The outlook is again somewhat dark, but let us not despair of the republic. God reigns. The triumphing of the wicked is short. Already we hear the voice of an awakened North like the distant roar of the roused ocean. True, once more she has bowed her neck to bear and become a servant under tribute to the South: but she will again throw that yoke from off her shoulders, and remand the men whom not worth, but accident, has placed in power to the obscurity from whence it is a pity that they had ever emerged. In less than three years after the scenes above described the land trembled beneath the tread of armed thousands moving to the mightiest conflict of the age, chanting the words of that most inspiring of war songs:

"John Brown's body lies amouldering in the grave,
But his soul is marching on."

THE LEGAL REMEDY.

Daniel Webster suggested the legal remedy for the evils of secretism when he wrote that secret associations "are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government," and added his opinion that the "administration of all such oaths and the formation of all such obligations," as are required by these associations, "should be prohibited by law." The "great expounder of the constitution" did not mistake the character of the secret lodge, and the curb of law which he would put upon it would be an effectual one. The lodge fever raging in all the veins of the body social and politic would find in his remedy a potency which promises a cure. Just as with Mormonism, where no enactments, laws, or trials had any effect until their Endowment House lodge oaths were recognized and the means taken to counteract their influence, so with our labor troubles. So long as petty despots and hot-headed agitators are allowed to terrorize the working classes into swearing literally away their liberties, there will always be trouble in our industrial centers. Make what concessions they may, employers will find their efforts fruitless. The managers of the labor lodges will find yet new pretexts to keep up a quarrel. Only thus can they exist and thrive. They fatten on the distress of the poor. The laborer will understand that he has no use for such leaders when he realizes that strikes and boycotts and their half-savage accompaniments do not secure him permanent advantages. But make these oaths nugatory, and the lodge chains fall off and its ropes become sand.

Such is the legislation the Chicago News calls for in an editorial a few days since, in which it thus reviews the present alarming condition of business:

"A man named Hall was discharged in February last for alleged absence without leave from the service of a bankrupt railroad corporation. Failing in their efforts to obtain a hearing of his case, ten thousand of his fellow-workmen quit work within a fortnight, and the commerce and industries of four States and one Territory were completely paralyzed thereby. By the middle of March some si ty thousand employes in the Northern States were out on strike on various pretexts, and in every instance the cessation of work and the withdrawal of the men were marked by the accuracy and promptness of a military maneuver. For example: A man walked through a silk mill 'snapping his fingers,' and, as he passed through, every man and boy, to the number of twelve hundred, dropped his tools, quit work, and followed him out of the mill without asking a question. In another instance, the drivers and conductors on a street railway line abandoned the teams and cars, without a word being said, but simply in response to 'two fingers held up to them by a man who walked along the track.' These illustrations of the strength and discipline of the forces of organized labor might be vastly multiplied, but that it would be superfluous. Every intelligent reader of the daily press is familiar with them, and thousands of such readers are asking their portent and meaning, and the answers they receive are buncombe speeches in congress, buncombe bills, and buncombe resolutions. Sherman and Hoar and Edmunds and Blair and Wilson in the senate, and Anderson, O'Neill, Lawler, Morrison, Reagan, et al, in the house, offer as remedies bills for the government purchases of telegraphs and railroads for education by the government, for the relief of the 'strained relations between capital and labor,' by act of Congress, for this, that and the other, without heart or soul or earnestness anywhere contained from the enacting clause to the final section. Not one of the public leaders in Congress has shown the disposition, if he has the ability, to rise to the height of the occasion. Not one of them has treated the subject other than as a demagogue."

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

MASONIC STATISTICS.

The proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Michigan of A. F. and A. M. gives:—Lodges, 354; initiated, 1,353; raised, 1,282; affiliated, 446; restored, 76; dimitted, 673; died, 320; suspended, 683; expelled, 18. The statistics of the Grand Lodge of Utah are as follows: Lodges, 8; initiated, 21; passed, 27; raised, 23; affiliated, 18; dimitted, 21; suspended, 24; reinstated, 6; died, 6; members, 474; net decrease, 8. The report of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania is as follows: Lodges, 379; admitted, 437; initiated, 1,696; suspended, 587; resigned, 354; died, 497; loss by other causes, 23; members, 37,175.—Voice of Masonry, for May, 1886.

From the foregoing, which may be regarded as a fair specimen of Masonic statistics, we learn the following facts: First, that a large number of young men are attracted toward Masonry and induced to become initiated from curiosity and a desire for help in business, social and political relations; second, that a large percentage of those initiated never become Masons—i. e., are never raised to the master's degree. They are manifestly disgusted with the initiatory ceremonies, and find that they have been duped into the purchase of mysteries that are being given away all over the land. Third, of those that go into the third degree a large proportion are suspended for the non-payment of dues. They have fully tested the practical value of the institution and find that it does not pay, and so drop out. Fourth, added to this is a vast number of Masons who were unwilling longer to bear the burdens of the order, and yet feared the reproach of expulsion or suspension, have dimitted from the lodge and retain but a nominal connection with the order. Fifth, the practical result is that while vast numbers are caught in the Masonic net, terrified into silence by the strange oaths they have taken, and debauched in their moral convictions by the perverting and unholy influences of the lodge, but a small percentage continue as Masons, and the increase of the order is not at all commensurate with the numbers who initiate. What would be thought of a church in a growing community that dismissed and suspended more persons than it had admitted to membership, and out of 1,353 baptisms (initiates) could show a net gain of but 110? Yet such is the state of Masonry in the Peninsular State, while in Pennsylvania it is not better, and in Utah it is worse. We know of no better argument to prove the hollowness of Masonry than a careful study of Masonic statistics.

THE PRESS AND THE SECRET CONSPIRACIES.

The New York Tribune says: "According to Grand Master Powderly, there are about 300,000 Knights of Labor in the whole country. According to the census, there were 17,000,000 wage-earners in 1880, and there probably are now 19,000,000. Why should less than two men in one hundred, of all the workers in the country, claim the right to exclude from employment wherever they please ninety-eight in one hundred? Ought anybody to grant to the two that power to wrong the ninety-eight?"

Says the Kansas City Journal: "We believe that the recognition of the right or power of any organization outside of the law to regulate the affairs of this country by a secret and despotic agency would sound the death-knell of this Republic and pave the way for anarchy and then despotism."

"There has been the past week, and is still going on as we write, a strike of the conductors, drivers, and other employes of the Third Avenue horse railroad of this city. There were certain minor causes of complaint alleged about which an agreement was not difficult; but the chief demand made, on which all negotiations between the officers and the employes of the road hung, and which the officers peremptorily refused to grant and the employes to yield, was the following:

New York, April 12, 1886.

To the President of the Third Avenue Railroad Company and Board of Directors:

Gentlemen:—We, John White, James Regan and Joe Bannister, a committee duly appointed by Empire Protective Association, make the following demand—that the following conductors and drivers, namely: Car No. 2, Frank Bradley, driver; Car No. 7, Charles Harrington, driver; Car No. 8, John Reid, driver; Car No. 12, Michael Kelly, driver; Car No. 39, Wm. Griffin, driver; Car. No. 5, Wm. Bardwell, conductor, and Car No. 1, Charles James, conductor, be discharged from the service of the company for the following reasons: The five drivers for being antagonistic and insulting, and trying to break up the Knights of Labor in general; and they further say that the Knights of Labor are not fit to associate with them. William Bardwell for saying that he would take out a car in case of a strike and the road was tied up. Charles James for giving away the secrets of the association to parties outside of the organization.

James Regan,
John L. White,
Jos. Bannister, } Com.

The response of the company was the only one that could be given to such a demand:

"The President read a demand from the Empire Protective Association, dated April 12th inst., demanding that certain drivers and conductors of this company be discharged, although they had always performed their duty to the company. Wherefore it was

"Resolved, That said demand be refused, and that the president be requested to inform the committee of said association that this board does not intend to allow any outside interference in the management of this company, committed to their charge."

To defend their demand, first the Third Avenue drivers struck, and on Monday those of other lines followed suit, and horse-car traffic ceased in this city.

Here we have the issue joined in its worst and most tyrannous form. We see here a combination of workingmen, not to maintain their own rights and interests—not to maintain or increase their own wages, but to injure their fellow-workmen—to throw them out of honest employment and to reduce their families to starvation. And for what? For exercising the right of free thought and free speech; for the heinous offense of venturing to dislike what they regard as the extravagance and tyranny of the society of the Knights of Labor. They do not like it, and they say so boldly; they say it with emphasis. They refuse to join the Knights of Labor, and would, if they could, break up the organization.

Now, the Christian church is an organization quite as old and as venerable as the Knights of Labor. Suppose the church in New York, Catholic or Protestant, should say, "No man shall work as a horse-car driver who is not a member of the church; no unbeliever, no scoffer, no infidel is fit to work with us; the man who insults the church shall earn no wages, and his family shall starve;" what a howl of just indignation would arise from every honest heart in the land! We should all say, "The church is no friend, it is the enemy of the workingman and of humanity; it has forfeited its claims to our respect, and it must go." Yet here is this new, untried organization, just feeling its way to its work, pretending to be the friend of the workingman, and here in New York throwing its hundreds of workmen out of employment and deranging the comfort of the community for the purpose of crushing the freedom of the workingman, and robbing free men of employment and livelihood. Such conduct is not only tyrannous; it is contemptible beyond expression. It has not learned the alphabet of our American declaration of equal rights. It might well be the outgrowth of centuries of oppression of kings and emperors.—Independent.

STRIKES BY AUTHORITY OF THE GRANDS.

Citizens of the United States:

A few short years ago our country became involved in a dreadful civil war through the gross indifference of the statesmen, if then worthy of the name, and the blindness of our people to the just claims of those who are now our colored fellow citizens and as worthy of that right as thousands of the Europeans who were welcomed to our shores and flattered by our parties before they understood our politics. A similar state of things exists to-day throughout the whole land. Just before the war the colored line was easily drawn, and the friends of the colored race in the North were hunted as enemies of the peace of the country instead of being treated as its best friends and most faithful counselors. The Cynosure editor, and many like him, were the true patriots of that time, but were sometimes hunted, and some indeed became the victims of hate and prejudice which plunged our country into the awful war. Citizens, give us your ear a moment in the present hour. We have been for years sounding the alarm which the character of the oath-bound secret orders ought to cause, and contended that some public enactments of civil law should be framed to give our executive power to crush them as foes to our government, as they verily are to our Christianity, but our voice has hitherto been like that of one crying in the wilderness, forest or prairie—so few gave heed to it and so scorned has it been. Slavery overdid itself when it sought to compel the North to be its constables, and to-day, the secret orders, like a cyclone, have so suddenly been revealed in their true character that our people stand aghast at their power to enforce their secret manifestoes against the commercial and industrial men and interests which the star chambers of lodgery have condemned, who could have foretold, with any probability of being believed, that the "strikers" mere tools of lodgery, could have paralyzed so suddenly the railways of our land and the trade of our principal cities, stopped the machinery of manufacturers and of commerce, and compelled our mayors, sheriffs, senators and governors to become humble suppliants to them for information, instruction and compassion! Has law already ceased to control? Are we already indeed at the mercy of its lodge superiors? Is anarchy already triumphant, and are we who have been so complacently looking abroad at oppression in foreign lands, and contributing money to support secret orders there, are we waking up to find in our whole framework of society such secret orders with trained armed bands which plot rebellion and profess to control government abroad, to be indeed our own veritable rulers? Think how our people regarded the shots which heralded our war! "Pooh, pooh, it will all be over in three months," said Seward, and the North agreed with him. The South knew better. They had been working in their secret chambers, and our President and senators and congressmen were alike deluded until the dynamite exploded near the Capitol and the thunder reverberated to the utmost extremities of our land and throughout the whole world.

Is there not a lesson here for us to-day? Is our plea against the secret orders to be still ignored? Are our citizens, not to say our Christian people, still to believe mere pretense instead of awful reality? Has not patience already ceased to be a virtue when the police sent to disperse a mob are outnumbered by armed men six to one and retreat? When such men as John V. Farwell implore the governor of this State personally (see city papers of 22d April) to interfere so far as to enable them to have their seasonable goods delivered, instead of car-loads of them being detained within ten miles of Chicago, and causing the loss of sales for the season, and thus preventing seasonable supplies, and causing untold loss to the whole country. Yes, and ere long the general government must interfere with soldiers, not merely to ensure delivery of bonded goods already detained on some cars, but probably to ensure the delivery even of the public mail, and crush the army of the league. As we write, the papers report that the railway employes at Toledo are ready as a body to stop the cars, etc., whenever so instructed from Chicago, and this without any local grievance at Toledo.

It would be sheer folly to shut our eyes to the impending danger of anarchy and lawless violence bursting out upon our country, and to the absolute necessity of the law and order to rally in support of the civil authority ordained of God as a terror to evil-doers and a praise to them who do well. Think of the fact that over 50,000 men are reported as under the control of the secret orders already drilled and armed, and in many places outnumbering the militia and police, many of whom are in fact also members of the secret orders!

Verily the clouds are dark and portentous!

REFORM WORK IN OHIO.

Loudonville, April 24, '86.

I am enjoying the hospitality of Rev. S. P. Long, a very promising young man, just graduated from the Capital University at Columbus. He is to be installed as pastor of Zion Lutheran church here next Sabbath. He has kindly arranged for me to speak to his people on next Tuesday evening, and the following evening to the Lutheran friends at McZena, a small place near by. Since my last letter I have visited the villages of Leonardsburg, Marengo, Pagetown, Fredericksburg and Wooster. At Leonardsburg there was so much sickness that it was not thought wise to hold meetings at present. I was assured, however, by Bro. Watters and others that a discussion of our subject would be very acceptable in the future. At Pagetown I had the pleasure of again taking our State president by the hand and counciling with reference to future work.

It is thought best to have our annual convention earlier next fall; the 15th of October is suggested. The place is not decided. We should be glad to receive invitations or suggestions from friends.

Bro. Smith invited me to speak to his people Sabbath morning. The day was cloudless, the attendance good, and, what is better, the Lord was with us. Bro Marcus Phillips, who resides at this place, is still active in our work, although years and a decline in health tell him that he is soon going home. He has been agent for the Cynosure for years.

Our meeting held at Marengo last Monday evening was, perhaps, as interesting as any that I have attended this season. I was informed by a friend that there were a number of secretists here, some of whom were quite combative in their disposition. I replied, "When I used to go hunting, I tried to go where game was the thickest." I soon found that my friend was right. "The hit birds commenced to flutter." After talking awhile, I gave an opportunity for questions and remarks. Several arose in different parts of the house and in an excited manner made some very rash statements. The usual goodman argument was advanced. One Mason asked if Masonry was not older than Christianity. I admitted that the principles of Masonry were as old as the devil, but that Masonry, as an organization, was somewhat younger. The Mason asking the question replied, with a sort of an ungodly laugh, "That's all you know about it." The excitement was getting high, when Bro. Smith took the floor and in a clear, logical way replied to many questions asked. Our discussion lasted until 11 o'clock. Once the Masons got up, took their hats and walked out of the hall; but, finding the people were too much interested to follow and thus break up the meeting, they returned and took back seats. Perhaps Bro. Smith will write of the results of this meeting. Bro. Mathews said, when a big Mason got up and pulled off his coat, ready for a fight, at one of his lectures, "That's the way they all do when they get under conviction." I think a good many are under conviction. May God speed their conversion!

The convention at Wooster was, as I had expected, a success. The addresses were profound and logical. No Christian admitting the premises could deny the conclusions. I hope soon to find time to write a general outline for the Cynosure, but have not the time nor space this morning. A horse and buggy is waiting at the door to take me to Haysville, so I must stop for this time.

NEW HAMPSHIRE MISSION WORK.

Since my last report, I have worked in Amoskeag, Dunbarton, Hopkinton, Henniker Warner and Webster. I found many poor people who cannot attend church, and who do not see a minister of the Gospel from one year's end to another. One praying woman had been sick four months, and no minister had called to pray for her and sympathize with her. Another aged lady, a church member for over forty years, had not seen a minister for a long time. Of course these Christians did not live near any minister of the Gospel. There are many localities which are not considered within the limits of any parish, and hundreds of families that live for years without pastoral call. As long as Elder Buxton lived such a thing could not be said of any family in the town of Webster. The gratitude of these neglected families to the faithful ministers who have visited them for religious conversation and prayer can hardly be expressed in words. Why do not these people go to church? Distance, age, infirmities, poverty and sometimes pride, stand in the way. When a thoughtless solicitor twits a man of "stealing his preaching," Satan will use it for a text for a hundred years to keep poor people from venturing to hear the Gospel. Owning and renting pews is also a hindrance. Proof abounds in almost every town that just in proportion as the lodge room is thronged, the prayer room is deserted. We rejoice to record that in most cases pastors are well aware of this, and exert a quiet influence to keep their members out of the secret lodges. It is, however, deplorable that religious papers, standards and preachers do not with unanimity and emphasis warn all Christian people of the sinfulness of all secret societies. During the month I received 138 subscribers for the Christian Witness and a few for other papers. I conversed and prayed with hundreds of families and distributed thousands of religious tracts. I take this opportunity to express my gratitude to all who so kindly ministered to my temporal wants. May the Lord reward them. The Lord's tender care was over me every hour.

THE CHRISTIAN SCRIPTURES AND MASONRY.

Dear Cynosure:—Leaving Marion, I went to Jonesburgh, Grant county, Ind. The way not opening for me to lecture here, I passed around the town distributing tracts. I continued this work until I went to the depot to take the train for Fairmount. While standing on the platform, a man came up hurriedly from the business part of the village and inquired if I had any more copies of the tract that said that Blue Lodge Masonry has nothing to do with the Bible. "I know," said he, "that that is not true. I am a Master Mason, though I don't meet with them now, and I know by experience that Blue Lodge Masonry does have something to do with the Bible." I replied: "I will not affirm that Blue Lodge Masonry has nothing to do with the Bible. But I will affirm, on the authority of one of your Grand Lodges, that Blue Lodge Masonry is not founded upon the Bible. If it was it would not be Masonry; it would be something else. I do, however, admit that the Bible, in Christian countries, is regarded as an essential part of the furniture of every Blue Lodge; that is, it is placed upon the altar with the compasses and square, and is spoken of as one of the three great lights in Masonry, and that it is borne in public processions by the oldest member of the lodge, be he a saloon-keeper or a deacon. But, mark! it is only in Christian countries that the Bible is regarded as an indispensable part of the furniture of every Blue Lodge. When Blue Lodge Masonry crosses the boundary line of a Christian country and goes into a Mohammedan country, she casts off the Bible of God, and only takes the square and compasses with her, and goes awhoring after the Mohammedan religion—for see! she has placed the Koran on the altar with the square and compasses, and the Koran has become one of the three great lights in Masonry now. And should you tarry in that Mohammedan country until the Blue Lodge Masons turn out in solemn procession, you will see, not the Christian Scriptures, but the Koran in the arms of that old Mason."

The train came, and I could not complete my argument with the Mason who had come to interview me. But, when seated in the car, a fine-appearing gentleman and lady, who had been standing on the platform and who entered with me into the car, desired to hear me further touching this matter. I gave him the highest Masonic authority for the statements I had made, and showed, further, that any book that

MEMPHIS CHURCHES AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

Memphis April 14, 1886.

Editor Cynosure:—Yours found me in bed suffering with a chill followed by an intermittent fever, which, thanks to God, was of short duration. I last evening submitted my statement to the Committee of White Baptist, to whom the excluded lodgeites have appealed for some kind of redress. I am no ways alarmed but, by God's grace, I mean to fight it out, cost what it may. I have thrown my life, my soul, my all at the foot of the cross of Christ in this struggle. I am not afraid, neither dismayed, for the God of glory has never lost a battle, and this is not mine but his. I am his servant willing and ready to be used, and I rejoice greatly that I am found worthy. Our last church business meeting was enjoyable; not a single one who claimed allegiance to a secular organization is now in our body. We have wiped out the last one of them. I felt like saying, "now are ye clean," but a something whispered, "not yet." I have tried to be a soldier of the cross of Christ for 24 years and never have enjoyed so much of the sweetness of his grace as has been mine during this trying conflict. One brother wrote me from Connecticut, saying: "Bro. Countee, we are one body in Christ; when one member suffers, all suffer with it," and I feel more and more that it is the prayers of the people of God as well as their liberal gifts that have been instrumental in keeping soul and body united, for never until this battle began did I know what it was to be without bread. I am ready, if it please the Father, to go on over the same warfare. Many say I ought not to have urged the church to sever itself from the society folks. I answer them by saying that Christ's church ought not to be a divided body, and it is the duty of every faithful pastor to urge his people to carry out line upon line, and precept upon precept, God's word as he understands it. We are admonished to give no place to the evil one, and my experience has taught me that in church matters there should be no looseness, but a tightening up, all along the line. As long as the worldings of secret societies and secular organizations remained in the church they kept up a constant broil. And as Moses called without the camp of Israel for those on the Lord's side to come unto him, so we within the camp of God's redeemed Israel deem it our duty to put all out who are not on the Lord's side. It would indeed be very unprofitable to retain a quarrel in the church, and Jesus says plainly that two cannot walk together except they agree. We must be positively for God, else we are positively against him. I am now, thank God, enjoying some respite from the continued threats of the Baallites. My congregation is commencing to increase, and many of our enemies are getting a little friendly. I have learned by a blessed experience that the friendship of this world is enmity to God, and I am afraid that the same would produce more bullets and mobocracy. As I have said on a former occasion I repeat now: that the salvation of our people from the debasing and degrading influence of the lodge is a small matter, if our ministers in Memphis would only preach from their pulpit one sermon each, uncovering the nonsense and foolery of the lodges: and would follow up the impressions such sermons would produce, in less than six months every one of them would be bankrupt. Our people leave them readily when they see the light. We had thirty come out of a secular society in one night and the thing is almost dead. It had for president, vice-president, secretary, and in fact every officer in it was members of the lodge, the president a deacon of our church: but he left as did also the treasurer. I am satisfied now, let come what will we have a glorious victory. I wish some of your readers could step in to one of our meetings, and see our old gray headed fathers and mothers whose faces, many of them bear the impress of the cruel overseer of by-gone days; yes, see them as they rejoice in the Lord, and say, now we never believed they were right for Christians. Many were led into them on account of the many epidemics that visit our city, expecting them to be a kind of mutual help, which might have been the case some years ago, but not now in this age of knavery. Then they had no teachers. They came out of slavery, knew nothing about God biblically, and the most any of them had heard was, "Servants, obey your masters." They had good old men as preachers and exhorters, who were ordained to the ministry: they taught practical godliness, but gave away their convictions before what they believed to be educated godly men. The sequel your readers have already learned. Our matter is yet in the hands of the White Baptist pastors, and will be looked into Friday night. The lodgeites will carry the matter to the courts, but that will avail them very little if any good. I should have forwarded this earlier, but all of us have had a slight touch of malaria, that is wife and one of my children. My mother who is over 60, is now failing rapidly. The constant strain on her nervous system is breaking her down. She is now in bed. We sincerely ask the prayers of all. I will write you again soon, nothing preventing, after Friday night's meeting.

Yours for Christ and the right,

R. N. COUNTEE.

THE U. B. CHURCH AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

ANITA, Iowa, April 16, 1886.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been watching the controversy going on in United Brethren church for some time, and am free to say that I am astonished to think that the Brethren have not courage enough to cast out the serpent!

He has been worming himself into the church for some time, for the purpose of beguiling the children; the same as he did in the Garden of Eden to beguile the woman, which brought death upon all men. Now I am disgusted at the tirade of words used by those who would help out the lodge side of the question, or favor the commission.

The church was good enough in its primitive form, and can never be made any better by secrecy, which conflicts with the word of God at every step. 1490 years before Christ, the Almighty gave to Moses a Scripture to record; forbidding the taking of a hidden oath. See 5th chapter of Leviticus, 4th and 5th, verses making it a sin to take a hidden oath; which all secret societies take in some form, which is contrary to law, both human and divine; and if a man has taken such an oath the Word says he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing.

I left the M. E. church several years ago and joined the United Brethren, because I could not conscientiously hear a preacher that had bowed the knee to Baal in the lodge, and would not confess that he had sinned in that thing. The Word of God makes it a sin to take a hidden oath. And the majority of the M. E. preachers that we got was Freemasons, and to become a Mason they had to take a hidden oath. I have been there; I have seen it done.

PITH AND POINT.

COMMENDATORY.

I esteem your paper the richest and spiciest that comes to my table. There is often much in it that I would like to save for future use and reference, but I am so impressed with a sense of the possible good the circulation of it may do that I get lists of persons, generally members of the lodge, from my friends, and as soon as I read the news, put a one cent wrapper on them and send them along to those addresses. Thus for an extra half-dollar, or a little more, I double, so far as I can, the number of persons whom it reaches with its influence. Allow me to suggest that in scarcely any other way could the readers of the Cynosure do more good with an extra half-dollar than in this. I have gone over my list now and want more names. Yours, T. J. ALLEN.

THE TOBACCO HABIT.

A good brother sends us an article too long for insertion, in which he greatly deprecates the use of tobacco by ministers of the Gospel, and deplores the influence of their example on the young. He suggests (1.) That ministers and all religious teachers preach against its use, showing its wasteful, filthy and poisonous nature (2.) That the non-use of tobacco be made a condition of acceptance by all conferences and other ministerial bodies. (3.) That a violation of a promise not to use tobacco be regarded in the same light as the willful violation of any other promise. And lastly, that persistent tobacco users in the church be labored with, and if no good reason can be given for their continuance of the practice, they be subjected to discipline. We think these suggestions appropriate, and are glad that the great majority of ministers do not indulge in this pernicious practice, while others, like Revs. Jones and Small, are giving it up for conscience sake. May the pernicious habit soon cease out of the earth.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON VI, May 9, 1886.—Sowing and reaping.—John 4: 27-42.

GOLDEN TEXT.—One soweth and another reapeth.—John 4: 37.

TIME.—December, A. D. 27. Immediately following the last lesson.

PLACE—Jacob's well, near Sychar, at the foot of Mt. Gerizim, in Samaria.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. A Lesson of faith, vs. 27-30. His disciples marvelled to find the Master talking with a Samaritan woman. Had they also known what Christ knew, that she was a woman of sinful life, it would have deepened their astonishment. The same feeling exists to day; we see it cropping out in the often repeated assertion that it "is no use trying to Christianize the Chinese" who come to our shores—an assertion disproved every day by the reports of Mission Sunday schools and foreign workers. The Samaritans were in their way as bigoted as the Jews. They held as tenaciously to the religious customs of their fathers, yet in this unpromising soil of only one hearer's heart the Great Sower sowed the seed that sprang up in a harvest of immortal souls. Is not here a lesson of faith for all Christian workers? The Sunday school teacher with one especially stupid or careless scholar, or the mother who finds one black sheep in her flock—one child less amiable by nature or less impressible to religious influence and teachings than the others, may take it to heart with all its wonderful encouragement. That very child or scholar may yet convert multitudes who shall rise up in the last great day as so many witnesses to that mother's or to that teacher's faithfulness.

2. The service of God the Christian's meat and drink, vs. 31-34. Perhaps our Saviour did not find the scorn and unbelief of priests and Pharisees so hard to bear as the manner in which those who should have understood him best constantly misinterpreted his words, giving the most earthly meanings to the deepest spiritual truths. But the apostles, wandering themselves in strange cities and lonely byways, in hunger and thirst and weariness, understood what the disciples failed to comprehend. It is just as much a mystery now to every soul that has not come into full union with Christ or complete sympathy with his work. A half-developed Christian can scarcely understand more than the worldling how the joy of working for Christ can outweigh all considerations of fame, wealth or plersure, and even render one forgetful of their bodily wants. The only way to understand it is to do his will—to taste this angels' food, and our appetite for it will grow like lower appetite—by what it feeds on.

3. The whitening harvest fields, vs. 35-42. This seems to have been one of those moments of especial joy in Christ's life, of which we catch occasional glimpses—one of those "brooks by the way" of which it was prophesied that he should drink to refresh his spirit wearied with the malice of persecution. We are taught here a lesson to sow in hope, in glad expectation of large results, for it is only in such a condition of mind that our best efforts can be put forth. A preacher who expects no revivals will not be likely to have any. So of the Sunday-school teacher who never expects conversions in his class. And in work for temperance or in anti-secret labors the same rule holds good. We need in our warfare against all evils the faith and courage of that sturdy old Abolitionist who, when taunted with the hopelessness of ever abolishing slavery, said: "Gentlemen, slavery has got to go down, and I expect to live to see it put down." Such a spirit of faith and hope is the spirit that works miracles."

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What are the wages received by the reapers in God's harvest field? Dan. 12: 13. Why is hope such an important factor in Christian work? Ps. 146. 5; 1 John 3: 3; 1 Cor. 9:10.

From Pelonbet's Notes.

"Marvelled that he talked with the woman." Rather, was talking with a woman, contrary to the precepts of the Rabbis. "Let no one talk with a woman on the street, no, not with his own wife." The woman's being a Samaritan would increase their astonishment.—Cambridge Bible.

"Yet no man said, What seekest thou?" Something in his look restrained them. They felt sure that something strange had taken place.

"The woman left her waterpot." Same word for "waterpot" or jar as in the miracle of Cana, and used nowhere else —Cambridge Bible.

"And went her way into the city," a half or three-fourths of a mile away.

"And saith to the men," whom she would naturally meet on the roads and in the streets.

"Come, see." She invites them to find out for themselves the good she has found, and in order to persuade them she relates her own experience.

"A man which told me all things that ever I did." How natural is this exaggeration! In her excitement she states not what he had really told, but what, by what he did tell her, she was convinced he could have told her.—Cambridge Bible.

"In the meanwhile." Between the departure of the woman and the arrival of her fellow-townsmen.

"His disciples," who had brought food from the city (vers. 8, 27), prayed him, entreated him.

"Master." Better, Rabbi. as in Rev. Ver.

"Master, eat." It was now evening, and many hours had passed since they had partaken of food. He had become wearied in his journey (ver. 6), and was in need of food when he arrived at the well.

"I have meat to eat that ye know not of." The usual idea is that his fulfilling his work, the earnestness of doing good, and the prospect of a spiritual harvest among this despised people, so refreshed and strengthened him that it did away with his desire for food for the time.

"Hath any man brought him ought to eat?" Another instance of dullness of spiritual understanding. It was one of the most difficult of all works for Christ to make men see the spiritual meaning of things, and recognize the superiority of spiritual things.

"My meat is to do the will," etc. Literally, my food is that I may do the will of him that sent me, and thus finish his work. It is Christ's aim and purpose that is his food. (1) The highest satisfaction of the soul is in doing God's will. Compared to this, bodily food is of small importance, necessary as it is. (2) Doing God's will is the means through which the soul is fed and grows strong.

"Lift up you eyes, and look on the fields," etc. The fact to which these words refer can, therefore, be no other than that mentioned above—the arrival of the people of Sychar.—Godet.

"That both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together." Another class has also a reward and equal joy in the harvest with the reapers, namely, the sowers; those who sowed in tears, and never saw even the springing of the seed they planted.

"I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labor." The words probably point to the successful labors of the apostles during the previous summer and autumn in Judea.

"Other men labored," etc. The reference, as in the case of the sower, is to all who had in any manner, prepared the way for Christ—to the prophets and John the Baptist; and also to Jesus himself, whose whole mission, and work, and sacrifice on the cross, made the successful labors of the apostles possible.

"And he abode there two days." To teach them the way of life, to strengthen their faith and lead more of them to become his disciples.

PRACTICAL.

1. We can overcome the worldly and temporal by deep interest in the spiritual. "The woman in her zeal forgot her occupation, as Jesus in his had forgotten his thirst."—Tholuck.

2. She convinces others by relating her own experience. Experience is the unanswerable argument. The best we can do to help others must grow out of our own experiences.

3. The wonderful things the Lord does, the things beyond human power, the marvelous conversions, the victories of the Gospel, are the proof that Jesus is still living and working on the earth, and that his religion is from God.

4. Observe the method of the spread of Christianity in its earliest years. The new convert became a missionary, propagating its faith (compare Acts 8: 4; 9: 20). —Abbott.

5. Vers 31, 32. The spiritual food of the soul is far more important than bodily food.

6. Through Christian work for others our own souls are fed with bread from heaven.

7. Spiritual work in doing good for fellow-men often refreshes the body and renews its health and vigor.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1886.

OUR TREATY RELATIONS WITH CHINA.

July, 1868, what is called the Burlingame Treaty was concluded at Washington, D. C., and signed by the plenipotentiaries Wm. H. Seward, Anson Burlingame, Chi Hang and Chia-Hu.

This treaty contains articles additional to the former treaty of 1858. It was ratified by the Chinese Emperor 1869, and proclaimed in this country next year, 1870.

Art. I. protects American bottoms in Chinese waters from foreign crafts, etc.

Art. IV. secures reciprocal rights of conscience to both nations, in both.

Art. V. secures voluntary and forbids involuntary emigration to both nations, as "inalienable right of man."

Art. VI. contains this: "Chinese subjects, visiting or residing in the United States, shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities and exemptions in respect to travel or residence, as may then be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation."

It is singular that most or all of the newspaper articles hostile to the Chinamen in this country, and in favor of their expulsion, are as silent concerning the above as if no treaty existed between us, and the Chinese were utterly at our mercy. Late Pacific Coast writers, however, speak of a rising party of wealthy ranchmen and politicians in favor of the Chinamen.

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH THE STRIKERS?

Not hunger. In parts of Italy and in whole provinces in China, men, women and children are continually starving to death. Not so here. If one whole family in East St. Louis had been found dead by starvation, the labor papers would have put on mourning, and Powderly, Irons, and hosts of lesser orators would have gone without cigars and tobacco in their mouths while delivering their funeral orations.

Not nakedness. Two hundred and fifty millions of our race are practically naked, and seven hundred millions wear breech-cloths. If of the fifty-five millions in the United States two or three dozen could be found without clothes on their bodies, thousands of dollars would not buy the printer's ink which would depict their nakedness, and car-loads of decent second-hand clothing would be piled up before them, and sewing societies would send missionaries to cover them.

What is the matter with the strikers? In this country they do not yet raise the cry of "Bread or blood!" Three hundred thousand "Knights" of Labor strike, and give two reasons for it—one that Mr. Hall has been improperly discharged by his employers; and second and chiefly, "We demand recognition!" Recognition by what and for what? Recognition by United States and State officers, elected by "the laboring masses" to administer government and enforce the laws. There is but one State in the thirty-eight where property votes. The masses, black and white, do the voting. These officers are to "recognize," treat on equal terms with the head-men of secret orders, chosen in secret meetings, whose word is a secret rescript or ukase, which the masses must obey without reason or examination. Their very proclamations, as Mr. Powderly's, would have remained secret from the public had not an enterprising press stolen them. Our United States and State governments are to "recognize," treat on equal terms with these imperia in imperio—invisible governments within government; that is to say, must abdicate! For, recognizing another supreme power is abdicating. The invisible constabularies, without baton, star or uniform, board freight trains, order locomotives back to round-houses; command firms and companies to dismiss or employ men—in short, seize property for their purposes without giving receipts for it, and impress men without a declaration of war. And there are not wanting men, otherwise sane and not deficient in intelligence, who look on and see our republican government superseded and set aside, and confine their labors to exacerbating the poor against the rich.

Thoughtful, Christian men see in these strikes the outer gyrations of the final whirlpool. We read (Rev. 12) of "that old serpent, called the devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world." And every one of these secret orders contains initiations, oaths, rites and ceremonies in and by which that devil is worshiped. But he "deceiveth" not his worshipers only, but "the whole world." True, "the love of money is the root of all evil." These secret priestisms are practiced for the love of money, but more for hatred of Christ. And good men are deceived by their sorceries.

APING GOD.

Adam Clark, the first learned Methodist commentator, found philological proof that the creature who tempted Eve was originally a monkey, afterwards made to crawl as we see serpents. Moses Stuart at Andover used to reply, when Clark's learning was quoted by any of us: "What is the use, gentlemen, of citing me to that monkey commentator?"

Dr. Clark had his whims, but they were pious whims. In the morals of the Bible, especially on slavery, he was better than Stuart, less swayed by popularity.

The devil certainly apes God. To meet and head off Moses and Aaron he had ready magicians to turn rods to snakes. In the age of prophets he had 850 to 1. In the time of Christ he had twenty-four false Messiahs in the field. After Pentecost, and ever since, he has turned democrat and affected the masses. The Phillipian girl was not the only demoniac who has taken stock in religions revivals, and aped the Holy Spirit.

Now, the masses are come to the front, and Satan, who has toadied to monarchs from Egypt down, is a fierce labor evangelist. He makes no effort to restore railroad men the Sabbath, of which they are now universally robbed, to spend with their families; but he clamors for higher wages and more hours to spend it in gossip and the saloons. My preceptor, while a youth at Andover, used to work a large garden and pay $1.50 per week for his board. At Wheaton College half the labor which he did now pays the students whole board. I have taught school for $8.50 per month, and full girls' wages at that time at housework was one dollar a week. The labor-writers now say: "Men who work for wages (at one to three dollars a day) are slaves!" There are two students at Wheaton College, whose parents died and left them without means, yet they are paying their way to a liberal education. There were five of them left orphans. One of the brothers in Australia lately sent home thirty dollars for his parents' tombstone, and the other two are in England doing well. These are five boys, left without means on an Illinois prairie, to become the victims of accursed capitalists and the "slaves" of modern civilization. Surely the devil is a monkey, and he has aped God effectively down through the ages. And now he has turned monkey reformer, and he will save the masses from liquor by secret oaths and worships, and "Sons of Temperance," "Good Templars," and bastard "Knights," will soon "elevate the masses," so as to leave Moody, Sam Jones and all other evangelists nowhere. Surely Adam Clark had some sense as well as much learning.

COMPOUNDING FELONY.

The strike on the Lake Shore railroad has, it is said, terminated in a compromise. The non-union men are to be dismissed within sixty days. A similar strike on the B. & O. road was terminated a few days ago by the one non-union employe's consenting to leave his place. We are not surprised that merchants who had perishable goods that could not be moved, and that others who were suffering great loss in their spring trade by failure to receive and fill their orders, should have urged on the railroad management the simplest and shortest adjustment. But we are surprised that the authorities, municipal and State, should consent to compounding with felony. A company of men who had no other grievance than the employment by a railroad company of a few laborers who did not belong to their secret organization, take violent possession of a great railroad terminus, forcibly prevent perishable freight from being moved, disable engines, reverse switches, and in face of the officers of the law and the admonitions of the Governor of the State, successfully resist, for nearly a week, the laws of the land, and finally compel the power of the government to bend to the dictation of an irresponsible secret despotism. Nor does this case stand alone. It is only one of a large number and long series in which a self constituted tribunal has seized and destroyed property, stopped the great public highways, trampled on personal rights, involved alike cities, States and the nation in vast expenses, and in numerous instances taken the lives of the law-abiding citizens and those in official authority. The question rises above all considerations of personal and private interest. It is not a matter of wages or hours of labor or of any local or general grievance. It is simply a question whether the laws shall be obeyed, or whether a self-constituted despotism can set them aside and compel a concession to their illegal and violent demands.

We are surprised at the vacilating, timid and unmanly course of our Governor. When strife was imminent at East Louis he hesitated to call out a military force to resist the law-breakers, until the streets were reddened with the blood of the innocent, and then he comes, after due warning, to Chicago, to patch up a truce with sworn conspirators. We heartily indorse the faithful criticism of the Chicago Times of the 22d:

"Every merchant and business man; every respectable citizen engaged in any honorable industry; every friend to the good order and peace of society; in a word, every honest and well-behaved citizen must be oppressed with a sense of shame, humiliation and disgust by the imbecile conduct of the elderly person called Governor of Illinois, in relation to the turbulent mob that has temporarily overset the law and put civil government at defiance on the southern border of this city."

He visited and addressed the mob, and advised obedience to law, but his admonitions were treated with jeers, and the leader said "the company brought him here to intimidate us, but it was a—farce."

"He has failed miserably in the moment of society's greatest need. He has forfeited all claim to public confidence, by his imbecility or by his sympathy with lawless mob rule."

We do not want blood. Far be it from us to wrong or fail to sympathize with the humblest of the oppressed. But the law must be obeyed or this great city is at the mercy of the mob. We are not alarmists, but we have reason to believe that armed and trained bands of desperate men are secretly waiting for an uprising to riot in a saturnalia of crime. The purest mercy is in the sternest and bravest repression of all violations of law. Better a thousand times that, if need be, the interests of merchants should be sacrificed, and that all commerce should be temporarily suspended, rather than that felony should be compounded and the germs planted that shall, ere long, bear the fruit of anarchy and ruin.

Above all we need to go to the bottom of the difficulty. It will do us no good to cry peace, peace, when there is no peace, nor to heal the hurt of the body politic slightly. The real trouble is not in the oppression of labor nor in the fact of that labor is organized, but in the nature and principles of these organizations. All secret combinations are hidden from public inspection and criticism, and are always liable to be used for conspiracies against the uninitiated. That these secret labor unions are so used is evident from the universal and persistent demand that non-union men shall be excluded from employment, which is a demand that the interests of 19,000,000 of wage workers shall be set at nought at the dictation of half a million. Next to this is the principle of absolute subordination. When an officer of a secret tribunal has only to "order" half a million of men to throw down their tools, to block the wheels of commerce, and hold all the interests of society in abeyance, it becomes not simply an imperium in imperio, but a despotism more relentless and terrible than that of the czar or the sultan. Labor unions may not only be permitted but encouraged. Secret organizations, based on the subordination of all to a central dictation, must be suppressed or they will be our national ruin.

DIRECTORS' MEETING.

The N. C. A. Board of Directors will meet on Saturday, May 1 aprox., at 10 o'clock A. M., at No. 221 W. Madison street, Chicago, for the transaction of important business. A full meeting is desired.

J. TRAVIS, Chairman.

An able article on the U. B. Constitution by Hon. Halleck Floyd is unavoidably left over.

Though it is denied that in the settlement of the Lake Shore railroad strike there was any concessions to law-breakers, the fact that the prosecutions which had been commenced were withdrawn makes it evident.

The High Way of Holiness, Chambersburg, Penn., Rev. B. G. Huber editor, appears in new form as a neatly printed folio, price 50 cents. We have read the High Way with interest and personally know its editor to be sound on all questions of Christian reform.

We have devoted much space in this issue to the consideration and doings of the secret labor organization. We are impressed with the conviction that these terrible developments come in the Providence of God to teach us the danger of tolerating secret combinations organized on military principles. We do not, and have not, opposed the organization of laborers, but the two principles of secrecy and absolute subordination when incorporated into civic societies make them practical conspiracies and a menace to free institutions. We believe that a wise Providence is plainly showing us the folly and danger of their toleration.

The vote on local option in Virginia has been generally favorable to the cause of temperance, and shows that the people of the Old Commonwealth are not behind those of its sister States of the South. The results of the spring elections generally in the East, West and South are most encouraging to the friends of temperance. The hand of a Divine destiny has written on the wall that the traffic in intoxicating drinks must be numbered with the crimes that have become too terrible for the world to endure.

"They have filled the land with violence and have returned to provoke me to anger." This is the Divine testimony in reference to the secret organizations in ancient Israel as recorded in Ezekiel 8: 17. This is not less true to-day. Soldiers at E. St. Louis and other points protect our great highways. When such protection is withdrawn, violence and crime are rampant. All business is suspended at the dictation of a secret conspiracy or an irresponsible mob. Menace and violence are visited on all who will not submit to the dictation of these organizations which, in the name of labor, are destroying the rights of both laborers and employers. Many persons have been killed, more injured, and life and property are everywhere uncertain. How long shall this state of things go on? Is there no other way to right the wrongs of laborers? Is our choice but between the rule of monopolists and the reign of secret despotisms? Surely there is a more excellent way.

The man who could not mend his leaking roof when it rained, and who thought when it was dry it needed no mending, had evidently learned his lessons of practical economy from the Chicago Tribune. Commenting on the late election in Rhode Island, in which a more than four-fifths majority was given for the prohibition amendment of the constitution, it gravely informs us that, "notwithstanding this, liquor-selling will go on all the same in the considerable cities of Rhode Island—in Providence and in Newport, for instance. The circumstances of the case illustrate the absurdity of prohibitory amendments and enactments. In a community where a majority are in favor of liquor-selling, liquor will be sold; where the people are opposed to liquor-selling, there is no necessity for constitutional amendments." People have been wont to think that the secret of the leaky roof was that the owner was lazy; and they will be quite likely to conclude that the Tribune has no desire to see the liquor traffic interfered with.

VACATION RAMBLES.

Omaha, April 21.

Dear Cynosure Readers:—For almost the first time in nearly sixteen years I address you as a correspondent. In August, 1870, the office work of the paper came into my hands without my seeking, and from that time to the April 15th number, from No. 50 to 833, 783 issues, the labor of getting out each number was allotted to me, and the Lord graciously sustained my strength during these years. Of what has been accomplished, and by the monthly State Americans also, there is nothing to boast of human agency, but only in the work which God has by this means given you to do. A vacation to secure a change from office work and rest from long and exacting labors, and to study some questions relating to our reform in San Francisco and Utah, have led me to say good-bye to office companions for a few weeks, who will, meanwhile, have the pleasure of Bro. Hinman's excellent company and assistance.

Sabbath amid the scenes of childhood at the home of my aged parents revived a thousand memories. The churches in old Wethersfield, Congregational and Methodist, are closed, and their members have been more or less absorbed in the churches of the growing town of Kewanee, a mile distant. The first-named was an Illinois pioneer. About 1835, when Chicago was struggling through the mud which she has long since hidden beneath her palaces, a religious colony from old Wethersfield, Connecticut, settled on this beautiful prairie and laid out a town with wide streets and generous lots, to which they gave the name of their Eastern home. They were a sturdy race. It is the tradition that will always make the Wethersfield red onion famous, as well as its intrinsic qualities, that when the good people of that New England town were building a new meeting-house, and seemed not able to finish, the noble woman resolved to take up the burden, and actually raised onions and finished the church. We can imagine that they were ever after able to endure their doctrine, sound and strong. Their thrift and independence was perpetuated in the new colony, and many are the stories of hardship bravely endured by the Hubbards, Howards, Kents, Blishes and others of these pioneers. Mr. Goodrich, one of the first missionaries to the Sandwich Islands, lived on a farm near, and was for years one of the most revered of the worshipers in the old church. Rev. Joseph Vail, an early missionary among the Indians, also had his house here, and continued till his death to preach to the destitute about in the school-houses and country churches. The colony received a great impetus with the coming, in 1850, of Deacon Selah Loomis with his wife, children and grandchildren, of whom the writer was one. Many of these old Wethersfield people yet live to worship God below, and appeared with their children in his house last Sabbath. They have been lately cheered with a gracious visit of the Spirit, and count some score additions to the church. Among these are a few who have been prominent in another church which cultivates the Masonic worship, and while no question of the double and contradictory membership was raised, there are reasons to hope that they have truly accepted Christ, and renounced allegiance to his rival. The full congregation of worshipers was a beautiful sight, but it was marred by a notice of an "Easter egg party." This popular pandering to a heathen superstition, and baptizing it into Christianity by association with the life of our Saviour, must ever tend to drag the church into a fruitless, unspiritual life.

Along the great Burlington route through Illinois the business of the season showed everywhere the effect of prolonged storms, and farmers were hurrying to retrieve time lost. It is interesting to note how modern machinery more than doubles the effect of human labor, and prepares the way for shorter days for hard work and more time for intelligent and Christian home life, which cannot be neglected with impunity.

LIFE, LIFE, ETERNAL LIFE.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

Nothing is like life. In its lowest forms it is awfully grand; in its highest it is superlatively so. No one, however big a fool he may chance to be, pretends to be able either to give or to restore it. A dead insect or plant, who can make alive? The more of life the better, and the higher its grade and range the better. Plant life is a grand mystery; animal life is grander and more mysterious. Spiritual life is incomprehensibly glorious, even in men and angels; but in God, the Spirit, O how glorious! In every age we have live issues, embodied in his men and live parties. Every age produces also dead men and dead parties. Living issues, in God-quickened consciences and wills, make living men and living parties, both in church and state. When a party drops out the living questions of its time, it not only deserves to die, but it "shall as surely die," as the body is dead when the spirit is gone. Political parties which grieve away the holy spirit of reform and aggressiveness on the sins of their age, become huge corpses, mere carcasses, and the greater they are the more and the sooner they need interment. If they will not take on moral reform-life and feel a horror of being buried alive, then they ought to hurry up and yield up the party ghost, and so avert the calamity. We need not advise suicide, for men and parties both commit that when they turn moral reforms out of doors, as the dominant parties are doing. The once noble reform party, which stood by her guns against the rebellion of the slave-holders had life; but when it turned its guns on its own friends who stood up with it through that "fight of affliction," and began banging away at temperance reformers for voting prohibition, it "fell from grace" and its biggest gun exploded upon its own head, and it is, to say the least, now in a critical state. God grant it may take on life, "put on strength," ere it die. We want it not to die, but live to redeem its back-slidden character. We will not vote with any party which abets "Rum, Romanism, and Rebellion," first, second, or third, nor yet with the party that puts in power "potentates," "all-puissants," "grand kings,"—ad infinitum, ad nauseum, of lodgery. The old carcass "ancient and honorable" (?) will stink if stirred (a sign it is dead); but stirred it must be till the public sense shall cause to bury it out of sight and memory, and throw its apron, with all its pagan toggery, in after it. That would be a Masonic funeral worth the cost. We would be happy to attend it and cast in our modicum of acacia. When the Republicans put in nomination for the chief seats men steeped in lodgery, like Logan, I cannot vote that ticket on that account, nor can I support whisky men for these places. I expect to support Americanism in the American ticket, if we form a ticket. If the American party, through fear, shrinks from living issues, then we shall eschew it, for the same reason we avoid death in the old dominant ones and go for life in new ones. Our theme is life—live issues, live parties, made up of live men and live principles, making a live cause for a live nation, and a live church of the "Living God," "lively stones" in the "spiritual house" and kingdom, which will "break in pieces all other kingdoms." It is the best possible policy for national parties to take on life, the theories of political "dead-beats" to the contrary notwithstanding. The men and the parties which walk boldly up and ardently embrace the spirit and the principles of reforms of this day will make the honorable records and the history to be read by the rising masses. Those who flee and hide in the rubbish of popular favor may some day turn up all petrified, like the once living (?) beings of long-buried cities—quite as well known, not as noted, however, as Lot's wife, who, though dead, was well preserved. But she died in a salter climate than ours.

The Wedding Ring.—We have just received a book with this title, comprising a series of sermons, by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, upon the relations between man and wife and all the family relations. These sermons have been extensively read and admired.

The following is the table of contents: The Choice of a Wife; The Choice of a Husband; Clandestine Marriage; Matrimonial Harmony or Discord; Marital Duties; Costume and Morals; Duties of Wives to Husbands; Hotels versus Homes; The Domestic Circle; Sisters and Brothers; The Children's Patrimony. "Motherhood;" Trials of Housekeeping.

It contains 204 pages, and will be sent to any address, in paper cover, for 25 cents, or in plain cloth for 50 cents, or in cloth with gilt edges for one dollar, by J. S. Oglivie & Co., the publishers, 31 Rose street, New York.

"The Fall of the Great Republic" is the title of a small volume issued by Roberts Brothers, Boston. It presents some facts and prophecies which ought to forewarn our people of the necessary result of some current events, if unheeded. We were blind to the prophecies of civil war. Slavery was permitted to go on, and on the very threshold of our awful bloodshed and expenditure of treasure our Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, saw no farther than a three-months' cloud, to end in sunshine-prosperity. Self-delusion has often been a national as well as a personal part in human history. This little volume may be passed unheeded by our people to-day; but if the evils and evil principles alluded to in it shall govern our country as they already do some parts of it, the fall of the great republic is as great a certainty as the fact of its great rise within a century from a few distracted colonies to its commanding position as a nation in the sight of the whole world. The principle of the secret orders is really one of the great causes of the great danger, for it is the foundation of all the organizations which claim obedience by their members over their duties as citizens or even as members of churches. This imperium in imperio—this law within our States which rules over the laws of our country—is the rock on which our ship will be wrecked as surely as any antagonism of principles can, by the supremacy of one, destroy the power of the other. History has no practical lesson for us if our people shall surrender our civil and political liberties to the dictates of the hydra-headed secret brotherhoods which tyrannize over them and over the deluded thousands of their members. Can we doubt that the threatening clouds in our land shall not gather into another awful cyclone of war and threaten the very existence of our form of government?—for assuredly the principle of the secret orders is despotic, if there is any despotism in the world. Of course no American can for a moment entertain the idea that his country can ever be invaded and conquered by European powers; but certainly the evils depicted in this small volume last year are more fully revealed this year, and the strikes have become so great as to obstruct the business of the whole country.

THE HOME.

THE TREE GOD PLANTS.

The wind that blows can never kill
The tree God plants;
It bloweth east, it bloweth west,
Oh, may its leaves have little rest,
But any wind that blows is best.
The tree God plants
Strikes deeper roots, grows higher still,
Spreads wider boughs, for God's good will
Meets all its wants.

Nor frost hath pow'r to blight
The tree God shields;
The buds are warm beneath soft snows,
And when spring comes it surely knows,
And every bud to blossom grows.
The tree God shields
Grows on apace, by day and night,
Full, sweet to taste and fair to sight,
Its fruit it yields.

There is no storm has power to blast
The tree God knows:
Nor lightning's flash nor beating rain,
Nor shattering flash nor hurricane;
When they are spent it doth remain.
The tree God knows
Through every tempest standeth fast,
Each, from its first day to its last,
Still fairer grows.

Oh, this world's still garden-place
A seed God sows—
One seed—it soon will grow,
And far and near all men will know
For universally 'ands he bids it blow.
A seed God sows,
And as it springs, by day and night;
Through life, through death, it groweth right,
Forever grows. —Sel.

GIDEON AND MIDIAN.

Gideon was an humble, laboring man, called of God for the deliverance of Israel. The son of an idolater, living in troublous times, he was addressed by the angel of the Lord as a "mighty man of valor," and summoned to win victory for the chosen people. The predatory hordes of Midian, who were scattered like grasshoppers over the plain, had invaded the land of Israel, and, like an army of locusts, swept everything before them. Midian was a mighty host; Gideon was a mighty man. But Gideon had the Lord on his side, and Midian was destined to defeat and overthrow.

Gideon's first work, after demolishing Baal's altar, was to gather an army; and having gathered them, the next thing to be done was to thin them out and send the greater part of them home. When this was accomplished the defeat of Midian was at hand. The work of Gideon consisted in marching 300 men, with trumpets and pitchers, around the Midianitish camp. When all things were ready they cried, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon!" broke their pitchers, and let their torches blaze out in the darkness. One crash of the fragile earthenware, and lines of light gleamed on the right hand and the left; while the triumphant shout of Gideon's band sounded the knell of Midian's hopes. The Midianites did their own killing. Gideon's army simply held the light for them. Midian was discomfited, and Gideon was triumphant.

This odd-style warfare was a very fair type of some conflicts that are still going on. The hosts of Midian still harry the land of Israel, plundering as they go. Sometimes God calls a Gideon to overthrow them. An obscure and humble man he may be, but the Lord knows him as "a mighty man of valor." His work is nothing to flash light through the darkness of Midian's camp, and cry, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." Of course this makes confusion. Midian falls and Gideon stands. Israel finds deliverance and Midian defeat. But it takes a mighty man of valor to raise the cry and hold up the light. Midian loves darkness, but Gideon's best weapon is a lamp. Midian has a multitude: Gideon has a few. But Gideon's few are more than a match for Midian's many. And like Gideon of old, so now, men through faith subdue kingdoms.—Armory.

THE CHURCH COURTING THE WORLD.

There is no more mistaken notion than that the religion of the Mosaic covenant was a ritualistic religion. It had a ritual, certainly, brimful of Messianic symbol, but its whole core was spiritual. The love of God and of one's neighbor was the inward principle which formed its heart. . . . To compare such a religion with the mere outward rites of Paganism and Romanism is to compare light with darkness. God is a holy God, and he will have his people holy; and if they substitute a ceremonial for holiness, his holy wrath will certainly fall upon them; and in this blow, not only those will fall who, like Eli's sons, commit gross wrongs, but those also who, like Eli, through indulgence or apathy, fail to rebuke and resist the evil.

Let us take this lesson to ourselves to-day. The church of God is to-day courting the world. Its members are trying to bring it down to the level of the ungodly. The ball, the theatre, nude and lewd art, social luxuries with all their loose moralties, are making inroads into the sacred enclosure of the church; and as a satisfaction for all this worldliness, Christians are making a great deal of Lent, and Easter, and Good Friday, and church ornamentation. It is the old trick of Satan. The Jewish church struck on that rock. The Romish church was wrecked on the same. And the Protestant church is fast reaching the same doom.—Dr. Howard Crosby.

A DARK PICTURE.

Mr. Henry George, describing the growing demoralization of our cities, says: "In theory, the law protects to-day the lowest as completely as the highest; yet a man who has enough money can go into one of our great centres of population, and murder whomsoever he pleases, surrender himself to justice, with the chance as a hundred to one that he will suffer no greater penalty than a temporary imprisonment, and the loss of a sum proportioned partly to his own wealth and partly to the wealth and standing of the man he kills." His money will not, however, be paid to the family of his victim, nor to the State, but to the lawyers who are expert in securing delays, finding convenient witnesses, and corruptly procuring the disagreement of juries. Again, "if a man steal enough," says Mr. George, "he may be sure that his punishment will practically amount but to the loss of a part of the proceeds of his theft. And if he steal enough to get off with a fortune, he will be greeted by his acquaintances as a viking might have been greeted after a successful cruise. Even though he robbed those who trusted him; even though he robbed the widow and the fatherless, he has only to get enough and he may safely flaunt his wealth in the eyes of day." Mr. George in all this sees cumulative proof of the decay of civilization. The people are growing used to corruption, and ceasing to resent it. There is even now a public sentiment that doubts the existence of an honest man in office, and looks rather contemptuously upon one who claims to be such. The people themselves are therefore becoming corrupted. If such corruption becomes chronic, public spirit will be lost, and law brought into contempt. When the burdens become unbearable, strong and unscrupulous men will make themselves the exponents of popular desires and passions, and become leaders in demonstrations of brute force and destruction. Thenceforward the descent to the modern form of barbarism that alternates between anarchy and temporary imperial despotism, is swift. The new barbarians, who shall destroy our modern civilization as the barbarians of old destroyed those of Greece and Rome, will not come from a distance. "Go through the squalid quarter of great cities," says Mr. George, "and you may see their gathering hordes."—Sel.

A SAFE ROUND TRIP.

Riding one night on a New England railroad, famed for its exemption from accidents of all kinds, and knowing as I did that two trains which we should meet at different points were off time, and that our train was running under telegraphic orders received at each station, instead of on the regular schedule, and being myself solicitous with regard to our safety, I retreated to the rear end of the rear car, and when the conductor had taken up his tickets, motioned to him to take the seat beside me. I had known him well for many years. He was a member of a Baptist church, and a very godly man; and, after the ordinary salutations, the following conversation occurred:

"Mr. D———, how long have you been the conductor of this train?"

"I have been on this road twenty-seven years—most of the time on this train."

"Did you ever have an accident?"

"Never."

"No person injured or property destroyed?"

"Neither."

"Do you always feel safe running off schedule-time time as you are to-night?"

"Perfectly."

"Why do you feel safe?"

"Well, there are two reasons: First, I know there is one man who knows where we are and where all the trains are which we are to pass; and, altho' in utter ignorance myself as to his plans, I know he can get us home safely. The second reason is, when I start with my train in the morning I pray that God will give us a safe round trip, and then I obey orders and think no more about it.—Sel.

WHY NOT?

Rev. Dr. Humphrey writes in the Advance of a letter he received one Monday morning after a Sabbath on which he had preached on missions. It came from a farmer and his wife who had recently given $150 for the same cause. A portion of the letter follows with some pertinent commits:

"Some years ago we made up our minds that as soon as we were out of debt, and our business was on a firm basis, we would devote the surplus money to the Lord's work while in our lifetime, rather than lay it up to give when we wanted it no longer. This year our anticipations have been met, therefore please find enclosed a check for $400, to be used in the interest of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and our prayers go with it." The letter closes by saying: "We are bee-keepers as well as farmers. We have 220 colonies of bees, and you have perhaps seen our honey in the Chicago market."

Good, honest honey, I will warrant! Indeed, I was greatly touched at the thought,—two hundred and twenty colonies of bees gathering honey from out the Lord's flowers for the Lord's missionaries. How could I help saying in reply: Blessings on the bees! May white clover and all best honey-bearing flowers bloom abundantly the coming year for the thrifty little things!

I cannot think of anything more reasonable or sensible than this plain farmer's view of the case. It is a simple and practical instance of Christian stewardship. There is, too, something of the aroma of the alabaster box in it. "The smell of it is as the smell of a field which the Lord hath blessed." The "surplus money." That is a step beyond the tenth. "This year our expectations have been met." How many selfish, griping expectations in that time have been blasted!

"And our prayers go with it." There is added power in the money that is followed by prayer. They go well together, and it will be a good thing, too, for a man to have it said to him sometimes, by some angel of the Lord, "Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God."

STRANGE HUMAN SPECIMENS.

The whole story as to the diversity of human races has not yet been told. While it is not true that any race of giants exists on this earth, there is good reasons for believing that on several places on the earth's surface there are tribes of dwarfs whose average stature is very much less than that of the leading races of man. The Germen traveler, Schweinfurth, has given a minute description of a nation of dwarfs he encountered in Central Africa. Alice D. Le Plongeon, who is well-known in New York City, has published elaborate descriptions of extinct cities she visited in British Honduras and Yucatan, the houses of which were intended for people of not more than three feet high. She writes: "I have measured many of these houses which are strongly constructed of brown stone, and found the doorway eighteen inches wide and three feet high, while my head nearly touched the ceiling of the largest rooms." These diminutive people were evidently advanced in the arts, and were at one time very numerous. It is claimed that some of them still exist among the hills of Honduras and Guatemala. Miss Le Plongeon makes the following curious statement:

"It is credibly related that one day in the year 1825, some wood-cutters, wandering along the banks of the Moho River, in British Honduras, in search of mahogany trees, were startled upon reaching a place called Meditation Fall by a strange little being that suddenly emerged from the bush, stared wildly at them, then turned to flee. The men pursued, overtook, and brought the odd creature to their camp. It was a dark-skinned girl, not quite three feet tall, and with no other covering than her hair, which fell in thick black masses to her feet, completely covering her. She was very wild, but not stupid, and finding that no harm was done to her, she talked to the wood-cutters in the Maya tongue that they also spoke, that being the language of the Indians in those parts. As the weather was cool, one of the men gave her a red flannel shirt, which clothed her from head to foot. For a day or two she refused to eat, but afterward seemed contented. She said her people were all the same size as herself, and that they were then living near Meditation Fall where they had planted a cornfield, but that they had generally dwelt three or four miles away in a deep valley. After she had been in the camp about ten days, some of the men proposed to go and see her people. She manifested delight, and offered to guide them to the spot. Reaching the place where they first met her, she led them into the forest, then made a sign for them to stop and be silent. A hubbub of voices, as of many people talking, reached their ears, and the girl whispered to them that she would go and announce their comiug, as otherwise her people would run away and hide on hearing footsteps. Away she went, and soon not a sound was heard. The men waited patiently, but their diminutive guide did not return. Convinced that she had very cunningly eluded them, they went forward, and in two minutes found themselves in a cornfield. There were embers in two or three places, and small piles of corn, as if prepared for transportation. The ground was much trodden, but no living creature was in sight. They searched in vain, and remained some time in the field hoping that the owners would return for the corn, but they never saw the girl again, nor any of her people. One of those very woodmen gave me this account, and similiar stories have been told by others; but all such stories might be doubted were it not for the cities of diminutive houses, which any traveler may examine for himself."—Demorest's Monthly.

SHE'S ALWAYS GOOD.

She never sighs, she never grumbles;
She never cries when down she tumbles.

She never soils her pretty dresses,
She never spoils her silken tresses.

With cap on head and wee hands folded,
She's put to bed and never scolded.

Oh! she's a pearl, no mischief scheming;
There's such a girl—don't think I'm dreaming.

But not to tell her name were folly—
You know her well: She's your own dolly.

THE PRAYING BOY.

A boy who had been brought to the Lord Jesus at a mission Sunday-school was anxious that his father should know the Saviour, too. His father was a wicked man, who kept a drinking-saloon, and thus not only got drunk himself but caused others to do so. The lad asked his Sunday-school teacher what he should do, for his father made him wait on the customers, handing out the poison to them, and if he had not better leave home. His teacher told him not to leave home, but to begin at once to pray for his father, and she would also pray for him, aud for his father, too; and they both commenced to pray for that father.

In a few weeks the father left off drinking, and soon after left off selling, and went to work to earn au honest living.

"For," said he, with tears running down his face, "something has been the matter with my dear boy for some time; and the other day I heard a noise in the room where he sleeps—it was a mournful noise—and I listeued; and he was praying for me! He prayed that I would leave off selling, for I had given up drinkiug some little time before. I felt I was doing wrong, and I have quit it all; and the next time you have a meeting I am coming with the boy.—Weekly Baptist.

HONEST ANNA CLUTE.

Early last June, Anna Clute, in the serviee of the George W. Wheelwright Paper Company, at their Leominster mill, found in a bale of old writing papers two United States Treasury notes, one for a thousand and the other for five hundred dollars, both of the earliest issue. As the papers in the bale indicated that they came out of the National Bank of Commerce in this city, a letter was written to the officers to see if they had met with any loss. The reply came that for a great many years they had met with but one loss, and this occurred in the fall of 1873, when $1,500 disappeared from one of the teller's trays, and had never been traced, although diligent search had been made for it. If the money found proved to be the sum lost they would be very glad, as it would relieve innocent parties from sus picions which had rested on them all these years. It seems that the bank had become burdened with an accumulation of files of old papers, and had directed their janitor to sell the oldest and those they were least likely to require. On Decoration day he had a dealer in such merchandise send his men to the bank and remove them to his packing-house, where they were baled, tagged with the proper address, numbered, and shipped to their proper destination. As this was the only waste paper the dealer packed that day, and the bale was carefully packed and numbered, it rendered the tracing of the notes easy and certain. The money has now been surrendered to the bank, which has rewarded the girl with the liberal sum of $300.

It seems to us that this simple narrative is creditable to all concerned. We know Mr. Wheelwright, and the paper on which this is printed is made at his mill. He is thoroughly honest, and would not put another man's money into his pocket whether he found it in his mill or could make it by a sharp bargain. But the girl, Miss Anna Clute, who voluntarily informed her employer of the "find," is entitled to high praise. It is true that she did only what she ought to have done, but there are so many who fail to recognize another's right in anything thus found that we regard her as a young woman of rare virtue. The bank recognized this and gave her a handsome testimonial. We gladly put the story on record, aud hope that it may have a wide circulation for the benefit of our common humanity.—Journal of Commerce.

TEMPERANCE.

GOUGH'S TRIBUTE TO COLD WATER.

Of all the powerful execrations on rum delivered by the late John B. Gough the most powerful has never been published. It is in Gough's own handwriting and was delivered by him twenty-six years ago. After its delivery a young law student in the audience, Mr. T. Shepherd, now a resident of Wooster, O., asked Mr. Gough to favor him with his words in writing. Mr. Gough consented, ou condition that the manuscript never be published while he was on the lecture platform. The conditions were assented to, and Mr. Gough jotted dowu the following apostrophe on water and execration on rum while holding a glass of water in his hand:

There is no poison in that cup, no fiendish spirit dwells beneath those crystal drops to lure you and me and all of us to ruin; no special shadows play upon its waveless surface; no widows' groans or orphans' tears rise to God from those placid fountains; misery, crime, wretchedness, woe, want and rags come uot within the hallowed precincts where eold water reigns supreme. Pure now as when it left its uative heaven, giving vigor to our youth, strength to our manhood, and solace to our old age. Cold water is beautiful, and bright, aud pure everywhere. In the moonlight fountains and the sunny rills; in the warbling brook and the giant river; in the deep tangled wildwood and the cataract's spray; in the hand of beauty or ou the lips of mauhood—cold water is beautiful everywhere.

Now follows the execration on rum:

Rum! There is a poison in that cup. There is a serpent in that cup whose sting is madness and whose embrace is death. There dwells beneath that smiling surface a fiendish spirit which for centuries has been wandering over the earth, carrying on a war of desolation and destruction against mankind, blighting and mildewing the noblest affections of the heart, and corrupting with its foul breath the tide of human life and changing the glad, green earth into a lazar-house. Gaze on it! But shudder as you gaze! Those sparkling drops are murder in disguise; so quiet now, yet widows' groans, and orphans' tears, and maniacs' yells are in that eup. The worm that dieth not and the fire that is not quenched are in that cup.

Peace and hope and love and truth dwell not within that fiery circle where dwells that desolating monster which men call rum. Corrupt now as when it left its native hell, giving fire to the eye, madness to the brain, and ruin to the soul, rum is vile and deadly, and accursed everywhere. The poet would liken it in its fiery glow to the flames that flicker around the abode of the damned. The theologian would point you to the drunkard's doom; while the historian would unfold the dark record of the past, and point you to the fate of empires and kingdoms lured to ruin by the siren song of the tempter, and sleeping now in cold obscurity the wreck of what once was great, grand and glorious. Yes, rum is corrupt and vile and deadly, and accursed everywhere. Fit type and semblance of all earthly corruption!

Base art thou yet as when the wise man warned us of thy power and bade us flee thy enchantment. Vile art thou yet as when thou first went forth on thy unholy mission—filling earth with desolation and madness, woe and anguish. Deadly art thou yet as when thy envenomed tooth first took fast hold on human hearts, and thy serpent tongue first drank up the warm life-blood of immortal souls. Accursed art thou yet as when the bones of thy first victim rotted in a damp grave and its shriek echoed along the gloomy caverns of hell. Yes, thou infernal spirit of rum, through all past time hast thou been, as through all coming time thou shalt be, accursed everywhere.

In the fiery fountains of the still; in the seething bubbles of the caldron; in the kingly palace aud the drunkard's hovel; in the rich man's cellar and the poor man's closet; in the pestilential vapors of foul dens and in the blaze of gilded saloons; in the hand of beauty and on the lip of manhood, rum is vile and deadly, and accursed everywhere.

Rum, we yield not to thy unhallowed influence, and together we have met to plan thy destruction. And by what new name shall we call thee, and to what shall we liken thee when we speak of thy attributes? Others may eall thee child of perdition, the base-born progeny of sin and Satan, the murderer of mankind and the destroyer of immortal souls; but I this night will give thee a new name among men and crown thee with a new horror, and that new name shall be the sacramental eup of the Rum Power, and I will say to all the sons and daughters of earth: Dash it down! And thou, Rum, shalt be my text in my pilgrimage among men; and not aloue shall my tongue utter it, but the groans of orphans in their agony aud the cries of widows in their desolation shall proclaim it the enemy of home, the traducer of childhood, and the destroyer of manhood, and whose only antidote is the sacramental cup of temperance—cold water!

QUESTIONS FAIRLY PUT.

In his lecture at Waterford, Wis., Mr. St. John said: "Many of you are Democrats, and are doubtless proud of the fact. I want to ask you just one question, and I waut you to give me a candid answer: Do you honestly believe that the Democratic party intends to abolish the saloon? Let every Democrat in this audience who does believe that the Democratic party intends to rid the land of the saloon curse hold up his hand." For a moment a death-like silence ruled supreme as the audience waited for the Democratic hands to go up. But alas! not a hand was lifted.

Then addressing himself to the Republicans, who were out in large numbers, Mr. St. John said: "Now I want to ask you Republicans, as many of you as believe, down deep in your 'hearts, that the Republican party intends to take up this question and free this country from the saloou curse, to hold up your hauds." Again the silence and suspense became for a moment oppressive as the audieuce waited for the show of hands, but no show of hands followed. Not a hand was lifted.

"And now," said Mr. St. John, "let me ask all of you, without reference to party, just one simple question: As mauy of you as believe that the drink traffic is the greatest curse of the age, and that for the good of the people it ought to be abolished, destroyed root and branch, hold up your hands."

Every hand in the audience was in mid-air as if by magic.—The Lever.

The more than three-fifths vote of the legal electors in Rhode Island in favor of the constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale and manufacture of alcoholic drinks was a grateful surprise to all friends of temperauce. It indicates several things: First, an untiring devotion and faithfulness on the part of the temperance workers. They had a very brief campaign, and thoroughly improved their opportunities. But there is another and important fact that should not escape observation. Rhode Island has a property qualification for voters. This excludes a large class of transient and irresponsible persons from partieipation in the decision of important State questions. It is precisely this class, the men who are poor by reason of their intemperance, and intemperate because they are reckless, that make up the great mass of those who by their votes sustain the liquor traffic. We have and do favor an enlargement rather than the restriction of suffrage. We believe that if the ten millions of women of voting age were added to our electors, it would be a vast gain to political morality. But so long as we have not this counterpoise on the side of pure morals, it would be a great gain if, as in Rhode Islaud, we could shut off the powerful saloon influence, which acts mainly on the vicious classes of society.

A certain old lady, a habitual user of tobacco, by the pipe, suffered great trouble at one time by the loss of one of her sons, committing suicide; and while talking to one of her friends about it, made the following pointed remark that has its own moral in it already interpreted: "Whenever I get into any great trouble about it, I just fly to my pipe and then I feel easy."

was believed by the false religionists of any country to contain a revelation from God would do as one of the three great lights in Masonry when Masonry was worked where those spurious revelations were believed, by the blinded pagans, to contain the will of the gods.

Before I left the train at Fairmount, I learned that this gentleman was a minister of the Presbyterian church, and that he did not sympathize with an institution that, in Christian lands, professed to be the handmaid of the Christian religion and appeared to reverence the Christian Scriptures, and in Mohammedan countries was ready to assume the same role towards Mohammedanism and the Koran; and then, again, to practice the same spiritual harlotry where Buddhism or any other form of paganism is the prevailing religion. No words can picture the disgust that any honest man must feel for an institution that is unalterably committed by an unchangeable landmark to such shameful hypocrisy.

A revival meeting was in progress in the Friends' church of Fairmount, so I made no arrangements for lectures there. I preached Sabbath morning in the U. B. church, a little out of town, and in the evening in the W. M. church of Back Creek. Here I also lectured twice.

From Fairmount I came to Bunker Hill, where I made a brief stop, and was kindly entertained by that veteran of our reform, Harris Jenness. Taking the cars again I soon reached Chicago, and thus ended my tour of labor in Indiana. C. F. Hawley.

—At the Rochester Theological Seminary (Baptist) are 156 students, 121 of whom are assisted by the union for ministerial education.

—The Presbyterian church of Amity, Pa., Presbytery of Pittsburgh, has had an accession of about eighty members on examination.

—The masses are at length being reached to a large extent in France. It is estimated that more than 400,000 persons attended the McAll mission in Paris alone last year: while Mr. Gibson reports 35,000, and Miss De Broen, in the Belleville Mission, counts 20,000 a year.

—Mr. W. S. Ladd, of Portland, Oregon, has given $50,000 to endow a professorship in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at San Francisco.

—The Park Street Congregational church, Boston, gave $20,520 last year to benevolent causes, besides raising $11,224 for current expenses and $5,000 for organ.

—The Attorney-General of England, Mr. Charles Russell, is the first Roman Catholic who has filled that office since the Reformation.

—A movement has been started in Canada to consolidate Protestant churches in small towns. Methodists and Presbyterians are the promoters of it.

—In Monroe county, W. Va., about 300 persons have this winter united with the Presbyterian churches of the county?—the result of meetings held by the earnest evangelist, the Rev. C. M. Howard.

—The Broadway Tabernacle, Dr. Wm. M. Taylor, pastor, has now 1,115 members.

—The Western Christian Advocate has reported 25,000 conversions since the beginning of the year.

—The Presbyterian church of Columbus, Ind., recently received into its communion ninety-four new members.

—It is estimated that 40,000 out of the 60,000 people in Charleston heard Mr. Moody preach last week.

—The Rev. J. E. Adams reports that in South Carolina the Presbyterian church has now over 100 colored ministers and 200 churches, with 11,000 communicants.

—Mr. J. T. Morton, a benevolent English Presbyterian merchant, makes the princely offer to its foreign mission committee to send to Southwestern China by the new opening through Burmah two ordained and two medical missionaries, and to pay their expenses and salaries for three years.

—A farewell was tendered to the Rev. Messrs. Curry and Fay, who were about to sail as missionaries to Central Africa, at Watertown, Mass. Many clergymen from neighboring towns, and several officers of the American Board, were present.

—The directors of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Chicago have decided to change its name to the McCormick Theological Seminary, in honor of its liberal donor.

—Nearly 1,000 converts have been added to the Methodist church through the recent revivals in Los Angeles, Cal.

—A Baptist Chinese mission building has been erected at Fresno, Cal., Mrs. Frances M. Potter mortgaging her property for money to put into the building.

—The Philadelphia Sunday Breakfast Association furnishes 850 poor people with breakfasts every Sunday morning. Four corned beef sandwiches and three cups of coffee, with milk and sugar, make the breakfast, and singing and church service follow until 10 o'clock.

—Dr. Philip Schaff is an authority for the statement that the Apocrypha is undergoing revision at the hands of a volunteer company of the Old and New Testament Revisers, including Bishop Lightfoot, Prof. Hort, Canon Westcott and Dr. Moulton, among others. The American Committee has nothing to do with this work, but still keeps up its organization, and will not dissolve until its agreement with the University Presses expires.

—It seems to be a fair statement to say, that, among the Protestant churches of England and America, in 1883–84, the converts averaged 1.3 to each ordained laborer; while on foreign mission fields they averaged 24.5. And still there are those who persist in talking about the unwise outlay of money in missions to the heathens.

—The Rev. D. Downie, a veteran Baptist missionary in Nellore, Madras Presidency, in India, says that though that mission has been so long established and so successful, there are hundreds of thousands on its field who have never yet even once heard the Gospel preached.

—A Chinese boy at Peking repeated the entire New Testament without missing a word or making a mistake.

—Great revivals have followed as the result of the labors of Evangelist Munhall in Sacramento, Cal., and Portland, Oregon. He is now in San Francisco, laboring with great effect.

—Miss Jennie Smith, the evangelist of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, is conducting a very successful series of meetings in McKeesport, Pa., in which the churches and their pastors are working heartily with her.

—The Rev. W. R. Schermerhorn, who recently passed over from Unitarianism to the Episcopal communion, has become rector of St. Mark's Memorial church, Tarrytown, N. Y. He has run the gamut of nearly all the denominations.

—Mrs Griffith John, one of the oldest missionaries in China, died at Hankow recently. She was converted at the age of twelve, entered upon mission work when she had barely reached twenty, and was engaged in her labors among the Chinese for thirty-one years.

—Dr. Edward Judson reports that the special subscription of ten cents (or more) from each member of the Baptist Sunday-schools and churches for the Missionary Union has reached the sum of $13,685, and that an average of over fifty responses a day are still coming in.

—The Queen of Raratonga, one of the South Sea Islands evangelized by the missionaries of the London Missionary Society, has recently visited New Zealand with her consort. They are both professing Christians, and while at Aukland assisted in laying the foundation stone of a new Congregational church.

—At the general conference of the Episcopal church in 1883 it was proposed to collect $1,000,000 for its missionary work in contributions of $5 from each communicant before the next conference in 1886. A great meeting has been held in the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, to secure the balance of $100,000 from that diocese, of which only $30,000 has been raised.

—The London Zenana Medical school has sent sixty women to India fitted to care for the sick and suffering women there.

—The Chinese Recorder states that there are 34 Protestant missionary societies at work in that empire, 18 British, 14 American, and 4 German, and about 912 foreign missionaries, of whom 307 are married, and 150 single men and 150 single women, a net gain of about 60 in the last year.

—The American Congress of churches that last year meet in Hartford, Conn., May 11–13, meets this year at Cleveland, Ohio, May 25, 26.

—Reservation Indians at Round Lake, Wis., have begun the erection of a church; and at a temperance meeting recently several of the red men signed the pledge.

—Rev. Mr. Chapin and the elders of the Presbyterian church in Freeport, L. I., have addressed a circular letter to members asking them not to read Sunday newspapers.

—Mrs. Elizabeth E. Emerson, of Rochester, N. Y., gives legacies of $20,000 each to the Presbyterian Boards of Foreign and Home Missions, and $10,000 to the Presbyterian Church Extension Society.

—The Second Presbyterian church, Knoxville, Tenn., Rev. T. S. Scott, pastor, has received seventy members during the year, thirty-nine on confession. Over $1,000 was contributed to benevolent objects.

—Rev. Richard D. Harlan, son of United States Justice Harlan, has been installed over the First Presbyterian church, New York. He is only twenty-five, and is the youngest minister in charge of a church in that city.

—An Austrian astronomer, who has been over the record of the eclipses mentioned in the Bible, finds in it a remarkable confirmation of the chronology of the Old Testament, and says he has been able to fix the time of the exodus of the children of Israel at the 27th of March, in the year 1335 B. C.

—The ex-Romish priest, editor of La Trompette Evangelique, will accept a limited number of engagements to deliver his lecture on "Romanism" during June, July and August of the coming summer. Send applications to 34 Blue Island avenue, Chicago.

—The Gladstone Irish land scheme will have a very serious effect, it is thought, on the Irish Episcopal church. The clergy seem to agree that expropriation will almost obliterate the church. One of them says: "If the landlords are bought out, I estimate that in strictly country parts three-fourths of our churches must be closed or only used for occasional services."

—Mr. Moody is to be in Chicago the first week in May, to take up the work begun by Messrs. Jones and Small, after a week of services by Messrs. Sayford and Turner. Admission at the evening meetings is to be by ticket only, for the first half hour. Mr. Moody desires to make the campaign a very vigorous one.

—Two Russians have been sentenced to death for becoming Baptists, and their wives, children and relatives have been east into prison for not renouncing the faith of the two.

—A secular paper says that "Methodism, it would seem, has some attractions for soldiers and sailors. It is estimated that there are in the British army and navy over 13,000 declared Methodists."

—Canon Farrar recently preached a sermon against the Romanizing tendencies of the High church party. He said the doctrines of the extreme phase of the Romeward drift were the antithesis of those of the Early church and the true English church.

—As an outcome of the late evangelical mission of Rev. Dr. Somerville in Constantinople, an effort is being made to raise £7,000 to erect an evangelical hall in that city, to be used as a center of Christian work.

—The number of theological students at the universities of Prussia is steadily increasing. In the winter term of 1881–82 the total number was 1,314; in the present winter term it is 2,221, making an increase of about 70 per cent.

—The evangelical ministers of Cincinnati are considering the project of thoroughly canvassing the city for the purpose of finding out the religious condition of the people, and to direct the attention of non-church-goers to the churches for which they may have a denominational preference.

—An association has been formed in England called the Morning Watch, whose object is to encourage early rising and early communion with God. "A little while spent with him before the cares of the day dim the freshness of the mind does more than aught else to foster close communion."

—The figures quoted by Dr. Lyman Abbott at the Christian conference at Cincinnati last week, whereby the foreign-born population of this city is given as ninety per cent., and that of Cincinnati as seventy per cent., seem based on very insufficient foundation. According to the United States census of 1880, the foreign-born population of Chicago was only forty per cent. of the whole, while that of Cincinnati was but twenty-eight, and the growth of these cities during the last five years has probably added little to the relative proportion of native and foreign born.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this book.

READ THE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, every-day walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly probibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unraveling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

MASONIC OATHS,

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOW TO TAKE A FOOT-BATH.

"Just as if everybody did not know how to take a foot-bath! Why, you soak your feet in hot water, wipe them and go to bed, of course. What other way is there to do?"

That is the way most people take a foot bath, and almost without exception, they will tell you that in a short time after going to bed their feet are as cold as ever, and also that they are more liable to take cold after such a bath. All this is evidence that the bath has not been properly taken. Hot water dilates the capillaries, that is, the fine, hair like blood-vessels of the surface of the body, and the redness or the skin shows that an increased supply of blood has been called there. The pores of the skin has been opened by the heat, and the insensible perspiration is being rapidly thrown off. If the feet thus flushed with blood, and every pore wide open, be exposed to the air, or to the cold sheets of the bed, the heat will be rapidly carried away. Add to this the reaction that naturally follows the increased flow of blood to the feet, and you have another reason why they are soon cold after the hot bath. "Action and reaction are equal and in opposite directions." Therefore, as great as has been the incressed flow to the feet, so great, when the reaction comes, will be the current away from the feet, and the bath becomes an evil instead of a good. The best time to take a foot bath is not at night, but in the middle of the forenoon, when the vitality is at its highest point. After immersing the feet for a time in hot water, lift them out of the bath and dash a dipper or two of cold water over them and rub briskly till dry. By this sudden application of cold you have closed the pores, and left the skin in a tonic condition; you have also sent the blood from the surface with such force that it must of neccssity, in following the law of reaction, return with force, thus tending to make the feet ultimately warmer When thoroughly dry, draw on a pair of clean, well-warmed hose, put on your boots, and you are ready for a walk or a ride, without fear of taking cold.

Rubbing the feet with a little sweet oil before putting on the stockings, is a still further preventive of colds.

If you take the bath at bed time, do not omit the clean, well-warmed stockings, or, in place of them, wrap the feet in flannel in order to keep the heat that you have gained.

A foot bath thus taken two or three times a week will tend to improve the circulation, and overcome a tendency to cold feet. Many women have cold feet constantly, and are so accustomed to it that they are not aware of it until after they are in bed; then perhaps they lie awake hours before the feet are warm enough to allow them to sleep. This constant coldness of the extremities is provocative of internal difficulties known under the general term of "weakness;" and many a woman would find her various aches disappearing if she were scrupulously to avoid having cold feet.

"My mother will not allow me to warm my feet by the fire. She says it will make them tender."

It is certainly better to warm them by exercise, but it is better to warm them by the fire than not to have them warm.

Dr. Thomson, of New York city, whose authority cannot be questioned, says. "Many women suffer with cold feet on account of the relationship between the pedal circulation and that of the pelvic viscera, and in such cases it will be found that the long continued use of a foot-stove during the day, and a hot soapstone at night, will do more towards the re-establishing of the disordered functions than any other line of treatment. In order to encourage the patients in keeping the feet warm, it is well to inform that by so doing they will relieve the backache from which they suffer."

Many women are accustomed to wear thin cotton stockings and slippers even in winter, and it would be wiser to clothe the feet warmly, than to continue them in their thin dress and use the foot-stove. If woolen stockings make the feet clammy and cold, it is well to wear a thin pair of cotton hose under them. Slippers should be discarded in cold weather by all delicate persons. German felt shoes can be found in market that are very comfortable, though not handsome.

The crocheted or knitted dressing slippers can be continued so as to form boots, and are then exceedingly comfortable.

The whole body should be equably clad, or if there be any difference it should be in favor of the limbs, both upper and lower. A very good exercise for warming the feet is to raise and lower the body a number of times upon the toes. This also tends to increase the size of the muscles which make up the calf of the leg. A strict and conscientiously regarded rule of life should be, never to go to bed with cold feet. The last half hour before retiring should be devoted to getting the feet warm. Lay aside books and study, for they tend to draw the blood to the head, and make the feet cold. Rub the feet before the fire, and be sure that you have secured a thorough, not merely a superficial warming. Do this as religiously as you put up your frizzes or say your prayers. A few minutes thus spent will secure sleep during hours that would probably pass in wakefulness while your feet were slowly getting warm after you were in bed.—Mary A. Allen, in Good Cheer.

If a cough disturbs your sleep, take Piso's Cure for Consumption and rest well.

A Wonderful Woman, A Wonderful Life, AND A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1 00

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents, per dozen. $3.50.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen. $2 00

National Christian Association.
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees 304 pages.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents, per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers. 40 cents; per dozen, $3 50

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the In- ITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Ma- SONRY. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 De- GREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher In cloth, 25c. per doz. $3 25. Paper cover. 15c. Per doz. $1.25.

FARM AND GARDEN.

TEST THE EGGS.

At this season of the year everybody should have an egg tester. By this we do not mean that every farmer's wife having a dozen or more hens must hie herself away and purchase some patent catraption, though there are some good ones sold very low that answer a good purpose. It is meant though that all eggs should be tested by some means. Eggs that are unfertile will be easily distinguished from the fertile ones in three or four days after setting; in fact an expert may detect them on the second day.

In France it is the practice to examine or test the eggs after the hen has been on them two days, and if they prove unfertile, they are used on the table. In this country almost everyone feeds the young chicks boiled eggs the first two or three days of their existence, and for this purpose eggs that have been set on six or eight days are equally as valuable as fresh ones.

Now for a cheap tester, take a heavy piece of brown paper, wrap it around a stick, paste it fast all along, draw the stick in and out, and you have one that will distinguish between fertile and unfertile eggs when set upon five or six days.

To use the tester, we have but to hold it to the eye and hold an egg to the other end of it, looking through the egg toward the sun or a lamp. Every stage of incubation may be noted in this way, and the eggs saved by this process and used as food for chicks will abundantly pay for all the trouble. A still more valuable consideration is the fact that when a half dozen hens are set at once the fertile eggs may be put into a less number of nests, and other fresh eggs may be placed under the hens rendered idle by the removal of the unfertile eggs and the consolidation of the fertiles ones.

A gentleman, Mr. Chandler, who knows about gardening, has made a good list of grapes and berries to plant. Mr. Chandler also tells you how far apart to set your rows and plants. He says:

"I would recommend the plat to be about twelve rods long and seven wide, or it may be longer and narrower if the situation selected may require. But, for example, take the sized piece mentioned. It should be rich enough to produce a good farm crop. Plow it the same as you would for any other farm crop, harrow it smooth, and plant while fresh.

"It is better to have the rows run north and south; then on the west side plant two rows of grape vines (eight feet apart each way), requiring fifty vines—five Champion, five Ives, and forty Concord. Next six rows of Snyder blackberries; rows six feet apart, and plants three feet apart in the row, requiring about 400. Next plant one row of each variety of raspberries mentioned, making six rows, the same distance as blackberries, requiring 400. Then strawberries in rows three feet apart, and eighteen inches apart in the row. Set two rows of Captain Jack and four rows of Crescent, and four rows of Mt. Vernon, making in all 1,300 plants. The whole outfit for a half acre should be bought for less than $20."

Mr. Chandler gives the number of plants for half an acre, but you can easily have the patch half or quarter as big, or even less. The strawberries are of different kinds, because the Crescent, although a delicious berry, is not what is called a perfect fruiting plant. The pollen, which is the yellow dust from its flowers, must be mixed with that of the blossoms of another kind of plant before the Crescent will bear fruit. Rows of other kinds planted alongside will make the two pollens unite.

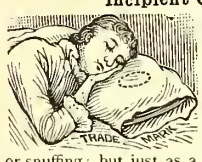
One of the most creditable practices of old-time orchardists, now almost obsolete, was that of whitewashing the trunks and larger limbs of fruit trees. It may prove unsightly from an æsthetic point of view, but the result is death to all manner of insects and their eggs hidden away under the rough, scaley bark, besides leaving in time a healthy smooth surface after the rains have washed the greater part of the lime away to act as a fertilizer to the roots.

KNIGHT TEMPLARISM ILLUSTRATED.

A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50c; $4.00 per dozen. Furnished in any quantities at

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

In Night Sweats and Prostration.



Dr. R. Studhalter, St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have used it in dyspepsia, nervous prostration, and in night sweats, with very good results"

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the Pillow-Inhaler, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

Hon. E. L. Hedden, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the Pillow-Inhaler has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

Mr. H. G. Teele, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a Pillow-Inhaler, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the Pillow-Inhaler has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

NEEDLE WORK

Needle-Work: A Manual of Stitches and Studies in Embroidery and Drawn Work. This manual is an attempt to Edited by Jenny June. systematize and arrange in an order convenient for workers, the modern methods in Embroidery and Drawn Work. The author has felt the desire and the responsibility involved in aiding women to a true and practical guide to the beautiful art of needle-work. When the Angel of Mercy begged that woman might not be created because she would be abused by man, as the stronger, the Lord listened, but felt that he could not give up the whole scheme of creation, so he gave the loving Angel permission to bestow upon her any compensating gift she chose, and the Angel pityingly endowed her with tears and the love of needle-work. This book is printed on fine paper, has a handsome cover, and contains

News of The Week.

WASHINGTON.

There has been a lengthy hearing given by the House Committee on Labor to the statements of all parties engaged in the great strike of the Southwest. The testimony continued several days, and Mr. Powderly, Mr. Gould and others made ample statements. The President on the 22d sent a message to Congress on the subject of labor strikes, recommending voluntary arbitration when practicable, and that Congress support a permanent board of arbitrators.

From a recent report prepared by the Civil Service Commission it appears that, exclusive of the army and navy appointments, there are in round numbers 110,000 people employed by the United States government, of which 52,632 are postmasters. The total number of employes who are subject to the civil service examination is about 15,000, of which 6,000 are in the executive departments at Washington, 6,000 in the postal service in different cities throughout the country, and 3,000 in the customs service.

The United States Senate, in executive session Tuesday, rejected the proposed treaty to re-open the Weil and L'Abra claims against Mexico.

The Secretary of the Treasury Tuesday issued a call for $10,000,000 in 3 per cent bonds.

Among the nominations confirmed by the Senate Tuesday was that of Zachariah Montgomery, to be Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department.

The Congressional Special Labor Committee (ex-Governor Curtin, chairman) held its first session at Washington Tuesday, and had Mr. Powderly on the stand, but elicited nothing of a sensational nature. It was suggested to the witness that he give his views on the question of legislative remedy for existing evils, and he promised to do so at some future session.

Chang Yen Won, the new Chinese minister and his suite, arrived in this city on the 22d. The minister and the party were met at the depot by the retiring minister and the attaches of the legation and escorted to the embassy in carriages, after which the ex-Minister and his suite returned to the hotel, where they will remain while in the city.

The Blair educational bill has been discussed in the House, and the Committee on Education have deferred their report till May 3.

The scientific education temperance bill that passed the Senate without division has been reported favorably, and will doubtless pass.

COUNTRY.

The "Anti Saloon Bepublican Convention," which was to have met at Toledo, Ohio, on the 19th of May, has been postponed. The convention will meet in Chicago on a day soon to be announced.

West Point, Va., voted on local option on the 13th inst. There was considerable excitement, and the vote was the largest, with one exception, ever polled. Local option won by a majority of 46 in a total vote of 374.

A scheme is said to be on foot to boycott the Gould railroads through Eastern manufacturers. It is said the cotton workers of District Assembly 30, Knights of Labor, with headquarters at Boston, will notify manufacturers for whom they work to stop shipping their goods over those roads.

Shots were fired at sentries in the E. St. Louis railway yards Tuesday morning. The soldiers returned the compliment, but it is not known that anybody was hurt.

The annual meeting of the Alumni Association of the Chicago Theological Seminary was held yesterday in Carpenter Hall, in the seminary, on Ashland avenue, closing with a banquet.

The Connellsville (Pa.) coke syndicate will, on May 1, advance the wages of their 10,000 miners and coke drawers 5 to 10 per cent.

The Oshkosh (Wis.) Mutual Insurance Company, with a capital stock of $250,000, was incorporated Monday evening.

The collapse of the Mud Pond reservoir dam let loose the water, the seething torrent being precipitated upon the village of East Lee, Mass., tearing away every form of movable property, stock, and farm products. Eleven bodies have been found in the track of the flood, and other persons are missing. A number of mills and manufactories were ruined, entailing a loss of $220,000, and hundreds of people are thrown out of employment.

The directors of the Third avenue street car line, New York, unanimously adopted resolutions refusing to accede to any of the demands of the strikers in regard to the men it shall or shall not employ, and refusing to discharge any non-union men, or to take back any strikers who have destroyed property, or any strikers who have incited others to destroy property. The strikers threaten to extend the strike to all street roads in that city.

The Freeport militia company has been ordered to hold itself in readiness, and, it is presumed, will be ordered to Chicago.

At Montreal 7,422 families, embracing 30,000 persons, have been driven from their homes by the flood, which is now receding, a fall of two feet being recorded.

A rain, thunder and hail storm in the Sauk City (Wis.) section Wednesday resulted in much damage to stock and property.

Washington county (Ga.), one of the largest in the State, has voted the "dry" ticket by a majority of 225.

The local option election in Fredericksburg, Va., to-day resulted in favor of granting license by 210 majority.

The election at Sterling, Ill., Tuesday, was remarkable in that all the candidates of the Knights of Labor were defeated.

The town hall and jail at Cornwall, Ont., was destroyed by fire Wednesday morning, two prisoners perishing in the flames.

Washington T. Porter, an attorney and secretary of the Cincinnati Bar Association, was expelled from that body Tuesday night for seeking the nomination for a judgeship.

At Columbus, Miss., Wednesday night, the Rev. Sam Jones preached a sermon on morality that has startled the city and created the greatest excitement.

Bishop Bedell and the city ministers of Cleveland, O., are preparing to boycott the Sunday secular papers.

The levee on the Mississippi, sixteen miles below Helena, Ark., broke Thursday afternoon, and it is expected that the bottom lands for miles will be submerged. It is feared that the losses will be very heavy.

The strike on the Lake Shore railroad, which was caused by the refusal to discharge some non-union men, and which continued for nearly a week to prevent all freight transportation, was brought to a close on the 23d by an alleged agreement to discharge the non-union men within sixty days.

FOREIGN.

Herbert Gladstone, son of the premier, in a speech Tuesday evening, said that "the government would hold fast to its present Irish policy, and would secure victory whether it required six months or six years."

Fifty followers of a powerful Burmese prince set fire to Mandalay, the capital, in several places early Monday morning, and one third of the walled city was ruined. The treasury, post-office and other buildings within the palace inclosure were destroyed.

A great mass meeting to indorse Gladstone's Irish home rule bill was held at St. James Hall, London, Thursday evening, at which resolutions were unanimously adopted congratulating Mr. Gladstone on his endeavors, and expressing the hope that the bill would become a law, after being so modified as to harmonize with the desires of the Radicals.

The Greek and Turkish outposts exchanged shots for half an hour Wednesday evening, but no one was killed on either side.

The Spanish sanitary council has authorized the practice of inoculation discovered by Dr. Ferran in the event of a recurrence of cholera in Spain.

Dr. Frisch, the delegate sent by the Austrian government to Paris to investigate and report upon M. Pasteur's system of treatment for hydrophobic diseases, in a public lecture, has advised the medical profession of the empire to adopt the French savant's methods.

As between the brewers of Milwaukee and the 2,000 employes who have struck for higher wages and less hours, we heartily sympathize with the latter. We shall be glad if none can be found to take their places, and that these immense establishments are obliged to suspend. No city in the nation levies such immense contributions on the people, and at such fearful expense to public morals. Men who are engaged in a nefarious business are likely to be unjust to their laborers; and, in any case, it will be an immense gain to these men to get out of their demoralizing influences.

"For the mystery of lawlessness doth already work, only there is one that restraineth now until he is taken out of the way. And there shall be revealed the lawless one, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth and bring to naught by the manifestation of his coming." (2 Thess. 2: 7-8.) This is an age of lawlessness. On either side of the ocean, alike under absolute monarchies and the freest government that men have enjoyed, there is the same open resistance to the law, the same secret conspiracies for the overthrow of established authority. A correspondent in this week's issue sees in the present labor troubles a fulfillment of prophecy. This is probable, but do not we see also the power of "the lawless one, whose coming is according to the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceit of unrighteousness for them that are perishing?" This mystery of lawlessness has its seat in the secret orders. They oppose and exalt themselves against all law that is not in harmony with their own purposes. They are all alike kindred in character, and all shall be consumed shortly by the revelation of the Holy One.

We gladly note the changed and dignified tone of the public press in regard to the demands and doings of the secret orders. The Inter-Ocean of the 30th, commenting on the letter of the Archbishop of Montreal, says: "Independent of the church view, the mandament is significant as indicating the strength of the opposition to secret political societies, or to secret societies that may become political. Already Mr. Powderly, the head-center of the Knights of Labor, is spoken of as a Democratic candidate for governor in Pennsylvania, and there are plans afoot to use the machinery of the order to advance the interests of politicians out of power. These things increase the public distrust of secret semi-political societies, the words of Archbishop Taschereau having less effect than those of George Washington," who, in his farewell address, said: Here is quoted at length Washington's earnest admonition to beware of "all obstructions to the laws, all combinations or associations designed to control the constituted authorities," and adds: "In view of the attack on the Catholic church in Canada, and in view of the popular prejudice against secret political societies, the Knights of Labor would make a point by coming squarely into the light of open organization. There seems to be no good reason why they should not do this," a conclusion we most heartily endorse.

The celebration of the Lost Cause at Montgomery, Ala., and the special honors paid to Jefferson Davis was one of the freaks of popular folly which was probably as meaningless as it was inoportune. Of all the prominent men of the South who undertook to establish a government on principles just the reverse of those embodied in the Declaration of Independence, Jeff Davis and Robert Toombs were almost the only ones who failed to see their mistake (to call it by so mild a name), and refused to accept the forgiveness of a magnanimous people. The new and better order of things that came to the South was in spite of their endeavors. No men ever attempted and accomplished so great and grievous a wrong to their own nation as these men. It was the good providence of God that overruled it for good. It is true that as a people we have ceased to hate, and no man thirsts for the blood of those who were once our enemies. Still the worst that unrepentant rebels ought to expect is that we should

"Walk backward with averted gaze
And hide their shame."

The R. C. Archbishop of Montreal has written a mandament, which he commands to be read in all the churches of his diocese, forbidding membership in the Masonic Order and the Knights of Labor, charging on the latter the violence and crime that have grown out of the strikes, and threatening with the greater excommunication all who do not withdraw from these organizations.

His admonitions have been received with surprise and indignation by the foreign-born Catholics of this city. They doubtless constitute the great body of those who make up the unions and organize the strikes and boycotts. In almost all instances the riots are composed of those who owe allegiance to "Mother Church." If the church authorities can do anything to restrain them from violence, we shall be thankful; but we regard this admonition of the archbishop as much like Mr. Powderly's advice to the Knights—"drink water and go to work"—the very thing to which they are specially indisposed.

Greece, like a naughty child that has been spanked and sent to bed, feels badly at being obliged to disarm. Doubtless she has, like the child, her griefs, if not her grievances; but if the Great Powers never do any greater wrong than compelling her to keep the peace, her people and the rest of mankind will have occasion for profound gratitude. International war, like domestic violence, is a matter that concerns the whole family of nations and the family of men. For the same reason that magistrates ought to compel the people to keep the peace with each other, so the nations of Christendom ought to insist that the world's peace shall not be disturbed. It would be an immense gain to humanity if there could be incorporated into all international treaties an agreement to settle all differences by negotiation or arbitration. If that species of moral coercion known as the boycott could be brought to bear on any people that insist on war with their neighbors, war would be impossible, and there would be comparatively few of the wrongs that it is supposed to redress. We decidedly favor an international boycott for all governments that break the peace of the world.

WHEN IS LABOR REST?

BY KATE KINGSBURY.

When, oh, when, is labor rest?
When with thought the mind is weary,
Clouded o'er with shadows dreary,
Or with grief the soul's opprest,
Then, oh, then, is labor rest!

When, oh, when is labor rest?
When the task is kindly taken
For the lonely and forsaken,
And with grateful smiles we're blest,
Then, oh, then, is labor rest!

When, oh, when, is labor rest?
When we work for toil-worn mothers,
Over-laden sisters, brothers—
Clasping orphans to the breast,
Then, oh, then, is labor rest!

When, oh, when, is labor rest?
Stricken soul, though sorrowing ever,
Failing in each stern endeavor,
Faint not, for thy work is blest—
All unselfish toil is rest!

Wellesley Hills, Mass.

THE UNITED BRETHREN COMMISSION.

BY REV. HALLECK FLOYD.

The admission by Prof. Kephart that the constitution received the "tacit acceptance of the church," is a confession that it is valid and of binding force as organic law. This admission bars from the discussion all quibbling about the General Conference not being authorized to adopt a constitution for the church. But for the satisfaction of the readers of the Cynosure, since the Professor is determined not to be enlightened, or being enlightened, is unwilling to acknowledge it, I will introduce our church historians to prove that the General Conference of 1841 had authority from the church at large to adopt a constitution for the church. Mr. Spayth says, in his history of the church in speaking of the General Conference of 1837, which assembled at Germantown, Montgomery Co., Ohio:

"At this conference a general wish was expressed by the members that a constitution be adopted, by which the general principles of church government might be thrown in some tangible form. It was not intended that any new principle of church government was to be incorporated, nor yet to reject any already embraced in the general rules of discipline, but rather to gather up and embrace in one general instrument the fundamental principles upon which the governments rests. First, by defining the duties and specific powers of the legislative and judicial bodies of the church, and

"Secondly, by setting limits to those powers, and at the same time securing to all their just rights as members of the household of faith.

"Accordingly a constitution was drawn up and published to the church, as a kind of a conventional constitution, affording the church members an opportunity to instruct their delegates at the next General Conference, to adopt it, with or without amendments, or reject it altogether."

Mr. Lawrence says (page 322 pertaining to the proceedings of the General Conference of 1837): "The subject of the greatest interest, however, which came before the conference related to a constitution for the church. It was introduced by Mr. Rhinehart. He had drafted a constitution, and on the first day of the session presented it to the conference, asking, by a motion, that the subject be taken up and considered. This motion, after considerable discussion, was adopted. The matter being now fairly before the conference, on motion of Mr. Hanby it was 'Resolved, That a constitution for the better regulation of the Church be adopted.' The draft presented by Mr. Rhinehart was then read, and examined, by items, amended as desired, and adopted by a unanimous vote of the conference.

"The conference, however, did not regard its action as final, or as at all binding on the church. The delegates had not been instructed to make a constitution; and, recognizing themselves as only the representatives and servants of the church, they caused the instrument to be printed, accompanied by a circular, calling the attention of the church to the same, and asking that the delegates to the General Convention of 1841 be instructed to adopt, amend, or reject the same."

Mr. Spayth says of the General Conference of 1841, which convened at Dresbach's Meeting-house, Pickway Co., Ohio: "After many preliminaries and some regular conference business had been attended to, the subject of a constitution was brought up. Much discussion was had for and against. Finally a vote was taken in favor of a constitution; and a committee of nine appointed to draft one, and present it to the conference for action. The committee's report was made, and the proposed constitution carefully read, section by section, and finally adopted by a large majority."

Mr. Lawrence says of the same conference: "After the preliminary business was disposed of, a constitution was again introduced and discussed with more warmth than ever. At length a vote was taken, which resulted in favor of a constitution: and a committee composed of one delegate from each conference reported a constitution substantially the one that had been before the church for four years, which was, after some slight amendments, adopted."

I had thought to spare the Professor the mortification of appearing before the reader as denying the clear and well authenticated historic facts in the case; but since he insists on having made the point that "there is no authoritative record to show that the General Conference of 1841 was authorized to adopt a constitution for the church," I submit these quotations to the readers and rest the case with their good judgment as to whether the General Conference of 1841 was not authorized by the church to adopt a constitution. And also, as to whether the tacit acceptance of it by those in the church at the time of its adoption and the positive endorsement of it by all those who have joined the church since its adoption does not render it of binding force upon all law abiding members of the church.

The Professor says "that the General Conference of 1885 did not in any sense nullify any part of the constitution." But does not the Professor attempt to nullify it in toto by holding that the General Conference of 1841 was not authorized to adopt a constitution? He holds that the General Conference of 1841 did an unlawful thing in adopting a constitution, and that the General Conference of 1885 endorsed their action in creating the commission by authority of the constitution. The conclusion therefore, is, either that his defence of the commission is a defence of the constitution, or that his opposition to the constitution is opposition to the commission, one or the other, or, perhaps both. Who can tell whether the Professor is in favor of the constitution or the commission? The position taken by him that the General Conference has delegated its power to legislate and enact laws for the church, because it has conferred power on church boards to enact by-laws for the transaction of the business of said boards, is certainly too far reaching, extraordinary and impracticable "to be an argument of any logical force" in this discussion. And the statement that the commission is an innocent thing just created to carry out the will of the people is a very modest statement of the case in the face of the fact that the General Conference proceeded to request the people through the commission to have them request the General Conference to change the constitution. And all this procedure in the interest of the dear people against the official action of more than half the annual conferences memorializing the General Conference to make no change on the secrecy law.

The Professor's denial of the long established principle of legislative bodies being under obligation to bear the responsibility of legislation, growing out of the relation which they sustain to their constituents, as their representatives, is so apparently untenable, that the case needs commisseration rather than censure. In our church bishops are authorized to interpret law when there seems to be any ambiguity that would lead to differences in its administration. But this is quite another thing from enacting law. Among other privileges as being delegated in the line of legislation as held by the Professor, he mentions the authority of appointing a day of fasting and prayer. Now, if the commission had proclaimed a day of fasting and prayer to deprecate the power of secretism in the church instead of legislating in violation of the word of God and the constitution of the church to turn the church over to the lodge soul and body, it would have been the instrument of uniting instead of dividing the church.

The Professor assumes that a request of two-thirds of the whole society alters or changes the constitution, whereas the facts are that such a request only confers authority upon the General Conference acting in its legislative capacity to alter or amend it. The General Conference is the only legislative body. Neither the commission nor the people can legislate. The commission has enacted a confession of faith and constitution for a new church. Some of the people will indorse it and go off after it, and others will stay on the old foundation and defend themselves as best they can against the ruin wrought by the commission act.

It is amusing to see commission men and commission advocates trying to state the ground of opposition to secret societies contained in the proposed new constitution. The Professor does as well, perhaps, as any who has tried to defend it. Hear him. He says: "It is the statement of a fundamental principle, just as is the expression, 'he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.'" But this expression is the statement of a fundamental action and not a fundamental principle. He says: "It does not pertain to have to make application of itself to the cases which come under it." True, very true, but where are the cases that come under this law? And how can the judiciary apply it? The rule only advises members of the church to have no connection with secret societies. The judiciary can only apply it as it is; and decide after the case is heard, and it is determined that the defendant is a Mason, an Oddfellow, a Kuklux, a Molly Maguire Knight, a Dynamiter, that he ought not to have connection with such ders. But the judiciary is powerless before these orders to withdraw from those who walk thus disorderly. The Professor says that "Bro. Floyd's remark puts him in the very awkward position of favoring the condemnation of all secret societies without any proof of their guilt other than they are secret. If our church has been going on all these years, as Bro. Floyd's remark indicates that he thinks it has, and still should do, condemning these organizations a priori, I consider it high time to call a halt and get back to something sensible." Well, let us have something sensible then. Here it is: "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame to speak of the things that are done in them in secret." "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? Or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God, as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you; and I will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters saith the Lord Almighty." This is "a priori" reasoning, and in perfect accord with the United Brethren principles.

SHOULD CHRISTIANS ARM AGAINST SECRETISM?

BY NINA HOWARTH.

How lamentable the fact that, in this enlightened age, one single individual can be found whose mind can for even one moment, hesitate upon the question of Christian opposition to the lodge? The question, "Should Christians oppose or resist any form of idolatry and evil," might be propounded with equal consistency and rationality. It seems too strange for belief that the moral sensibilities can become so morbid, the conscience so seared, as not to be able to settle such a question as this when, on the face of the one, stand out in bold relief purity and trust in God, on the other, blasphemy and utter defiance of God and his law.

That there can exist in the mind of any one a doubt of his duty in dealing with Freemasonry and its kindred orders, should crimson the cheek with shame. Even modern infidelity might blush, and Bob Ingersoll, with all his heaven-daring affrontery, might say: "Your duty is, to be consistent with your moral profession. Do not falsify and disgrace those principles which you professedly revere by an exhibition of such palpable ignorance of moral obligation."

Not only the character, but every claim, tendency and design of Freemasonry is diametrically opposed to, and subversive of all the interests of, Christianity. It is a bastard power; hence, in its natural growth, it is an encroachment upon the rights and privileges accruing from legitimate government of both church and state. But when to its natural growth is added every facility, emolument, honor, and advantage in the gift of both church and state, Freemasonry becomes an enginery of evil whose power is fearful. And yet, the world swarms with people calling themselves Christians who may be identified with all the interests of this infamous institution. They are fatally infected with its moral poison, and are languishing in all stages of the loathsome distemper.

In view of the present relation between the church, so-called, and the secret lodges, can we wonder that the amalgamation of both religions is nearly perfected, not only in private but in public?—that, though there is no analogy between the two systems, their influence is tending to the same great result? There is force enough in secretism to sink everything good; but, if you please, take into consideration with it Romanism, Spiritualism, Mormonism, etc., and compute, if you can, the aggregate power opposed to the establishment of Christ's kingdom in the earth. O, ye who love the Lord, tremble!

THE CRY OF THE LABORER HEARD.

Many persons interested in the labor question rightly consider it the well advanced beginning of a new era in the history of industry, but are unaware that it is also a startling epoch in the fulfilment of prophecy. Others, from want of sympathy, or, possibly, lack of observation, failing to even apprehend its synthetical cause, are in a quandary as to the solution of the subject, and doubtful of its ultimate success. To such, and all who desire light, no matter from what source it emanate, I would recommend the perusal and study of the often repudiated and much neglected "sure word of prophecy." As "no prophecy of the Scriptnre is of any private interpretation," I will venture to exercise the scripturally granted prerogative in stating that I believe the present labor difficulties are the direct fulfilment of a most graphic biblical prediction, which the capitalist, as well as the workingman, should heed, as it warns the one and exhorts the other. It is recorded in the fifth Epistle of James, the principal part of which is as follows:

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth," (or Lord of armies, which is certainly indicative of aggression). The period given for the fulfilment of the prophecy is the "last days," for the passage continues, "Be patient therefore, brethren unto the coming of the Lord;" for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh;" also, "Behold, the judge standeth at the door." Indeed, our age seems to be the focal point where the rays of divine prophecy and human prediction concentrate. "To be forewarned is to be forearmed." A movement backed by the Almighty is an assured success.

It is needless, almost, for me to say there has never before been such extensive demonstrations on the part of labor as now. There is no reason to think, and no record extant showing that its ranks were ever so well organized, perfectly systematized and formidable. The laboring element to-day constitute a veritable aggressive army which threatens already to literally eat the flesh of the rich, as it were by fire. Never before have capitalists found themselves virtually, if not completely hors du combat, powerless, bewildered, ready to "weep and howl" in anticipation of the miseries coming upon them, their "cankered and rusty" dollars "kept back by fraud" from "them which have reaped," half-fed and scantily clothed, while their coffers and wardrobes have been so over supplied that the rust of the former as well as the motheaten condition of the latter is a "witness against (them)"—against their shallow and lying excuses of "depressed times," stagnation of business; heavy expenditures, etc.

Not only have the cries of the overburdened laborer entered into the ears of the Lord, but the hire due them: "Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth." Is it not the question of hire that is uppermost among the labor unions, as well as franchise? God and the world say amen to the cry.

With such incontrovertible facts before us, who can doubt that the cries, for centuries, of the oppressed laborer have at last "entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth," aye! have been heard by the Laborer of laborers, the great Master Workman—the Carpenter of Nazareth.

Some one may ask if I believe the Lord sanctions or instigates the offences manifested by strikers. To such I would say, No! no more than I believe he commissioned Judas to betray, or the Romans to execute, the Christ in fulfilment of the plan of redemption and prophecy relating thereto. It was the natural outcome of circumstances. "It is impossible but that offences will come: but woe unto him, through whom they come." The Christian religion has never been exempt from offences and fanaticism. Should we expect this inferior matter of labor to be? The statement is not that God will hear the cry of the guerilla workman; those who do not earn even what they receive, yet cry loudest, and resort to any means to attain their ends—a class of maneuverers who cast continual reproach upon the legitimate cause. Only "the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

Now some of our anti-oath friends will ask if God approves of oath-taking by these labor unions. Most emphatically, No! In immediate connection with the prophecy I have referred to, we find this exhortation: "But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation." The apostle with that God given prophetic vision saw that the ranks of labor would be bound by oaths, therefore warns them against God's condemnation.

In conclusion, let me reiterate that I think no candid mind can doubt God has specially interested himself in the laboring classes, nor that this universal agitation is the fulfilment of prophecy, an epochal figure on the dial of time marking its last hour. The world, in spite of repeated failures, manifests great credulity in the signs or predictions of the astronomical and meteorological systems, but little or none in the signs of the times. Said the Saviour: "O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" D. P. MATHEWS.

THE CHRISTIAN VOTER.

The following is the first of a series of articles from a prominent Covenanter minister on "The Christian Voter:"

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Will you give space in your most valuable paper to a few thoughts on the use of the ballot? You have joined issue with the Christian Statesman concerning the use of the ballot and the abolition of slavery. I have nothing to say on that subject. Let the Statesman fight its own battles, or pull down its flag. But I am after light, and I will ask you a few questions, which you will please answer for the benefit of not a few readers. A non-voting church keeps step with your front ranks in the anti-secrecy fight; and if the difficulties that lie between them and the polls can be explained away by arguments luminous with the Scriptures, you will no doubt add a few thousands to the American platform.

But a word of explanation is first necessary. We do not count voting an evil in itself. It is a right, and it is right except where the condition is wrong. The expression of power and choice by the citizen through the ballot is as Scriptural as it is American, and every patriot must prize the heaven-born privilege of exercising political sovereignty; and it is with deepest sorrow that he beholds himself hindered in this service to his country by sinful conditions that attach to the ballot, as it is now cast for political rulers. Covenanters do not vote; but it is not because of indifference, it is not because of lack of patriotism, it is not because of objections to an electoral government. They are thirsting for the enjoyment of this precious and most responsible right. They thirst but cannot drink, because poison is in the well; so they think. And if you can prove the waters pure and wholesome, you will have two or three more regiments under your flag.

Can a Christian swear allegiance to this government and be loyal to Christ? I will look for light on this question. Loyalty to Christ is the first thing with all consistent Christians. For this they have in all ages sacrificed that which is most dear on earth. Property has gone; political rights have gone; lives have gone, all to keep their fidelity to Christ unspotted. The true Christian accepts the Bible, and with his sacramental oath declares that it will be his guide in all his duties. It is his ultimate standard of right and wrong. In the family, in the church, and in the state he adopts it for his guide. But when he votes a ruler into office, he authorizes that ruler to do his work and swears him to do it according to the United States constitution. Then the official oath becomes the voter's oath, and in it he has adopted another standard of duty—one which ignores the first and in some respects is in conflict with it. Is that Christian consistent in adopting two independent and conflicting standards of moral action to govern his political life? Is not his allegiance to Christ blemished thereby? We have subscribed to the Divine law; and can we subscribe to the human law till it harmonizes with and makes acknowledgment of the Divine standard of all moral duties?

Further questions when this is answered.

"THAT WRONG VOTE."

Fifty years ago, a prominent church in Ohio felt the need of a revival of their "first love," both for their own souls and their unconverted neighbors and children. A faithful evangelist and myself were invited to assist them in a "protracted meeting." Our first work, of course, was to lead the church to "do their first works" so that their prayers for their children and neighbors could be heard. Convictions for sin were deep, both in the church and out, but heart-broken confessions few. The pastor appointed an inquiry meeting and the school house was filled, but no melting of heart. I left it for the church prayer meeting, and stated the sad condition of things—that there must be some reason—that I knew not what it was, and inquired if they knew; that the fault must be with us, not with the Holy Spirit who had revealed his will and yet withheld his heart-subduing and converting power; that he was evidently grieved with somebody. If it was with me, I wanted to know it and repent of it.

An aged deacon, father of the late Dr. B. of New York, deeply moved, arose and said: "Brethren, I think I know what the difficulty is. We all know that intoxicating drinks destroy souls. Some time ago we adopted a rule by almost unanimous vote, not to add to our membership any who used intoxicating drinks as a beverage. Some two or three brethren were not in favor of the rule, and to secure their co-operation in this meeting we repealed the rule, and thus before the world, as Christ's witnesses, we took back our testimony against this, the most terrible of all destroyers of souls for whom Christ died. I believe that wrong vote grieved the Holy Spirit, and that this is the reason why his subduing, converting power is withheld."

Bathed in tears and quite overcome, he sat down. Others followed—all seemed to be of the same mind, and "What shall we do?" was heard on every side amid sobs and tears. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness," was the Gospel answer.

Before the next sermon, a public confession was made and then the church, in presence of the great congregation, by a rising vote, restored their righteous rule to its former place. Then followed a wonderful blessing, both on the church and on all classes of the people. The town had been a stronghold of infidelity, but the power of the Spirit scattered it like chaff before the wind. Family altars were set up on every hand. Not less than one hundred and twenty, it is hoped, were born of the Spirit during that meeting, and the blessing of the Lord still rests upon that church.

I can never forget the solemn facts here recorded for warning and encouragement to some tempted or backslidden soul. Let me ask:

1. Is your prayer for right things "shut out?" Is not your sin shut in, like the sin of that church? "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper."

2. A vote for righteousness is a vote for what it does, for Christ, for souls, for heaven.

3. A vote for sin is a vote for what sin does. A vote for setting fire to a dwelling is a vote for its destruction. No man doubts this.

4. A vote for the continuance of the liquor crime is a vote for what it does, for the destruction of one hundred thousand souls and bodies every year, one billlion four hundred million dollars' worth of property, for 99 per cent of the murders, and 85 per cent of all other crimes.

5. A vote to continue any form of crime, even to save life, is a deliberate vote to disobey God. Luke 9: 24.

6. This is "doing evil that good may come;" an insult to God; next to blasphemy against the Holy Ghost.

7. This "doctrine of devils" has a margin wide as the "father of lies" can wish. Its mask it calls "policy" With Tetzel, "for revenue" to build a great church, it has "graduated license" for adultery, perjury, murder, etc. In our nation, for political votes both the great political parties deliberately vote to continue the yearly murder of one hundred thousand of its citizens. Never were cattle more deliberately sold for slaughter; and this, too, when the professed and sworn witnesses for Christ hold the balance of power.

My brethren, "these things ought not so to be." Were you not converted to something higher than this? Have you not left your "first love?" How long before it will seem "expedient" to go into amusements, secret lodges, obligations or other affiliations where Christ would uot go? He has done too much for you to expect you, by your vote, or otherwise, to lay dynamite in the path of your weak brother that will plunge him into hell.

EVANGELIST.

LINES ON THE DEATH OF PROF. SLOANE.

We wept when sombre tidings flashed
Across from West to East:
"One of the Lord's dear workmen here
Hath entered into rest."

We wept, so sad were we to hear
Another fight was won;
Another palm of viet'ry given,
And gained another crown.

Yet, chide us not though we have wept
That God for him did send;
Though he has gained, yet we have lost,
A pastor, teacher, friend.

'Twas suddenly and in the night—
He was, and he was not:
His spirit walked with God in light.
How blessed the righteous' lot!

No more that pealing voice will sound
That many loved to hear;
But church and country cherish well
Those words of faith and cheer.

No more the scholar hearkens now
To the wise teacher's voice;
We miss that kindly countenance,
And deeply mourn his loss.

Enough—we cannot here disclose
All of the race he run.
"A workman worthy," says his church;
His God hath said, "Well done."

O, fam'ly sorrowful, and friends,
Think, think ye on these things!
Like him, too, tread the path that leads Straight to the King of Kings.

BOYCOTTED.

A few years ago I discovered that Bishop Weaver became intensely opposed to the Christian Cynosure and its editor, and I was puzzled to know why it was, because he had been friendly to the paper and encouraged its circulation among our United Brethren. And he succeeded in driving it from our church, so that very few are now taken by our people, except by some of our independent, thorough-going, anti-secrecy brethren. But now I see clearly that the Bishop saw that the squelching of the Cynosure among our people was a necessary out-post to be taken preparatory to a more direct attack on the citadel of our anti-secrecy principles. That out of the way, he proceeded to labor in a quiet way to turn our people against our restrictive secret societies by appealing to their pride and ambition, making them believe that if we admitted the secret orders into the church, our membership and wealth would be greatly increased.

So, Mr. Editor, we can now see why Weaver turned against the Cynosure; and I never could understand until since the late General Conference why one of our leading bishops should oppose a paper like the Cynosure, so thoroughly in opposition to secrecy—the very thing that we, as United Brethren, professed to be opposed to; but now it is all plain.

Another evidence that our leaders have been laboring to break down our law against secrecy is the fact that our Sunday-school literature has intentionally and persistently ignored the question of secrecy for more than twenty years, so that, so far as the Missionary Visitor or the Children's Friend are concerned, a whole generation of our children have grown up in the church without the knowledge that there is any such thing as secret societies in the world. Is it any wonder, Mr. Editor, that secrecy has crept into the United Brethren church? Is it any wonder that our young people are ready to drop into the lodge? And these men have been pretending to be opposed to secret societies all these years. Was ever hypocrisy more barefaced? W. S. TITUS.

—The Presbyterian clergy of Maryland are moving in the matter of obtaining a change in the State constitution, which debars ministers and teachers from holding seats in the General Assembly.

—There is now a railway in Asia Minor which traverses some of the country in which the Apostle Paul performed his missionary labors. It runs near the sites of several of the "seven churches" mentioned in the Book of Revelation. Trains leave Smyrna three times a day.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS IN IOWA.

EXTRACTS FROM A SPEECH BY BRO. J. SPRINGER.

"By whatsoever name called, this mutual association is older than history: * * * "was born into light when the first men banded themselves against the beasts possessing the earth."

"The grim old secret societies, taught and wrought in the learning of their days; they fell beneath the sword of the barbarian, and the scythe of time and—their secrets perished with them."

He then spoke of the care exercised before the admission of members, of the long probation and the perfections of mind and body, requisite before the coveted position could be secured.

He then referred to the grand story of our prototypes, Damon and Pythias, and gave a stirring account of that event.

Proceeding, he said:

"The old societies of the learned and devoted are the bridges over which was borne the old to the new.

"Without them our antiquity would rise no higher than the grand sires tale; our creation be lost in the dark ages. Even the Christian religion, free as air and sunlight, pervading all the earth, was nurtured in caves, defended by sentinels, propagated under cover of grips, signs and pass words."

Proceeding, he gave a short retrospect to the foundation of the order, and then referred to its progress, claiming that its principles were bound to succeed, and the order must go on prospering, and to prosper.

A dainty lunch was then served, and the rest of the time was spent in dancing, cards and parlor games.

GRAND MEETING IN TORONTO.

Preparations upon a grand scale are now on foot to make the occasion of the next session of the Supreme Lodge of Knights of Pythias of the World at Toronto, July 13th, 1886, the largest gathering and the most magnificent display ever had or made by any secret order on this continent, if not in the world.—Official Circular.

INITIATIONS.

At 8.30 o'clock, all things being in readiness, the Grand Chancellor opened the lodge, and the work of leading the victims to the sacrifice began. Not much of quaking or trembling was visible among the candidates for fame and glory in the path of Knighthood. A large proportion of them, twenty out of the twenty-four, were railroad boys, whose business leads them to be constantly expecting the unexpected: and as for the Pioneer man, his experience in running a country newspaper had brought him to the point of believing that the conspiracies of the world, the flesh or the devil, could bring upon him no worse affliction or more dire disaster.

Recess was here taken for supper, which was evidently needed, and fully appreciated by all, even the candidates being put through a course of sprouts showing conclusively that their appetites had not been impaired to any great extent, whatever else might have happened to them. The night was well advanced by this time, even into the small hours of the morning, and after the grand officers had fortified themselves for the work, and the candidates for the trial, before them, the lodge again came together and the business of third or knight rank was commenced in good earnest, twenty-five of the candidates being passed from the rank of Justice of the Peace to that of full-fledged knighthood.—K. P. Journal.

WESTMORELAND PRESBYTERY AND THE ROYAL ARCANUM.

The following is the report, presented at its meeting at West Newton, Pa., April 15:

"Any secret society comes before us in a questionable shape. We regard all organized secret societies as hurtful to the personal religion of the Christian, as weakening the working power of the church and an injury to the best interests of society. The very fact of their secrecy carries with it logically there is something either in the form or objects which, if known, would bring upon them the condemnation of all right thinking men, and hence the necessity for secrecy. All good works certainly might be accomplished through associations whose forms and purposes are open and known to all. It is only when we are engaged in evil purposes that we seek to hide our works and ourselves as workers in darkness. 'He that doeth evil hateth the light neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved.'

"But while accepting the fact that there is in the organization of the societies some things which we cannot approve, the question which comes before us is, 'Are these of such a nature that the Christian church should exclude the members of these societies from their fellowship? Being secret we do not know much about them, but the following we do know: The Royal Arcanum professes to be a benevolent association, yet it guards terms of admission so that knowingly it admits no one from whom it does not expect to obtain more money than it would have to pay back, and in such form that it can at any time avoid paying money to any one who might need its benevolence, if so desired. Its formula of questions to those seeking admission is such that those who answer them candidly, must hold their self-respect rather below par, and would turn every manly man away from it. Certainly a Christian should not so humble himself for the sake of a little money, and money which he may never get. The obligation which members take in admission is: 'In the presence of Almighty God, and these witnesses, I do of my own free will and accord most solemnly promise that I will strictly comply with all laws, rules and usages of this fraternity established by the Supreme Council of the Royal Arcanum.' Then after specifying many things which the person will do, closes with, 'And should I violate this solemn promise I hereby consent to be expelled from this fraternity, and may God help me to keep and perform all these obligations.' This obligation is essentially the same with the oath. Why a Christian should for a moment wish to be a member of such an association we cannot understand, except it be that he, through the weakness of the flesh, his love of securing money that in some way or other he hopes to get from the association, blinds his conscience to the sinfulness of the means he is using to obtain it. 'It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in men.' Therefore,

"Resolved 1st, That we declare that membership in the Royal Arcanum is inconsistent with the honor which the Christian church should give to Christ and with the profession of the United Presbyterian church.

"2d, That all our pastors and sessions be directed to instruct their members to keep themselves free from the alluring meshes and sinful promises in which this association would entangle their consciences."

VACATION RAMBLES.

OMAHA, April 21.

DEAR CYNOSURE READERS:—A few miles away is Elmira, settled in an early day by sturdy Scotch farmers, few of whom yet survive; but their sons have succeeded to their splendid farms, while others, like the Turnbulls and McBrides, are filling honored positions in the United Presbyterian church. Rev. D. McDiarmid, pastor of the Canadian Presbyterian church, welcomed Bro. Hinman when he gave a series of lectures here a few years ago, and also the writer last fall, in a brief evening address in his church. He is ably seconded in his reform efforts by Brethren William McBride, Donald McDonald, Henry Oliver, and others.

This section is one of the richest parts of the "great Illinois corn belt," and fine farm buildings, groves and orchards testify to God's beneficence as well as man's industry. Southern Iowa, though a rich farming region, seems like a prairie country in comparison.

At Omaha, a hearty greeting from Bro. E. B. Graham, pastor of the United Presbyterian church, was seconded by an invitation to ride through this beautiful and romantic city. In 1864 there were here, on the clay banks of the muddy Missouri, less than 3,000 inhabitants, and the place was best known as one of the starting points for overland wagon-trains. The heavily rolling hills, which soon broke away into the long reaches of plain country, were admired for their beauty, but few believed that they could ever support a vast and prosperous people. The Union Pacific railway soon made the town a city, and now a population of 75,000 crowns these hills with beautiful homes, and the lower levels with fine business blocks. Already Omaha has become celebrated for her public schools, standing third in the country. The High School building stands on the crown of the highest eminence in the city, and is a large and beautiful structure, as well as the most observable object for many miles around. Omaha is a city of churches also. There are nine within two blocks of Bro. Graham's parsonage, and, with the aid of the schools, they are redeeming the city from its reputation of border ruffianism, so that there are fewer police to be seen here than in any city of equal size west of Chicago. The city is expending vast labor in grading the principal streets, which at once gives employment to all who want work and increases the value of the real estate. The thrift of dealers in Omaha property has been phenomenal. Mr. McCague, one of the elders of Bro. Graham's church, began a few years since on a capital of forty dollars. His foresight and energy have increased his wealth more than a thousand-fold.

The United Presbyterian church and its pastor are at the center of important and influential enterprises in religious and political circles. They maintain two missions in the city, and the purchase by him of a two-thirds interest in the Midland of St. Louis will remove the Western organ of the United Presbyterian church to this city, in May. Rev. W. P. McNary, the present editor, will continue to write for the paper and aid in its management. It is partly from ill-health that he has consented reluctantly to part with the controlling interest in an enterprise which he undertook two years ago with enthusiasm and devotion to the church, and has carried on with unusual success. Of Bro. Graham's grand work in saving the prohibition movement in Nebraska from being swallowed whole by the lodge, he promises to write himself. It is a chapter in the history of our reform which will not be forgotten.

Bro. Halin, of the Swedish Lutheran church, and his pastor, Rev. Mr. Vogelstrom, stand shoulder to shoulder with Bro. Graham in these reform efforts; and a call at the fine tailoring establishment of the former is a most encouraging incident of this vacation journey.

My next will be from the other side of the mountains.

VACATION NOTES.

RENO, Nev., April 26.

For the omission of Rev. Rufus Johnson's name in connection with the transfer of the Midland from St. Louis to Omaha, mentioned in my last, I must beg pardon. He has lately sold the Record of Blanchard, Ia., to the proprietor of the Amity Index of College Springs, Ia., a paper of similar principles, though not so earnestly maintained as is Bro. Johnson's wont. This releases him to undertake the office work of the Midland, and Bro. Graham has been most fortunate in thus securing a helper of experience in the newspaper business, and who will warmly maintain those Christian reform movements which the Midland has always advocated. With Graham, McNary and Johnson united, this paper must become the organ of the United Presbyterian church in the West, and a more powerful coadjutor of the Cynosure than ever.

My stop here in this thriving mountain town was, in part, to avoid reaching San Francisco Sabbath forenoon, but also to render what assistance I might be able to a family from Oak Center, Wis., on their way to Los Angeles, whose head, the husband and father, in an insane fit shot himself through the head just before the train reached here Saturday evening. The inquest, burial, and the returning of the widow, with her two small children, will occupy much of the two days of my tarrying. The poverty of the family appealed to the sympathy of all. The passengers raised some twenty-five dollars in a few minutes; the railway agents will do all in their power; the county officers will bear the expenses of the burial, and kindly return to the widow the few dollars found on the body, which they might legally use; the managers of the Depot Hotel have shown every consideration; and the pastor of the Congregational church, Rev. Mr. Spencer, and the ladies of his congregation have given such Christian sympathy and aid as the various lodges of the place would find beyond their power.

The crowds that have been rolling across the continent for the few weeks past have contributed largely to the death-rate of these scattered railway stations. Three men were killed by the train on which I rode, or others in close proximity; and the cases of insanity among the passengers are not so rare as would be supposed. Some recover on being set off the cars a few days; others take themselves out of the world as did the wretched man the other night. How much the prolonged agony of a railway ride, or the dreary and stifling monotony of the plains may contribute to these unfortunate derangements, would be an interesting subject for investigation. The railway companies are not likely to begin it, however much the inquiry would help to prevent the frequency of such distressing occurrences as I have noted. It is a wonder, too, that accidental shootings are not all the while transpiring. Many of the young men are armed with revolvers, which they are continually shooting at rabbits, prairie dogs, squirrels, and sometimes even at the dogs and fowls of ranchmen. It is a wonder that, between their frequent drinks, they do not turn their weapons upon themselves. The folly of this revolver business was nowhere more plainly and forcibly impressed upon me than during this overland journey.

At Reno, I have made the pleasant acquaintance of Prof. Orvis Ring, one of the early graduates of Wheaton College, who seems to be given a life-lease of the public-school management of Reno, so uniformly does he seem to be esteemed by the people. He came to this region before the locomotive, and has seen much of life among these mountain and mines. Under his eye has grown an excellent school system in the place, carried on in three buildings—one a tasteful brick, not yet completed. He speaks with enthusiasm of the visit of President J. Blanchard here a few years since, and of college friends in Wheaton.

Reno is one of the most delightful of towns, but its churches seem to be by no means liberally sustained; and one of them, the Baptist, is at present closed. But the lodges seem to thrive amid the hardy population—Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, United Workmen. But these will be outgrown in time, and the Sabbath will come over the mountains to be welcomed here as among New England homes.

REFORM NEWS.

WOOSTER NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION.

The Ohio State Convention and Annual Meeting of the National Reform Association met in the United Presbyterian church, Wooster, Ohio at 2 P. M., Wednesday, April 21, 1886. The opening exercises were conducted by the Rev. W. Coleman, who also presided over the session of the convention.

The first address was on "The State and Family," and was read by the Rev. S. A. George, of Mansfield, Ohio. He showed the diviue institution of marriage and its importance to society. Both church and state, said the lecturer, are dependent for their true and healthful development on the integrity of the family relationship. In 1884 nearly 1,800 divorces were granted in Ohio, only 17 per cent of which were for the Scriptural cause. Ex-Governor Hoadley says that the legal causes of divorce in Ohio, of which there are ten, may be so construed as to condemn every husband in the State.

The second address was by the Rev. John McNaugher, of Fredericksburg, Ohio, on the topic of "The State and the Sabbath." This was a long and able discussion of a great subject.

The first address of the evening was by the Rev. W. J. Coleman on the proposed Christian Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. After this came an address by the Rev. Prof. D. McAllister, of Geneva College, who spoke on "The Moral Personality of the Nation." The speaker said that a nation and a business corporation had four points in which they were alike. (1) Both are collective bodies. (2) Both are organized bodies. (3) Both are bodies having a continuous and prolonged existence. (4) Both have to some extent moral character and aims. But this is not all, as is generally supposed. They have material and important differences. (1) A corporation is an accident of advancing civilization, and the nation is a necessity of human nature. (2) The corporation is local and temporary, the nation universal and permanent. (3) The entrance to a corporation is a voluntary matter, but we must belong to the nation. (4) The corporation cannot command men, but the nation is clothed with authority. (5) The corporation is the creation of man, the nation is ordained of God. (6) The corporation is accountable to the nation, but the uation is accountable to God.

On Wednesday morning the convention returned to the United Presbyterian church. After devotional exercises, conducted by Prof. McAllister, who also presided over the morning session, committees were appointed. After these were received, the programme was taken up, and the Rev. H. Y. Leiper, of Mooretown, Ohio, spoke ably on "Alcoholism and its Remedy," taking high ground as to the right and duty of the State to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. After this came an able address by Dr. J. P. Robb, of Iberia College, on "American Communism."

In the afternoon of Thursday the convention met in the large Lutheran Tabernacle at 2 P. M. President Brunot, having arrived, took the chair. The address of the afternoon, and, perhaps, in some regards, the most important of the convention, was given by Dr. J. P. Lyttle on the "Relation of Civil Rulers to God in Christ." This discussed the much controverted question as to whether nations could sin, whether they could be pardoned for sin, whether the nation had any relationship to Christ as a priest, and other questions of a like character.

RESOLUTIONS.

The following are the resolutions passed at the National Reform Convention, in Wooster, Ohio, April 21 and 22, 1886:

PREAMBLE.

WHEREAS, Governments are ordained of God, and derive from him their authority to administer justice and to do whatever may promote the moral and physical welfare of the people; and,

WHEREAS, It is proved without doubt from history that no nation can reach and maintain a high moral and material civilization unless its laws are founded on Christian morality; in a word, that the only true abiding life of a nation must be a Christian life constructed on the Christian model. Therefore,

1. Resolved, That the State is a moral person, and as such is responsible for all that pertains to that personality. That this is true is shown,

(a). By the fact that nations hold and treat each other as responsible persons through their legally constituted authorities.

(b). The great writers on the "Law of Nations" broadly affirm this doctrine. Among these are Chancellor Kent, Bouvier, Vattel, Martens, Laferriere, Kluber, Victor Cousin, Heffter, Phillimore, Francis Lieber, Mulford and others.

(c). The Jews are a signal example of a nation treated as a moral person by the Divine Being.

2. Resolved, The above being true, it becomes plain that the duty of the State to acknowledge officially its accountability to Almighty God from whom comes all its dread authority; and to recognize Christ as the Supreme Ruler of nations, and the moral precepts of the Bible as the foundation of all civil law. Manifestly the constitution of the nation, which defines its character, is the proper place for such acknowledgments.

3. Resolved, That the secularization of our government as demanded by a certain class in this country, is practically impossible; for, with few if any exceptions, all civil laws contemplate moral aims and ends. Besides, the cultivation of the morals of the people, thereby securing justice to all, is the highest work for the State.

For the State to refuse all recognition of religious obligations at the demand of the few who deny them is, according to Dr. Lieber, "asserting the liberty of individuals against the rights of the whole people or nation." This, he says, can never be done.

4. Resolved, That conformity by the church and state to the same moral code and the same religious principles is no union of church and state. No State ever has, or ever can, exist without a religion. Neither can a State be atheistic, or agonistic, while the great heart of the people is religious.

5. Resolved, Because the Bible is the only book that reveals how man can be delivered from the love and guilt of sin, it stands unrivalled and is appropriate as an educator.

Let the State give the Bible a place of honor in the public schools and colleges, and the country is safe.

SYLVESTER F. SCOVEL,
J. P. LYTLE.

W. B. STODDARD'S WORK IN OHIO.

LAKEVILLE, O., April 30, 1886.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—During the past week I have spoken at Hayesville, Loudonville, McZena and Lakeville.

At the first and last places the attendance was comparatively small. It was estimated that between four and five hundred were present at Loudonville, and about two hundred at McZena. I secured readers for the Cynosure at all of these places, and trust permanent good has been accomplished. Rev. Up, pastor of the M. E church at Hayesville, stated that he heartily sympathized with our work. Said he: "I have seen its workings in the courts. A friend of mine had a case in which over $1,000 was involved. Everything seemed to be going against him. Although his case was very just, he was likely to lose it. One night a friend came to his house, called him out doors and told him that he was a Mason and understood his case. If he would dismiss his lawyer, employ another whom he designated, and secure such men to assist him, he would win. He accepted the advice. The case was decided as he was told." Rev. Up says he believes the young Methodist ministers are not going into the lodge, and that the older ones are silently withdrawing. We hope this is true.

On the Monday evening previous to my lecture at Loudonville, a Rev. Haithcox had delivered a glorification address under the auspices of the I. O. O. F. of that place. I am told he expatiated at length upon their charity, etc. At the conclusion the Rev. S. P. Long handed him a written request to discuss some of the statements which he had made. So far as I have heard he has not yet replied. Bro. Long will report to Cynosure friends if anything is done.

After the lecture in Lutheran church, at McZena, a gentleman giving his name W. H. Anderson, of Mohaican, came forward, introduced himself, and extended me a cordial invitation to speak in his church. He is a member of the U. B. church at this place. He says: "We are loyal to the anti-secrecy principles of the church." I hope to visit these friends ere long. So our cause moves along.

W. B. STODDARD.

BRO. HAWLEY IN ILLINOIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since I returned from Indiana, I preached twice and gave two lectures in the F. M. church of Aurora, Ill. Bro. Ebey, the pastor, stands firmly with Christ against the infidelity of the lodge, and the pleasure of the Lord prospers in his hands. Sinners are converted and added to the church, and the work of perfecting the saints goes forward. I also gave one lecture in the Swede Lutheran church of Aurora. They were without a pastor at the time, but they have called a minister, who will come to be their pastor soon. The official brethren thanked me in behalf of the church, and expressed the hope that I would favor them with another lecture when their pastor would be with them.

While in Aurora, I was welcomed to the home of Bro. John Gardner, a member of the N. C. A. Board of Directors.

I attended a District quarterly meeting, held by Bro. Clute, the District chairman, at Belvidere, and preached twice. I also preached once in the F. M. church of Winnebago. I gave one lecture in the First Swedish Lutheran church of Rockford, Rev. Peters, pastor. The pastor of the Second Swedish Lutheran church of Rockford was also present. Both of these pastors have fine, massive, brick churches, and a large membership, that they carefully watch over to keep them free from the entanglements of the lodge. I spoke three times at the Bethel chapel, nine miles from Belvidere, and renewed my acquaintance with Bro. F. Barton, the pastor, a friend of former years.

On Monday, the 26th of April, I was at Belvidere, where the Odd-fellows of Northern Illinois were gathered to celebrate the sixty-seventh anniversary of the introduction of Odd-fellowship into this country. There were a number of short speeches before the orator of the day, a gentleman from Chicago, delivered his oration. One of the speakers seemed anxious to make the impression that Odd-fellowship was merely a secular institution, of purely human origin; that it was not religion, and was not intended to be a substitute for the church. On the other hand, the orator of the day declared that Odd-fellowship made man what God intended him to be, and in a very eloquent manner assured his brethren of a happy immortality and a glorious reunion with the 150,000 pioneers that had gone to the tearless heaven to which Odd-fellowship points. Some of the speakers wonderfully magnified Odd-fellowship as the grandest and most glorious charity that had ever been organized. And then, again, we were informed that Odd-fellows paid for the benefits that they or their families received, so that they were not dependent on charity, but could demand the benefits of Odd-fellowship as their right. So it left the attentive listener, who was not supposed to know anything about Odd-fellowship, only what they told him, a little confused; for who could reconcile the idea that Odd-fellowship did not come down from heaven, nor prepare its votaries for heaven, with the assumption that Odd-fellowship makes man just what God intended he should be, and points to a reunion in a tearless heaven with the Odd-fellows that have gone on before? Then the grandeur and glory of Odd-fellowship as an organized charity seemed to fade and, like the illusion of a mirage, to disappear, when we thought of these Odd-fellows as, watching with the sick on a contract, that they should have watchers in return when they were sick, and helping to create a fund from which a sick or disabled Odd-fellow might draw five dollars a week, upon condition that he had paid his proportion into the same fund, from which the other might, in turn, draw five dollars per week

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE COMMISSION.

CLEAREIELD, Iowa.

Prof. C. J. Kephart in Cynosure: "I shall hail with delight the day that witnesses the end of organized secrecy, and to all laudable means to bring about that day I shall gladly lend my support." This is excellent. This good man no doubt means what he says, but we think he is deceived. We feel very sorry for such brethren; there are many such. It is surely not a laudable way to bring about the desired "day" by favoring the commission. Does not Bishop Weaver, one of the leaders of the commission, lecture for the Grand Army?

Z. Warner, one of their leaders, is a known nullifier, and, no doubt, a Freemason. Secretism is the head and tail of the commission. Dr. Davis, in the 4th of March Conservator, calls up some of these sayings of friends of the commission. Hear them: "The constitution is a fraud." "The rule is a stench." "We choose nullification." But for the commission to claim to be in favor of secret societies would soon put an end to in this anti-secret church. Its "proposed article" deceives good and able men in the church, for it claims to be opposed to all secret societies "which infringe upon the rights of those outside their organizations" (clearly implying that there are secret societies that do not infringe upon their rights. We would like to see one), "whose principles and practices are injurious to the Christian character of their members." Here again it is implied that some secret organizations are not injurious to character. The fathers decided these questions right long ago. Hear them: "There shall be no connection with secret combinations"—positive language, no "infringing" in it. When Jesus says "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," it does not mean that we can do as we please except we please to do right, "for he that believeth not shall be damned." We have no right to believe secret societies to be right because we are commanded to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." In Matt. 24: 26 we are told not to believe Christ is in the "secret chambers." It is no secret that Freemasonry (the mother, model and type of all modern secret orders) rejects Christ. They are all "dangers to Christian character," notwithstanding all the "cunningly devised fables" to the contrary. CYRUS SMITH.

SANCTIFICATION AND FREEMASONRY.

WALLA WALLA, W. T., April 17, 1886.

In the Cynosure of April 8th, Rev. D. G. Strong, of Walla Walla, critizes Bro. Michael's plan of ridding the M. E. church of lodgery. Although not approving Bro. Michael's policy, I wish to make a few remarks on Rev. Strong's position. He says that holiness is the only adequate power in this lodge reformation: that those in the enjoyment of heart-purity would have a positive disrelish for lodge affinity, and urges the blessing of entire sanctification in qualifying the believer to quit the lodge. Now, is this not placing the cart before the horse in the doctrine and experience of holiness? Must we not embrace and obey the divine command before we can claim God's choicest blessing? Let us turn to God's Word, which is to be the man of our council in this as in other doctrines. Christ, in his sermon on the mount, teaches that he requires obedience prior to, or at least simultaneous with, our perfect relation to him. Read the latter part of the 5th chapter of Matthew, and mark the relation of the last verse to those commands preceding it, and especially the 34th verse. See also the Apostle Paul, 1 Cor. 6: 17-18. The apostle here teaches that Christians have to come out and be separate before they have the promise of being accepted. Let us also turn to the prophets, for the great apostle says we are built upon the apostles and prophets, with Christ the cornerstone. See Jer. 15: 19: "And if thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth." Now, do not these Scriptures prove that God requires his people to do what is in their power in order to separate themselves from the unfruitful works of darkness? For the promise is to those who are willing and obedient: "And they shall eat of the fat of the land."

Bro. Strong also says "it would be straining a point exceedingly to allow that membership in any of these orders is an offense against either the doctrine or discipline of the M. E. church." Now, if we take the discipline of Wesley's and Watson's sermons as standards, we must conclude differently. See M. E. Discipline, Article of Religion, No. 25: "As we confess that vain and rash swearing is forbidden Christian men by our Lord Jesus Christ and James his apostle." Again, in General Rules, page 32: "The taking such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." Mr. Wesley, in his definition of a "Methodist," says he is one who loves God with all his heart, mind, soul and strength, and his neighbor as himself. Also his sermon, "In what sense are Christians to be separate from the world?" completely knocks the props from under the whole lodge business.

The facts are, lodgery is as much anti-Methodist as it is anti-Christian, and to quietly smooth it over will not heal the breach. Let us, as Christians and true Methodists, gird up our loins, put on the whole Christian armor, and drive the chariot of truth, like Jehu, right into the enemy's ranks. Let us cry aloud and spare not, declaring the whole council of God in the spirit of our Divine Master, who came to bring a sword before peace. Let the fires of reformation burn in our own souls, and show forth its fruits in our lives and testimony, for we have the blessed assurance that God's word will not return unto him void, for the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto the Lord. EXHORTER.

COMMENDATORY.

Rev. J. S. Amidon, of Corry, Pa., writes:

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have taken your paper more than twelve years, and, to my mind, it has been growing better with its growing years. It is certainly exerting a more telling and powerful influence against the secret empire, in its fearless utterances against the enemies of God and man. And I hope it may continue to blow its whistle, ring its bells, and sound its fog-horns until it wakes up a slumbering world to a sense of danger. For which let us pray and labor on until victory crowns our work.

WORK AND WAIT.

A friend in Illinois writes: "The impossibility of thoroughly uprooting any well-grounded evil during the life-time of a single generation, is urged as the reason why such had best be let alone. Does this justify inaction? Most certainly not. Christ and his teachings have been presented to the world for over fifty generations with tremendous power; yet a very small percentage of the human family have received him. The universal acceptance of right ways of thinking should be prayed and worked for. God will not hold us accountable for results if we labor in his fear. He will, however, hold us to strict accountability for our personal position upon all questions where the principle of right or wrong is involved."

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON VII, May 16, 1886.—The Nobleman's Son.—John 4: 43-54.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Jesus saith unto him, Go thy way, thy son liveth.—John 4: 50.

TIME.—January, A. D. 28. Soon after the last lesson.

PLACE.—Cana, a village among the hills of Galilee; and Capernaum, a city twenty or twenty-five miles to the northeast, on the shore of the Sea of Galilee.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Jesus in his own country, vs. 43–45. There is something especially pathetic in the glimpses which we have of Christ's position among his own countrymen and in his own family. He is mobbed in his native village, and even his brethren are sceptics as regards his divine mission. The truth which he uttered on this occasion has been illustrated in the lives of many of his followers;—in Wesley's when refused the church of his birthplace and obliged to make a pulpit of his father's tombstone, as well as by the anti-lodge reformers of the present day,—their course contemned by friends and neighbors; and their names cast out as evil by the very churches in which they were born. It is said the Galileans received him because they had seen his miracles at the Passover feast in Jerusalem, which implies that to them he was only a wonder-worker, unlike the Samaritans among whom it is not recorded that he worked any miracles, but who believed in him with the genuine faith that only springs from heartfelt reception of the truth. "We have heard him ourselves and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world."

2. The weak faith, vs. 47–50. This nobleman is a fair type of humanity generally. Where one man is driven to Christ by the pressure of an inward need, ninety-nine seek him for the mere relief of an outside want. Hearts that have never lifted to God even a silent acknowledgment of his goodness or felt a moment's need of a Saviour from sin, have cried to him in the wildest distress when placed suddenly in circumstances of danger, or when, as in this nobleman's case, one they love better than life is about to be taken from them. Yet Christ is pitiful to even such poor, weak, miserable faith as this. He will not break the bruised reed; but just because he is so pitiful he does not allow the sinner to rest satisfied with such faith, even if he must seem at first to turn a deaf ear to his call. Christ met the suppliant with one of those sharp, lightning-like flashes of truth by which he so often probed the secret life or hidden motives. "Except ye see signs and wonders ye will not believe." It reveals at once just how much faith the father has, and it is that very common kind which cannot trust God without a visible sign of his presence. It is much easier to have faith in God when there is a full bank account than when the last dollar is gone and there is no food in the larder; easier to trust in some striking, outward manifestation of his divine power than in the invisible guidance of his unseen hand. Yet at last the father rises to that supreme stretch of faith required of him. He goes his way, to be met by the glad tidings, "Thy son liveth." Faith comes by hearing, but it is only on the condition that the word heard be translated into the language of active obedience. The more we show our trust in God, the more we prove his loving promises, the more our trust will increase. "Himself believed and his whole house." A great deal more than life for his sick son hinged on that father's faith, and on our much or little faith may hang greater issues than we ever imagined.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Was it characteristic of the Jews to seek after signs? 1 Cor. 1. 22. Will it be so with those deceived by the lodge anti-Christ? Rev. 13: 13, 14.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"Now after two days." The two days mentioned in ver. 40, spent in Sychar, sowing the good seed of the Gospel, and reaping a harvest of souls saved.

"And went into Galilee." The northern of the three provinces of Palestine. In the time of Christ it was one of the finest and most fertile portions of the earth. The Galileans were a moral, intelligent, industrious and enterprising people, possessed of vigorous minds and healthy bodies.

"For Jesus himself testified that a prophet hath no honor in his own country." Trench thinks that his own country means Nazareth, and this verse gives the reason why he went to other cities of Galilee instead of to his old home.

"The Galileans received him," with respect and reverence, but not necessarily with true faith in him as the Saviour.

"Having seen all the things" (the things should be omitted) "that he did at Jerusalem at the feast." The "feast" is no doubt the Passover, of which we read in chap. 2.

"For they also," etc., i. e., the Galileans were accustomed to attend the feasts at Jerusalem.

"Their faith." The faith that led these Galileans to receive Christ was founded on what they had seen and known.

"So Jesus came again into Cana . . . where he made the water wine" (chap. 2: 1–11). Because, having once been welcomed there (1) as a friend or relative, (2) by the miracle which showed forth his glory, he would now be likely to receive a favorable hearing and make more disciples.

"And there was a certain nobleman." Rather, officer in the service of the king, i. e., Herod Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee, who was popularly known as "king" (Matt. 14: 9). He had a palace at Tiberias, the royal city, on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee, a few miles south of Capernaum.

"Whose son was sick at Capernaum," on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee. The distance of Capernaum from Cana was from twenty to twenty-five miles. The report of Christ's return to Galilee had spread, then, over this wide area.

"When he heard that Jesus was come . . . he went unto him." Having heard of his miracles, he saw hope of healing for his child in this great prophet.

"Besought him that he would come down." It marks the minute exactness of the narration, that Jesus is asked to "come down" from Cana to Capernaum, that city on the sea shore being 1,350 feet lower than Cana, among the hills.

"And heal his son." He seemed to feel that Jesus could heal him only by going to him.

"Except ye see signs and wonders." These two words mark the two chief aspects of miracles: signs, the spiritual aspect, whereby they suggest some deeper truth than meets the eye, of which they are in some sense symbols and pledges; and wonders, the eternal aspect, whereby their strangeness arrests attention.

What he taught was (1) that the faith, having its origin and strength in these external signs, was an inferior kind of faith, having less influence on the life and character; while (2) that faith which grew out of a receptive nature, that hungered and thirsted after righteousness, that felt that the teachings of Jesus were divine because they fed the soul and met its spiritual needs, was the higher and better faith.

"Sir, come down ere my child die." Here was an intense earnestness that showed (1) the depth of a father's affliction, (2) that he had made the request, not because he wished to see a sign, but because he believed that Jesus could heal his son.

"Go thy way; thy son liveth." Here is the reward of his faith, and the means to larger faith, as we soon see. Liveth expresses his recovery to health.

"And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken." Here was a step higher in his faith. He not only believed in general in the power of Jesus to heal, but he believed for himself and acted upon his belief. He believed the word of Jesus. He had come nearer the true faith, which is a personal trust in the Lord Jesus.

"As he was going down" (from Cana to Capernaum), "his servants met him." The nobleman had reached Cana late on the same day that he started from Capernaum.

"Thy son liveth." There must have been a sudden recovery.

"Yesterday at the seventh hour"—i. e., at 7 o'clock in the evening, Roman reckoning.

"The fever left him;" it suddenly forsook him.

PRACTICAL.

1. Let us be careful not to dishonor the prophets in our own country—the saints in our own households, the good in our own church, the talent in our own families.

2. Faith in Jesus is never without its reward. Jesus is just as able to heal the sick now as he was 1800 years ago; and he will do it whenever it is best, and in his own way.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled coudition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruptiou, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having uo hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing partles, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both incvitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portlou of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and libertics, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in tbe Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not lu the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and peualties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestlsm, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the straln raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that thls beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by thelr votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we lntend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christlan Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated wlth books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tarlffs and taxes as rapidly as the nccessitics of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be lmmediately suppressed by law, and tbat the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Advcntists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1886.

THE LIVING WAY, instead of dying, as its enemies hoped, when Brother Countee opened its columns to the discussion of the secret orders in the South, presents an improved appearance from week to week, both in the ability of its writers, and the style of its execution. Its tone against the secret lodge system "bates no jot of heart or hope." Prof. Woodsmall gives an able and interesting programme for a Baptist preachers' and deacons' Bible institute to be held in June in Memphis. "Devil-Worship in Africa" is one of the topics to be discussed. All Christless worship is devil-worship, and idolatry is practiced in Christian countries, as well as in heathen.

The eight hour system would doubtless be admitted to a fair and full trial but for its complication with socialism. It seems that thirty years ago eight hours were made a full day's labor in Australia, and that the plan has been kept up since. It is a pity more light has not been thrown on that experiment by the public press. Every humane person must wish labor minimized to the lowest amount consistent with the life and well-being of society; and nothing but experiment will find and show what that point is. The greater or less profits of employers is trivial compared with the good of the whole: and if the Sabbath could be restored, and saloons and lodges put out of the way, good might come by shortening the hours of a man's labor. But the idle man's head, with whiskey, is the devil's workshop surely.

Prof. Bailey and M. N. Butler are expected at the convention of the American party in June 18 prox. Chairman Capwell, Mr. Britten and others will of course be there. It is significant that no organ of the Prohibition cause has given one word against dropping or sloughing off secrecy and fusing with the American party. A clean majority of the great St. John Convention July 23, 1884, at Pittsburgh, appeared, by their reception of our committee, to be indifferent to secretism or in favor of our American platform. In Washington we could not learn that the temperance lodges gave the prohibition ticket a single adherent.

SOUND ADVICE.—"In view of the attack of the Catholic church in Canada, and in view of the popular prejudice against secret political societies, or to societies that may become political, the Knights of Labor would make a point by coming squarely into the light of open organization. There seems to be no good reason why they should not do this."—Inter-Ocean, April 30.

This is but one of many press tokens that the general emeute of laborers in the United States is turning popular attention to secret societies and making them unpopular. The Inter-Ocean's advice is sound, and if wise for the Knight's of Labor to cast off secrecy, how much wiser for the Prohibition party to insist that its secret lodge wing shall do the same thing, and so put all its members on a level?

ATTI-SECRET POLITICS.

"In 1884 the convention at Monmouth, Ill., put the name of John P. St. John on the ticket of the American party for President. Were the Blanchards, who were mainly instrumental in this, guilty of inconsistency?"—Birmingham (Iowa) Free Press.

Our Chicago convention, which nominated Pomeroy (June, 1884), sent a committe of seven to bear greeting of the American party to the Prohibition convention, Pittsburgh, the next month, July 23. We met there, and President C. A. Blanchard asked our candidate, Senator Pomeroy: "What will you do if this convention nominate St. John?"

Mr. Pomeroy replied: "St. John said to me before witnesses, after my nomination: 'I stand (or can stand) on every plank of the American platform;' and it is absurd for two men to be running, side by side, on the same platform. If, therefore, this convention nominate St. John, I shall ask leave to withdraw."

Besides what he said to Mr. Pomeroy, Gov. St. John has written, perhaps, a hundred letters to different individuals, saying he "had not been in a secret lodge for about thirty years," and in some of the letters added: "I shall never enter another." These letters were private, and so were not published. It was near August; the election was but little way ahead. We had no candidate. The central committee did not move to call another national convention, for Mr. Pomeroy had not published his withdrawal. There was no hope of electing our candidate; only produce a moral effect on the country and prepare for future action, as an American party. St. John had broke with the lodge, what were we to do? This is what we did do:

1. "The Blanchards" corresponded with Prof. Bailey, of the American, and others, and in Monmouth, Ill., and Washington, Iowa, moved to put St. John's name at the head of the American ticket, which carried in both conventions.

2. We got out an electoral ticket at Marshalltown, Iowa, which the Iowa Prohibitionists declined to do.

3. We helped swell the St. John vote to 150,000, and by mixing the American and Prohibition votes together we spread the knowledge of the American platform to thousands who had never heard of it. We enraged John B. Finch & Co. by presenting our American platform in the great Pittsburgh convention, and we kept the integrity of our principles and purity by voting for St. John as an avowed American. Whoever thought we had "sold out," John B. Finch and the few Masons in the great Pittsburgh convention did not. We saw Daniels, and learned that he belonged to no secret order.

We are now prepared, when the time comes, to go into an American nominating convention, and the Cynosure will support the nominees of such convention provided the said nominees stand square on the American platform, and are good worthy men.

"But why did not St. John come square out and accept our nomination?"

Ans. He has not told us why.

He has since been speaking over the whole country against the liquor crime, and has reached thousands who would never have heard him had he been billed as our American party candidate against the lodge. Perhaps, however, he should have done so; made a martyr of himself and looked to God for the martyr's reward. But we know no Scripture which commands us to force men into martyrdom. As it was, St. John was hung by the neck, and photographed over the country with his neck stretched a foot long. We Americans, who own houses, might sell our houses over the heads of our families, and use the money to spread our principles, and do much good by such self-denial and heroic sacrifice; and we should do so before we would worship devils in a lodge. But we should hesitate to denounce others for not making thankless beggars for the good of our cause.

In short, the Cynosure is entirely in accord with The Free Press and The American, whose recent able editorial set the reasons of the past and our purposes for the future in a just and reasonable light.

As our annual meeting, next June 17th, approaches, everyone interested in the reform should send suggestions and prepare to attend the meeting. Secretary Stoddard is hoping for a strong representation from the South; and the Knights of Labor are arousing public attention to our cause.

"THE CHRISTIAN VOTER."

A writer in this issue, page 3, under the above heading, asks: "Can a Christian swear allegiance to this government and be loyal to Christ?"

Answer:—Not the same fealty and allegiance to both. "Christ alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath left it free from the commandments of men."—Presbyterian Form of Government. As Christians, we are bound to "bring every thought into obedience to Christ." As citizens, we swear to "render to Cæsar the things of Cæsar," not "the things of God;" and the moment Cæsar demands of us, not pennies but sins, he loses authority and we "obey God rather than man." So of all human institutions. Children are to obey and, if required, swear or promise to obey parents, till parents require sin: then they must obey God. If imperfections and inconsistencies even made obedience sinful, there could be no families and no governments; for none are perfect.

The United States Constitution is the best there is—far better than Nero's, which Paul and Christ recognized as "ordained of God." It secured trial by jury to every man, white or black, whether the thing in question was his horse, his hog, or himself. But that same constitution sent back slaves without jury trial. We swore to and voted under the constitution, not its inconsistencies, as a child is to obey his father sober, not drunk. And the right and duty of private judgment is the foundation and fountain of all rights. Conscience is not, must not, can not be forced.

Christ and his apostles paid taxes to heathen governments, and taught Christians to pray for "kings and all in authority," though heathen. But they would not worship their gods, nor obey laws which required crimes or sins, even from Daniel down. But when Garfield swore on his mother's Bible to "defend the constitution and administer the laws," he swore the whole constitution into the Bible, and the whole Bible into the constitution, bating false interpretations, translations and imperfections, of which every man must at last be his own judge. And now that every voter is a ruler, every text which requires him to rule with diligence commands the Christian to vote.

We give the above in compliance with the request of an esteemed brother, whose article we print, without committing the Cynosure to further discussion of the theme.

AMERICAN CIVILIZATION.

"Our civilization is the bullet, and the policeman's club." "The fountain of right is might." "Let working men arm." "Private capital reyresents stolen labor."

The above mottoes were carried in a procession of 4,000 men, on Sabbath morning, April 25, in the city of Chicago, under seven blood-red flags, which mean war to the knife, and the knife to the hilt, and was borne along a huge tun or beer hogshead, gaily ornamented.

In China the birth of a little girl leads to a parental council, whether to save or murder the child. In the United States child-murder is confined to brothels, saloons, and lunatics; and those who murder infants the law hangs, as it does other murderers. And the civilization where labor and laborers have the best, if not the only chance, that of England and the United States, is the civilization on which the bitterest wrath is poured out. In England a born Jew, whose race is the foot-ball of the nations, has been Prime Minister; and in the United States the fact that a man has split rails, and run a river scow, aids his chances to become President.

It would be an edifying report, could the facts have been carefully gleaned, how many wives were beaten, how many children driven out, and how many of these patriots from foreign lands were too drunk to do either, on the night of Sunday, April 25. Poor oppressed and starving laborers, decked with ribbons and drunk with beer!

But our danger is not from such. From Jack Cade to the Chartists, tongue-valiant victims of idleness and vice have exhorted laboring men to "arm," seize property and murder its owners. But such movements are and have been mere hypocrisy and sham. Capital made the beer which they drank on that Sabbath, and the casks which contained it; the cloth which they wore, and the thread and needles which sewed it into garments. Folly and absurdity are no names for such madness. They never can succeed, till laziness can whip industry; drunkenness, sobriety; and vice becomes stronger than virtue.

Our danger is the invisible forces, evil agents, "principalities, powers, wicked spirits in high places," against whom we "wrestle." These are the gods of secret orders, which run the labor organizations; and Christ said their chief was both liar and murderer, from the beginning, yet capable of seeming "an angel of light." These made the crusades, which made Palestine and South Europe one vast graveyard of sincere but deluded pilgrims. They were "knights," "troubadours," "saints" and what not, brave without courage, and religious without virtue, and turning the church of St. Sophia into a religious brothel, they slept on the tomb-tables of dead saints of that Saviour who denounced fornication and restored marriage, whose sepulchre they would wrest from the Turks.

These are the men whom we have to fear. They are the Fifth Monarchy men of Cromwell's day, and of all ages; who took off gates by night to make the world a common. They will take property from those whose industry has earned and whose prudence has saved it, to put it into the hands of the thriftless, weak and improvidential; or, worse still, into the hands of the State, to be run by political hacks and pot-house politicians.

In all these Socialistic organizations there are secret initiations, oaths and worships, which put the few sensible men who stray into them into an attitude to receive those devils who entered the Magdalene and infested the Gadarene demoniac. Then these good men and brave, like Cromwell's Major Harrison, and his crew, become at once dangerous and desperate. They are the best men "spoiled and corrupt into the worst."

We read in the Apocalypse (Rev. 16: 13) that John "saw three unclean spirits, like frogs"—teaching forces, out of the mouth of the devil direct: one out of the mouth of the false prophet, or Mormonism of all ages; and the other out of the mouth of the beast, or false religious worship, invented by men. These frogs live in air or water, church or world, and are at home in each, as we have seen in ponds and puddles in our boyhood. We are told, too, what these frogs are; that they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth to the kings of the earth and the whole world." We are told, too, that the inhabitants of the earth, not Christians, shall make an image of the false religious beast, or secret empire, which shall become so popular and powerful that "none may buy or sell" who have not that beast's mark or that of his image. He must join their "union", or starve.

Now that spurious religion is that beast; that Mormonism is the creation of a false prophet; and that the secret lodge empire bears their image needs no proof but bare inspection; and that they intend none shall work or do business who do not join their union, and receive their mark, need no proof but the news of the day.

Now these pictures are certainly startling; and, though prophecy is generic, and no Scripture is of any private particular interpretation, it surely looks as though men who can sympathize with the Godless, Christless, Sabbathless, drinking, swearing men of April 25, and yet walk and talk and pray with Christians, have the spirits of frogs, and can live in one element as well as another.

But what is to become of Jay Gould and the water-stockers who grind the faces of the poor? Ans. Pronounce on them the woes which are written in that Book. The rich and the poor meet together. The Lord is the maker of them all. They are alike sinners, to be saved by grace. But if there are only two worships on earth, Christ's and Satan's, and if the Apocalypse, though pictorial, is a true book, then we are nearing what John saw, while in the Spirit on the Isle of Patmos, when the "cities of the nations fell,"—the homes of these devil-worshiping organizations: "And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven; and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great." Rev. 16: 19, 21.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION VS. CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION.

The following extracts from the address to the workingmen by the Central Labor Union shows the real animus of the secret-cut labor organizations:

"The laboring class will not be free from the existing state of misery and want until the means of life, the land, the means of production, etc., have become the property of the people. Then there will be no ruling and no ruled class, no possessing and no starving class, but only a class of workers enabled to enjoy life.

"Therefore, workingmen, organize, and fight the present capitalistic system. If you are willing to do so, it is of importance that you should not hesitate. And, still, to-day the working classes rather support this system than battle against it.

"For instance, you pay moneys and dues to churches, and support the preacher, who praises this damnable system of society as an institution created by God. Therefore, workingmen, away from the church and organize.

"Workingmen, join the unions of your respective trades, and with them join the Central Labor Union. If there is no organization of your trade in existence, apply to the Central Labor Union, 54 West Lake st., and organize one with its assistance. Organized, you can introduce the eight-hour work-day, abolish the abominable piece-work, and thereby take the first step to your emancipation. Shun the preachers and the capitalistic press, and subscribe for and read your own organs here in Chicago—the Arbeiter-Zeitung and Alarm, and make war upon the existing miserable state of affairs, and secure your rights and independence."

It will be seen that the "war" is not against capital merely, but against all individual property whether in land, house or home. It is a war against civilization, and that upon which all civilization rests—the Christian religion. We do not believe that the great mass of those who compose these labor unions are ready to make war on all right to personal property, on all law and all religion. We doubt not that many are thoroughly honest and well-intentioned towards the body politic. Some, as it is intimated, are members of churches, and have abiding faith in the teachers of the Gospel; but the leaders are not such.

There is, perhaps, no more striking evidence of the power of him whose coming is "with all deceivablness of unrighteousness in them that perish" than such organizations and declarations. They have evidently received those strong delusions that they might believe a lie. To all honest laboring men we would say that the remedy for their burdens is not in sapping the foundations of the social fabric, nor is the attempted overthrow of Christianity, the Sabbath and other Christian institutions, but rather in their maintenance and enlargement. There never was so good a friend of the laboring man as the Divine Carpenter of Nazareth. There was never a system so well calculated to secure the highest blessings to all the sons of toil as the Gospel which he proclaimed. Defective as our representative Christianity questionably is, it is the light of the world and the hope of humanity. The leaders in this movement, the men who published the foregoing address, are, whether consciously or by virtue of being deceived, the worst enemies of the working man and of all conditions of society. The problem of social improvement may rightfully engage the attention both of the laborer, the legislature and the minister of religion, but it is to be worked out not by Sabbath desecrations, fulminations against the present order of society, and not by secret conspiracies against the uninitiated, but rather by temperance, patience and appeals to reason, and to the enlightened moral sense of the people. Our greatest danger is from these blind leaders of the blind. If their counsels prevail the streets of our great city will run with blood, and the condition of all men, including the laborer, will be inconceivably worse.

SATAN RESISTING SIN.

We see it stated in the city papers that in case of any outbreak against the civil authorities, of which there has been threatenings, there are several armed and trained bands outside of the regular military bodies to which the city government might appeal. For example, there are the Knights of Pythias, all armed and drilled, which are said to number more than 7,000. The Patriarchs militant are, perhaps, equally worthy of being considered, while the Knights' Templar have exhibited the vastness of their numbers and military proficiency on many occasions, and notably in the summer of 1880, when all Chicago was captured by them, and the saloonkeepers are said to have received one million dollars as their compensation for inspiring enthusiasm.

It seems to us, however, that inasmuch as membership is often held in common in these orders, and that they are all children of the same parentage and have principles and sympathies altogether alike, it would be a somewhat unnatural, if not hazardous, thing to expect to put down one kind of secret orders by aid of others. Conspiracy is not likely to be put down by conspirators, and the men who secretly arm and drill, whether socialists or knights, are deserving of that title. We trust we may never have occasion to call on the military power to repress lawlessness in our city; but should such contingency arise, it will not be the men who are secretly sworn to their order, and who are fighting in its name, that the people will look to for protection, but rather to those who have a single allegiance.

THE GREAT DANGER.

"The greatest danger of the working people in this country just now comes from the widely prevalent notion that a crime committed in behalf of the cause of labor is excusable and should not be punished. That idea has to be got rid of at any cost."—Law and Order.

But whence this mistake? It is not to be inferred that laboring people have a lower standard of morals, or are disposed to be worse citizens than the non-producing classes. Nor is there any evidence that the severity of their suffering is such that they are forced into crime as a means of securing the necessaries of life. The fact that all over the land there is a demand for shortened hours of work, and frequent strikes when there is no complaint on account of wages, shows that it is neither lawlessness in the ordinary sense nor the oppression of employers that has "filled the land with violence" and crime. The mistake comes from supposing that the "order" of the organizations of which they are members is sufficient warrant for any act that it requires. They have taken an oath or solemn pledge to obey such "order," and they hold that such a covenant is morally binding. In this the labor organizations are not peculiar. Other societies that are merely speculative, and which include some distinguished citizens and ministers of religion, have set the example of such subjection, and done much to educate the public mind to the idea that individual responsibility is merged in that of the organization. As the soldier who simply executes the command of his officer is not supposed to be morally responsible for his acts, so those who obey the command of their orders plead, and believe in, a like exemption. The mistake is in suffering such organizations to exist. There is no human authority that has a right to command the intelligent adult but the State, nor even then except in subordination to Divine law. So long as men of influence set the example of membership in oath-bound fraternities organized on despotic principles, they have no right to wonder that men commit crime in the name of their union and think they are excused. It is this idea that must be "got rid of at any cost.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the National Christian Association will (D. V.) occur as provided by by-law No. 4, at 221 W. Madison street, Chicago, on Thursday, June 17th, approx. Official notice will doubtless appear next week.

J. P. STODDARD, General Agent.

Not only corporate members, but every friend of the cause should make a note of this, and where possible, arrange to attend this important annual gathering. J. P. S.

The Chicago Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will, D. V., meet at the hall on the second floor at 221 W. Madison street, May 10, at 7.30 P M. An addres by Rev. J. P. Stoddard is expected. All members and the public are invited to attend.

A few years ago laboring men struck for piece-work. They thought it altogether unjust that men should not be paid in proportion for the work that they accomplished. Now, under the inspiration of secret unions, they strike against it, and demand that all men shall receive the same pay, irrespective of their ability or willingness to labor. The outcry of the Socialists at their meeting of Sabbath, the 25th, was: "Down with piece-work! Let us have eight hours a day for all!" Such is the demoralization that lodgeism inspires.

The Board of Directors of the N. C. A. met at their hall, 221 W. Madison street, at 10 A. M., Saturday, May 1st. The meeting was called to order by the president, Rev. J. Travis, and prayer was offered by Rev. J. L. Barlow. Reports were made by the secretary, the treasurer, and the general agent. It was voted to hold the annual meeting on Thursday, the 17th of June, at this hall, and to have an evening session for public addresses at some more commodious place. It was also voted that the American party be granted the use of the hall for a meeting on Friday, the 18th. A considerable amount of miscellaneous business with reference to reform work in different States was transacted.

The attention and space given to the consideration of the question of the Constitution and Commission of the United Brethren church, as they are related to the secrecy question, has been of interest to our readers generally, but more to those connected with that people. We think, however, it concerns us rather to know what is in harmony with the commands of God than with any rules and principles of human devising, however excellent. Whatever may be true about the validity of the present Constitution of the U. B. church, or of the right and duty to frame a new one, it is none the less true that the Great Constitution from which all others get their validity says, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." We suggest that we should give more attention to this Constitution, and relatively less to that of a religious denomination.

The Knights of the Golden Eagle is a secret order founded in Baltimore, Md., 1873. It has for its main object, says its organ, to promote benevolence. "The ritual of the order is, perhaps, unexcelled for beauty and impressiveness, and consists of three degrees, viz.: First, or Pilgrims' Degree; Second, or Knights' Degree; and Third, or Crusaders' Degree, and has for its theme the aims and struggle of the Christian warrior to gain the immortal crown. Its impressive lessons are calculated to lead men to a higher and nobler existence, and teach them the principles of fidelity, valor and honor. Any person to become a member must be a white male, twenty years of age or upwards, of good moral character, sound mentally and physically, a believer in a Supreme Being, and sign his own application for membership." We want to suggest an infinitely better order. In the society, of which Christ Jesus is head, there is neither male or female bond nor free. It teaches true and not spurious benevolence, and leads all its members to "fight the good fight and lay hold on eternal life." The above is one of the devil's substitutes by which he seeks to entrap those not rooted and grounded in the faith. To be a Christian warrior and gain the immortal crown is surely a noble object, but it will never be obtained by any such methods. May God save his people from these innumerable devices of the wicked one.

This [illegible] texts represent a Christian, one that has a hope in Christ, and he purifies himself; he goes to Christ and asks him to wash his heart and make it whiter than snow. Christ says, in John 15: 2: "Every branch in me that beareth fruit, he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit." Here is branch bearing fruit representing the young convert. Then the Father purges or sanctifies it that it may bear more fruit. Yes, John Wesley said that one sanctified soul was equal to ten justified ones in the work of God. Now, young convert, don't you want the blessing of holiness, so that you may have a powerful influence for good? Then consecrate yourself and all you have anew to God, and pray earnestly and believe for it and you shall have it. Christ, in speaking of the Holy Ghost, said to his disciples: "For he dwelleth with you and shall be in you." St. John 14: 17. The disciples were not sanctified and filled with the Holy Ghost until the day of Pentecost. St. Paul said, in addressing the little church of Ephesus: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" Acts 19: 2 St. Paul understood well the Divine order of work in the church; first, pardon, and then the Divine nature imparted, and he was constantly urging the church forward to higher attainments. It is written in 1 John 4: 17: "Herein is our love made perfect that we may have boldness in the day of judgment, because as he is so are we in this world." This text plainly teaches a state of imperfect love, and a state of perfect love. Holiness teachers do not teach angelic perfection; no, it is Christian perfection; a heart full of love Divine like that of the Son of God, and is a most glorious experience, O hallelujah! The old man of sin crucified, dead and cast out, thank God! The Bible is full of texts representing the church as holy and separate from sinners. God said to the Jewish nation: "If ye will obey my voice and keep my covenant, ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation." Exod. 19: 5, 6. David says, in praying for purity: "Purge me with hyssop and I shall be clean, wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." Ps. 51: 7. Some ministers will read this text and then sing it once again, and turn right round and preach from the pulpit that we are all sinners; we cannot live without sin (I would either believe it or I would stop singing it). From such teachers will the Lord deliver his people. God says to the Jewish church in Is. 1: 25: "And I will turn my hand upon thee; and purely purge away thy dross and take away all thy tin." Just so to-day. God will cleanse and purify every one of his children, and purge away all the dross of the old Ademic nature, if we will consecrate all we have anew to him, and pray earnestly for the cleansing blood. Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist, while filled with the Holy Ghost, said: "That he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our life." Luke 1: 74, 75. This text alone is sufficient to forever shut the months of those who teach that we cannot be sanctified until death. St. Paul says: "But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness and the end everlasting life." Rom. 6: 22. In Eph. 4: 24 it is written: "And that ye put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." How much sin is that left in man's heart when he is created after God in righteousness and true holiness? In Heb. 10: 2 it is written: "The worshipers once purged should have no more conscience of sins." That is true; when sanctified wholly we no longer feel the remains of the Ademic nature rising up to trouble us, but we feel a sense of inward purity and holiness. The apostle Peter says, in summing up the church: "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people." 1 Pet. 2, 9. Now, in the face of all this Scripture, how dare any minister of any denomination say that we are all sinners and yet in some way we will get to heaven. In the Bible the Lord nowhere calls his church sinners. They are called disciples, friends, Christians and saints.

MISSIONARY WORK ON THE CONGO.

Whatever may be the ultimate results, from a political or commercial point of view, of Stanley's most recent successes upon the Congo, and the establishment of its free State, there can be no doubt whatever that the impetus given thereby to missionary effort in equatorial Africa will be immense, and the gain to humanity and civilization simply incalculable. At one time it was believed, and not so very long ago, that the natives of the vast region now for the first time explored, were among the most savage and barbarous of their race. Some went even so far as to affirm that they were altogether beyond the reach of any humanizing influence whatsoever, and, in fact, were "utterly irreclaimable." But enough has already been done by this indefatigable and dauntless traveler to dispel forever such an illusion. It is true that during Stanley's first descent of the Congo, in 1876–7, they menaced his party, as he himself admits, "with unaccountable ferocity," but the reception they gave him on his return was altogether of a different nature, and the most cursory perusal of his interesting narrative will be sufficient to show that under kind and judicious treatment the Central African yields to none in his general tractibility and in his keen appreciation of the advantages likely to accrue to him from a friendly intercourse with the white man. The dominant thought, indeed, of the Christian reader, as he turns over the pages of these stirring records, is one which the Saviour's own figurative language has most fittingly expressed: "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

In 1877 a small band of missionaries, sent out by the Baptist Missionary Society, successfully established themselves where in times gone by Christianity in another form had seen so many trials and triumphs under the Portuguese, in the ancient capital of San Salvador. Since that time there has been a generous rivalry between this and the various other religious bodies whose representatives are toiling nobly in this vast field for their Master's cause. Following closely upon the steps of the International Association's expedition, whose province it was to acquire the requisite knowledge and to otherwise prepare the way for enterprise of every kind, we see these devoted missionaries zealously commencing and extending the good work in which it was their purpose to engage, utterly regardless of both danger and difficulty. To all of them alike Stanley gives the due meed of praise. "The English Baptists," he writes enthusiastically, "have carried the banner of peace up the Congo beyond the equator; and the American Baptists, taking up the work begun by the Livingston Congo Mission, are urging on the civilizing work side by side with their English brethren. London and church missionary societies have planted their Christian flags on Lakes Victoria and Tanganyika. The African Lakes Company and the Free Kirk of Scotland are earnestly at work on Lake Nyassa, and are advancing to Lake Tanganyika." From all these bodies, as he elsewhere remarks, "pious missionaries have set forth devotedly to instill into the dull, mindless tribes the sacred germs of religion; but their material difficulties are so great that the progress they have made bears no proportion to the courage and zeal they have exhibited." So much the greater honor that they have accomplished, so much.—The Quiver for April.

BISHOP TAYLOR AND AFRICAN MISSIONS.

Some time ago, Bishop Taylor, of the Methodist church, undertook to establish a missionary colony on the Congo river. We give below a reinforcement of this colony.

A second detachment of missionaries sailed on Saturday by the City of Chester for Liverpool, whence they will go by steamer to the mouth of the Congo river and the West African coast to reinforce Bishop Taylor's party, that left New York a year ago. The missionaries carry with them a small cargo of dry-goods, canned food, farming implements, Bibles, tracts, hymn-books, rifles and shot-guns. It will take them nearly three months to reach the Congo. On their arrival they will be met by Bishop Taylor, and the leader of the party will then receive directions and sealed instructions as to their ultimate destination. This, it is expected, will be about 500 miles into the interior of Africa. They will sail up the Congo as far as navigation will permit, and then go the remainder of the way with teams or on foot.

A number of the party are from the far West, having been brought up in Oregon and used to roughing it there. The party number in men, women and children twenty persons. Two of them are ministers and two of them are physicians. One young woman, a Miss Britain, is just from a ladies' seminary, and an older woman, Mrs. Cliff, has been a missionary among the Indians. A colored man in the party named Judson was graduated several months ago from a university. The others are mechanics, farmers, a surveyor and a school-teacher. The Rev. Mr. Shoreland, Dr. and Mrs. Clark Smith and four children and Surveyor Burr are from Oregon. The Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Cooper are from Wisconsin, Dr. Harrison and Missionaries Cameron, Walker, Steele, and Mr. and Mrs. Elkin are from Ohio. A Mr. Bakes is from Brooklyn, and Mr. Starter from Missouri. They will be divided into parties of two or three among the natives, a distance of 100 miles from each other, so as to establish a chain of stations across the continent of Africa. Each of these stations will be visited at intervals by the ministers and physicians, and the farmers and mechanics will go to work teaching the natives how to cultivate the land in a civilized manner, how to read and write and the principles of the Christian religion.

The first party of more than a hundred are now colonized in Africa, and by the latest reports are doing well. The accounts state that with a little attention to the simple rules of health, and by occasionally taking quinine, it is as easy to become acclimated in Africa as in the United States. All the missionaries are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and have been specially selected for this expedition. The work is supported by voluntary contributions. During last week a farewell conference was held daily for the missionaries at the Central Methodist church, in Seventh avenue, of which the Rev. Bidwell Lane is pastor. The meetings were crowded. They were conducted by the Rev. Drs. J. P. Newman, J. M. Reed, S. R. Day, B. M. Adams, J. N. Fitzgerald, Asbury Lowry, and other prominent ministers of the Methodist Episcopal churches.—Midland.

A STRONG BROTHER.

"Run out to the shed,little one, and bring a bit of wood for mother. I'd go myself, only father will be here to supper soon, and I'm in a hurry. Only a little—you're such a mite of a thing."

Kitty was proud of being asked to do such a big thing, and toddled out with lively steps. Plenty of light wood lay in the shed, and she could have carried a few of the small sticks very easily. But the little girl wanted to do great things, so she piled some of the sticks of hard wood on her arm, and struck out bravely for the house.

But poor little girl! they grew heavier every short step, and before she was well out of the shed one stick went one way and one another, and then the whole went down. But she picked them up again and tugged on.

"Don't bring so much, darling," called the mother, catching sight of the toiling little figure. "Bring only two sticks."

But Kitty did not like to give up. With uncertain little steps she kept on until she struck her foot against a small stone. And then lassie and wood and all went over.

Mamma was about to go and help her when her brother Jim came around the shed into sight. He was ready for his supper, and would have passed Kitty without much notice if he had not caught a glance at the woebegone little face.

"Ho, little sister, what's the matter? Hurt your foot? Such a heavy load! Yes, too heavy for Kitty. But brother's big and strong. See now!"

He flung the wood over one arm, and held out his other hand.

"Take hold!" With a warm, strong grasp he took her hand, and suiting his steps to hers, led her along with petting and encouraging words.

And the tears came into mother's eyes as she watched the two. The way is long and the burden heavy for others than little Kitty. But an Elder Brother stands close beside the over-burdened pilgrims, ready to lift the loads of care and grief, and with his strong right hand to lead and support over rough paths; all the while giving words of loving sympathy and cheer to weary sorrow-worn hearts.

The mother could not have said all that she felt to Jim. But the touch of her hand on his head was very tender as she whispered: "You're a real help and comfort to Kitty and me."—Sydney Dayre, in N. Y. Observer.

THE SENTINEL.

"Mamma," said little Earnest Brooks, who was standing by an open window overlooking a number of fields in which the young corn was beginning to show itself, "mamma, I wonder why that rook sits so still on the very top of the highest tree in the row; I have watched it for ever so long and it has not moved. Why does it not go down into the field where the others are?"

"Where is it, Earnest?" asked his mother. "O, I see it now! It is a sentinel."

"A sentinel, mamma? What is that?"

"It is keeping a look-out, so that no enemy may approach the others. If anyone came in sight it would call to those in the field, and then they would fly away before any harm could befall them."

"But, mamma, rooks cannot talk; so how can it tell the others?"

"They do not talk as we do, Earnest, but they understand each other perfectly well."

"O, look! look!" cried Earnest at that moment, "the rooks are all flying away in such a hurry. Do you think the sentinel told them to go?"

"I cannot tell," answered Mrs. Brooks, "but very likely it did. Yes, now I can see the cause of their fright."

"Do you, mamma? What is it?" asked Earnest.

"There is a man coming across the further field, with a gun in his hand. Perhaps, if it had not been for the sentinel, he could have shot some of the other rooks. The one you noticed on the top of the tree gave a warning note, and away they all flew, as you saw."

"Now," said the little boy, "the man with the gun has gone past, and the rooks are coming to the field again."

Soon after this Mrs. Brooks told Earnest to sit down beside her, as she wanted to tell him something, and when he had taken his seat his mother said:

"Do you know that every one has a sentinel, Earnest—papa and mamma, and you, my boy, and little sister, and every one else?"

"But, mamma, where are they?" inquired Earnest, looking round.

"O, you cannot see your sentinel, but you can feel it," replied Mrs. Brooks. "I think you felt it this morning; I hope you did."

"I do not know what you mean, mamma," returned Earnest.

"When you were so angry with your little sister, what did you feel?"

"I felt sorry afterward," said Earnest.

"Yes, and it was your sentinel, conscience, that made you feel so. God has placed a conscience in your heart, and that is what is called your sentinel. It was that that called to you and told you that anger was trying to take you prisoner; but you did not listen to its voice, and then afterward upbraided you for not doing do."

"Suppose the rooks had not obeyed the voice of their sentinel, what would have been the consequences, do you think?"

"I suppose some of them would have been shot."

"Yes, most likely; and when you let any sin become the master of you, you are acting more foolishly than the birds would have done if they had refused to take their sentinel's advice; for no sin, however small you may think it, can gain a mastery over you without robbing your heart of some of its purity. Sin leaves a stain behind it wherever it goes. Think of this, my boy, and try always to listen to the voice of your sentinel, conscience."—Youth's Companion.

TEMPERANCE.

SAVED BY GRACE.

A TRUE STORY.

It was at the close of a temperance address that I heard the following story from the lips of the pastor, an intellectual-looking man with a frank, open face that betokened a clean soul and a steady purpose. I give it in his own words, as nearly as I can remember. He was touched by the words of the speaker, who had recommended the grace of God as the only sure means of overcoming the power of habit.

He said: "I can testify to that from personal experience. You have heard me say that I have no hardness against the drunkard or rum-seller, for I have been both myself, and would fain lead them to a better life. I was brought up in a liquor-selling hotel, and I could tell you many a harrowing tale of a ruined manhood and suffering families. Of all who came for drinks, perhaps there was no more hopeless case than that of A. Again and again he had tried to reform, but the habit possessed him like a demon. His naturally fine talents were obscured, the respect of mankind forfeited, and he roamed the streets or rolled in the gutter, dressed in filthy rags. After he was converted I talked with him about mending his ways, but he said: 'Boy, you don't know what you are talking about. You are too young; you were never bound down by habit as I am. It's no use for me to try.' I told him more than I can tell you of the power of an inherited appetite, fostered and increased almost from my babyhood up, and I told him of the 'glorious liberty wherewith Christ had set me free;' how the old craving born in me was all taken away when I came into the kingdom, and Satan no more had dominion over me, and he said, 'Well, you do know something about it.'

"But still he drank, and not long after, two or three companions went with me to his room, whither he had gone, jug in hand, to drink himself to death.

"We stayed with him for three or four days; we fed him, we watched him, and we prayed over him, he drinking all the while. At length we persuaded him to go to a prayer-meeting, and God touched his heart. An opportunity was given to go forward for prayers, and he reeled out. You would say, perhaps, that a drunken man could not become converted; but I declare that he rose from his knees a sober and thoroughly converted man.

"It was years ago, and never from that day to this has he had a desire for drink. He has a happy home of his own, and is an honored and useful member of society."

The words carried conviction to every heart; and as we looked into the face of the preacher and heard him tell of the slippery paths in which he himself had trod, and noted how God had removed all traces of an evil life from his face, so that none was purer or more saintly, none could doubt the power of God to save even to the uttermost.

A JUDGE'S ESTIMATE OF RUM SELLERS.

Hon. F. M. Hubbard, Judge of the Eighth judicial district of Iowa, in passing sentence upon some liquor dealers for violation of the prohibitory laws of the State, said: "While there are greater crimes known to the law which are punishable with greater severity, there are none which involve more of those qualities known as despicable meanness and audacity than the selling of intoxicating liquors. There is something in the taking of human life instantaneously that shocks and terrifies the minds of all; and yet we look upon the man who takes human life quite as surely, but by a slow, lingering process, if not without condemnation, at least without horror. You who stand before the court for sentence are in every moral sense murderers, and you are within the spirit, if not the letter, guilty of man-slaughter; for the law says that whoever accelerates the death of a human being unlawfully is guilty of the crime. Your bloated victims upon the witness stand, who undoubtedly committed perjury to screen you from the law, not only abundantly testify that you are accelerating death, but that you are inducing men to commit still greater crimes than your own. You still maintain the appearance of respectability, but how morally leprous and scrofulous you are inwardly! The ruin, poverty and idleness which you are inflicting upon this community declare, as from the housetops, that you are living in idleness and eating the bread of the orphan, watered with widow's tears. You are stealthily killing your victims, and murdering the peace and industry of the community, and thereby converting happy, industrious homes into misery, poverty and rags. Anxious wives and mothers watch and pray in tears nightly, with desolate hearts, for the coming home of your victims, whom you are luring with the wiles and smiles of the devil into midnight debauchery.

"One can have no adequate conception of a cataract until he has seen Niagara, nor of the terrible fury and grandeur of a storm in mid-ocean until he has witnessed one; so no one can know the utter degradation and total depravity to which his species can be brought until he looks upon the desolate ruin caused by your hellish traffic. You are persistent, defiant law-breakers, and shamelessly boast that, in defiance of the law and moral sense of the community, you will continue in your wicked and criminal practice. It has, therefore, now become the imperative duty of this court to let fall upon you so heavily the arm of the law that you shall either be driven from your nefarious traffic, or ruined in your fortunes or wicked prosperity. You have become a stench in the nostrils of the community, and all good men are praying that you be speedily reformed or summarily destroyed. By the providence of God and the favor of this court, their prayers can be speedily answered by signal and exact justice for your crimes.

"And, finally, let me entreat you, if you are not lost to every sentiment of humanity, to desist from your criminal, vagabond traffic and betake yourselves to some honest calling for a livelihood, that you may yet become virtuous, useful citizens, and entitled to the respect of a Christian community. If you persist in this way your ruin is certain, and you will receive, as you deserve, the execration of mankind. You may think that the sentence of the court is harsh and unjustly severe; but the court assures you that, compared with your crimes and the desolation you have already brought upon the community, it is mild in the extreme.—Christian Secretary."

—The Moravian church in the United States reports for its two districts, the northern and the southern, 10,296 communicants—an increase of 115; 1,456 non-communicants, and 5,022 children; making a total of 16,775 in the church community, against 16,895 in 1884. There are about sixty pastors.

when he should be taken sick. Some of the speakers had the frankness to admit that it was a system of insurance. And, when I thought of Christ writing his law of love in the hearts of those whose sins he blots out with his own blood, and constraining them to do good, hoping for nothing again, the difference between true charity and Odd-fellowship seemed as wide as the difference between human selfishness, planning for personal advantage, and the Divine love that was manifested in the life of our Lord Jesus Christ, and is reproduced in those who are truly given to him and taken under the lead of his spirit.

I am inclined to think that this gathering of the Odd-fellows, which was preceded by the shipment of three car-loads of beer to Belvidere, and which closed in the revelry of the dance, will retard rather than hasten the millenium. C. F. HAWLEY.

MASONIC OUTRAGES.—INTRODUCTION.—"He that doeth evil hateth the light." These words of the great Teacher are not only true of every wrong-doer, but of every system of wrong-doing. All who are connected with any system of organized wickedness instinctively resist its exposure, as though it were a personal injury. The measure of evil in such organic wickedness will be its hostility and resistance to such opposition and exposure. The obloquy, hatred and violence visited on those who expose and make war on the sins of their age are but the reaction of the powers of darkness against the kingdom-light, and indicate not only the strength of the evil, but the faithful earnestness with which it is opposed. A single glance at the world's history makes this abundantly evident. The crucifixion of our Lord and the martyrdom of his saints were the Satanic testimony of the greatness of the mission of him who "was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." They indicated both his hatred and his fear. The resistance to the reformation of the sixteenth century was such as was to be expected from the gigantic and hoary iniquities it was destined to remove. The war of the great rebellion, with its terrible outlay of treasure, suffering and blood, was not only a Divine retribution for the sin of slavery, but was, in an important sense, a measure of that sin. Satan is intrenched in every system of iniquity, and his struggle for its defense and promotion will be in proportion to its importance to the realm of darkness. Tried by this test, the system of Freemasonry, together with the myriad organizations that are its legitimate children, will be seen to be enormously wicked. In the resistance to all efforts of exposure, it has stopped at no duplicity, nor hesitated at any violence that gave hope of accomplishing its purpose. To a mere dissent, it has made no objection. Its advocates have even not been offended when it has been caricatured and classed with follies; but to an honest, earnest exposure of its inherent wickedness it has presented the terrible and undying hate which its Satanic author has towards all that robs him of power. I propose to briefly show some of these manifestations of violence and crime.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Prof. E. G. Paine writes that the Minnesota W. M. Conference elected J. E. Gould and himself as delegates to the Interdenominational Anti-Secrecy Convention. By the way, when and where shall that convention be held?

—Mr. D. L. Moody preached three times on Sunday—in the morning in the First Presbyterian church, and in the afternoon and evening at the Casino Rink, on State street. The attendance was large.

—The First Congregational church on Sabbath last received fourteen members, two of whom whom were by letter. Several were young lads.

—Drs. Thomas and Swing preached on the labor troubles at their respective places.

—The Lord Bishop of Carlisle, England, preached in the Trinity Episcopal church on the 2nd.

—The Salvation Army have recommenced their work in this city, with all their accustomed earnestness.

—The Southern Presbyterians of Kentucky raised $100,000 in two months to endow Central University. Five individuals contributed $80,000 of it.

—The Evangelical Alliance in the United States is to hold a series of biennial conferences, beginning next winter in Washington.

—The Rev. Dr. Philip Schaff, who sailed recently for Spain, will attend the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in Geneva this Summer.

—The city missionary employed by the Cincinnati Methodist Alliance, Mr. B. H. Cox, has brought a thousand pupils into the Sunday-schools within the past few months.

—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of Mr. Spurgeon's Metropolitan Tabernacle was celebrated March 25. Mr. Spurgeon, in speaking of the inexhaustible fullness of the Gospel, wondered if anyone had preached on politics or temperance in that place, whether he would have kept a congregation for a quarter of a century.

—The Rev. Sam P. Jones is to visit Toledo in July. The leading churches will co-operate in the services, and will build a tabernacle that will accommodate at least 5,000. He is also to be one of the speakers at the great Church Congress to be held at Chautauqua in July.

—The annual meeting of the Cincinnati Camp-Meeting Association is to begin on July 29. The Rev. Sam Jones and Sam Small will have principal charge of the services. The gates of the association will be strictly closed to outsiders on Sundays.

—At the last meeting of the New York Presbytery an offer was received from Morris K. Jesup to bear for a year the expense of an Italian church, to be organized from the Italian mission at the Five Points.

—In England, as here, everything legitimate is being done to make the Sunday-school attractive. One of the principal sources of interest connected with the London schools is the choir system. On a recent Sunday the spring concert of the advanced choir was held in Albert Hall, Mr. Luther Hinton being conductor. Mme. Patey and the Coward family took part in the performance. An immense audience was present.

—The Hankow, China, Tract Society, as on former occasions, presented last September to the candidates assembled at Wuchang for the triennial examination 10,000 Gospels, 8,400 copies of Dr. Martin's "Evidences of Christianity," and 1,600 of the "Mirror of Conscience." They were distributed by native Christians, and were well received.

—At Hampton Institute, Va., there is an attendance of 590, of whom 135 are Indians, representing thirteen States and Territories. Nearly one-half are girls. There is a farm of 700 acres, on which there are thirty-two buildings, of which thirteen are workshops. Last year the students earned $44,058.

—It is gratifying to learn that the drink bill of England is decreasing—that it was less in 1885 than in 1884. Still, it is enormous. It is estimated that the outlay there for drink is equal to the nation's expenditure for bread, butter and cheese, is not much less than the rents paid for farms and houses, is three times the amount spent for tea, sugar, coffee and cocoa, and six times the amount spent on linen and cotton goods.

—Messrs. Jones and Small are to begin revival services in Baltimore next Sunday. The skating rink on Biddle street has been engaged and fitted up for their accommodation. As arranged, it will seat about 4,000 people. A large chorus has been organized for the singing. Ministers of the Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, Reformed Episcopal, and other churches unite in announcing the meetings, and ask "all Christians" to join in the prayer of the prophet: "O Lord, revive thy work!"

—A new mission is about to be undertaken in the West End of London. The scheme embraces the erection of a large building after the style of Mr. Spurgeon's tabernacle, which is to be the center of aggression in London Methodism, and to which it is expected Wesleyan visitors from all parts will gravitate. The project will involve an outlay of $250,000. The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and the Rev. Mark Guy Pearce, two of the most popular ministers of the Wesleyan body, have agreed to take charge of the mission.

—The statement was made in the House of Commons in the recent debate on Disestablishment of the Welsh church, that only an eighth of the population are members of the Anglican church.

—The Northern Presbyterian General Assembly will meet this year in Minneapolis, Minn.; that of the Southern church in Columbus, S. C. The evolution question will come up in the latter.

—The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, will meet in Richmond, Va., May 5th. Several bishops are to be elected.

—In 1786 the first Presbyterian congregation was formed in Montreal. There are now seventeen Presbyterian congregations in that city.

—The Spring conferences of the Methodist Episcopal church report an increase of $75,000 in missionary contributions.

—The triennial Conference of the Church Liberation Society will be held in London during the first week in May. In view of recent events, it is expected the Conference will be largely attended. There will be three sessions at the Cannon Street Hall. These will be followed by a public meeting in St. James Hall. The late general election, the campaign in Parliament, the church reform movement, and the real meaning of disestablishment and disendowment will come up for consideration.

—A Y. M. C. A. has recently been organized at Emory College, Ga.

—At the State Convention of Georgia, April 2–4, several college delegates were present, and were addressed by the college secretary. Mr. J. E. K. Stedd was also present, and addressed the students of Clark University, Atlanta, Ga.

—The College Y. M. C. A. in Rutgen's College, New Brunswick, N. J., has forty-two members. The attendance at their prayer meetings is increasing.

—Jefferson Medical College Association has thirty members, and use the parlor of the Presbyterian church, and the work has been encouraging during this, its first year.

—The work at Westminster College Y. M. C. A., Fulton Mo., has been given a powerful impetus this year, by a series of addresses by Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis. Fifteen conversions have occurred. The association has seventeen candidates for the ministry, among whom are two for foreign fields. Half of the students are members, and carry on three Bible Training Classes.

—Penn College, Oskaloosa, Ia., has three Bible Training Classes; two for young men and one for the ladies. With the aid of an evangelist one week in the winter, meetings were carried on by the faculty and students until thirty conversions was the result.

—Both the associations at the University of the Pacific, at San Jose, are doing good work. Recently twenty-five conversions have occurred. Let the students of the east and west stimulate each other through a spirited correspondence.

—Hamline University, Hamline, Minn., holds daily prayer meetings in the students' rooms, lasting twenty minutes. The results are good.

—Mr. Moody's visit to the University of Virginia, April 9 and 10, resulted in many conversions. The three inquiry meetings were well attended, and earnest personal work was done by the association members.

—Carleton College, Minn., had a revival during the winter session, which resulted in thirty conversions. Bible Training Classes are pushing the work forward.

—Shurtleff College, Ills., prayer meetings are well attended, and they are full of interest and spirituality. The Training Class is enthusiastically carried on.

—Chang Hon Fan, a Chinaman of Portland, Oregon, is a regularly ordained preacher of the Methodist Episcopal church, and belongs to the Puget Sound Conference. Fan came to this country a coolie.

—The Indian Christian young men of Dakota are forming young men's Christian associations. The Indian name for a young men's Christian association is "Cosha Okodakiciye." There are now eleven societies bearing this euphonious designation.

—A German evangelist named Schrenk has been holding great meetings at Frankfort. Bible readings, prayer-meetings and evening meetings in halls were all used to arouse and interest the people. Mr. Schrenk is of Berne, and goes out from there on evangelistic tours.

—The Rev. W. C. Roberts, D. D., of the Presbyterian Home Mission Board, says: "The board has 1,434 ministers, who started last year 195 churches and received into church fellowship 16,000 persons—9,000 on profession of faith. They also started 380 Sunday-schools, nearly all of which will become churches in a short time. The board had a debt of $139,000 last May, which has been reduced $28,000. In the meantime the work has not stopped, but because of this debt no advances could be made.

—The annual meeting of Methodist bishops will be held in Buffalo, May 13.

—The Presbyterian General Assembly meets next month in Minneapolis.

—Six Presbyterian churches in Rochester have received 306 new members (on profession) in April.

—The Rt. Rev. Harvey Goodwin, D. D., Bishop of Carlisle, England, has arrived in this city.

—The Philadelphia Woman's Medical College, at which the Hindoo lady recently graduated, has a lady from Japan as a student, a member of the Presbyterian church. It has prepared and sent out twenty-one American women for service as medical missionaries in the foreign field.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People!

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

Berea College History.

PP. 87, CLOTH, 40 CENTS.

The establishment of a College for the education of colored children and the white children of the mountaineers in a slave State at a time when the whole country was shaken by the discussion of abolition, was a sublime act of faith in God who "hath made of one blood all nations of men."

This is what REV. JOHN G. FEE did at Berea, Ky., and the friends of reform cannot spend 40 cents better than to send for this of faith tried, and of precious deliverances that read like a chapter from the book of Daniel.

HISTORY OF PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY,

BUDS AND BLOSSOMS AND FRIENDLY GREETINGS

Is a forty-page, illustrated, monthly family magazine, edited by J. F. AVERY, Halifax, N. S.

Price 75 Cents per Year if Prepaid.

Its columns are devoted to Temperance, Missionary Intelligence, Household Hints, Short Stories and Illustrations, making twenty eight pages of reading matter suitable and profitable for young and old, with an average of twelve illustrations in each number, this will give a magazine of 40 pages monthly for 75 cents a year, and will, therefore, be one of the cheapest sold. Moreover it can be relied on as containing wholesome litrature for the home and family. Our object is the extension of purity and knowledge among the people

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, true in incident, deeply interesting in its narrative, should read this book.

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, every-day walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unraveling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for prohibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are especially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

"THE WHOLE IS BETTER THAN A PART," AND YOU HAVE IT HERE IN A "NUT-SHELL."

FARM AND GARDEN.

A LIST OF GRAPES FOR SPECIAL AND GENERAL PLANTING.

1. Concord is universally known. It is a good grade still among all claimants for all sorts of purposes. It is better than nearly every one of its children yet sent out. Still the market for Concords is always low; they must take a low figure.

2. Delaware.—Still a grand where carefully cultivated, but not quite hardy in Northern sections.

3. Lindley.—For general culture the best of Moore's hybrids, delicious and sturdy. It is very early, mine ripening in August. It is equally good for home use.

4. Brighton.—An early, noble, luscious, dark-red grape, as early as Hartford, and every way desirable.

5. Martha.—A seedling of Concord, but white and entirely hardy.

6. Lady.—Another white and very early grape that is as hardy as Martha or Hartford, and has proved always an acceptable. It is very early.

7. Worden.—Another seedling of Concord, a grand one, being a good step ahead of its parent; larger, earlier and better, and entirely hardy.

8. Vergennes.—A red grape of superb quality, early, and a good keeper.

9. Duchess.—A pale-yellow grape, not quite as early as Concord, but a long way ahead in quality. It is one of the best keepers, and the vine is hardy.

10. Jefferson.—Superb every way; red, a good grower, and entirely hardy. Ripens with the Concord.

11. Niagara.—This is Rogers's No. 3, very early—as early as Hartford—and is the best white Moore's Early.

12. Wilder.—A black grape that is hardy, productive, and excellent every way.

13. Prentiss.—This, in most localities, proves very unsatisfactory. It may not be wise to place it in this list, but I think it is white and a grand keeper.

14. Pocklington.—This is a large, excellent white grape, and, like the preceding, may have its claim to a place in the list of best, but I think not. It is entirely worthless.

15. Barry.—A large, black grape, ripening just before Concord. It is hardy, vigorous, and a delicious grape.

16. Agawam.—A very extra grape every way, red, large in berry and bunch, and ripens about with Concord.

17. Herbert.—One of the best of the Rogers kind—delicious, productive and hardy.

18. Niagara.—This grape will, I think, prove to be nearly all that has been claimed for it by even its propagators. In quality it is certainly very fine, and it is hardy and tremendously productive.

19. If you have a Southern locality, or a shallow rock on high, dry soil, by all means plant the Iona. If there is a more refreshing table grape, I have not seen it. Entirely hardy.

20. The same must be said of the Goethe, a red grape of a very positive character, juicy, aromatic, white with pink cheek or wholly pink; delicious but tender. Try it in a sheltered spot.

This makes a list of twenty grapes. To these I think may justly be added five or six more that are first class, hardy, reliable bearers. Of these I do not doubt, but could insert, the claim of Centennial, Empire State, Amber Queen, Early Victor, Francis R. Hayes, and more of Rogers's hybrids. It is curious that these hybrids of Rogers still include so many of our very best grapes.

By hardy I mean, in the above description, grapes that will endure 15 to 20° below zero, when the winter is not phenomenally beneficial in snow and moisture. Nothing is hardy in very dry and very cold weather. The above grapes, in other words, do not need winter covering in the latitude of Massachusetts and Central New York. I have yet to find among them all, apart from Iona, a grape more agreeable for my own table than Lindley.

Now, if I were to reduce the above list to one-half, I would select, 1, Concord; 2, Lindley; 3 Brighton; 4 Worden; 5, Vergennes; 6, Duchess; 7, Jefferson; 8, Barry; 9, Agawam, 10, Herbert; 11, Niagara; 12, Lady. Reduce again, and I would hardly know which to leave out, but must include 1, Lindley; 2, Brighton; 3 Duchess, 4, Jefferson; 5, Agawam or Herbert—leaving Niagara as the exception likely to be indispensable. Where there is room for only one or two choice vines, I'd take Brighton and Jefferson; then Duchess and Lindley.—E. P. Powell, in Independent.

A Wonderful Woman, A Wonderful Life, AND A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas.

MASONIC OATHS,

BY

E. Ronayne,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago.

A masterly discussion of the Oaths of the Masonic Lodge, to which is appended "Freemasonry at a Glance," illustrating every sign, grip and ceremony of the Masonic Lodge. This work is highly commended by leading lecturers as furnishing the best arguments on the nature and actual character of Masonic obligations of any book in print Paper cover, 207 pages. Price, 40 cents,

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents, per dozen. $3.50.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Rain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each: per dozen $2 00

National Christian Association.
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each, per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees" 304 pages.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one In-ITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Ma-SONRY. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 De-GREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. In cloth, 25c. per doz. $2.25. Paper cover. 15c. Per doz. $1.25.

TEMPERANCE AND THE HOME.

A TELL-TALE PASS-BOOK.

A gentleman picked up on one of the streets of Toledo, the other day, a soiled and worn grocery pass-book, evidently belonging to some laboring man. The cover is so dilapidated that the name of the owner cannot be made out, else it would have been returned to him. The finder, on examining the book to seek for some clue to its ownership, was so struck with the moral it teaches that he handed it to the editor of the Blade.

It is an ordinary pass-book, such as are common everywhere—one of those given by grocers to customers to whom they give credit, settlements being made every pay-day. The customer brings it with him when he buys anything; the grocer enters the purchase in the book and also on his own ledger, and the pass-book is returned to the custody of the buyer, it serving as his memorandum and preventing disputes on settlement. The one in question affords stronger internal proof of the enormous tribute that labor pays to the damnable rum-power than any words that we can write. We copy literally the last four pages of the book, the latest page bearing date of Feb. 8. From the way the entries run, we should be inclined to say they cover about two weeks' purchases. Here they are:

Beer	.10	Tobacco	.05
Lard	.12	Beer	.10
Jelly	.09	Lard	.12
Herring	.12	Beer	.10
Tobacco	.10	Drinks	.30
Beer	.10	Whisky	.10
Whisky	.45	Whisky	.05
Beer	.10	Tobacco	.05
Beer	.10	Flour	$ 1 63
Butter	.22	Whisky	.45
Eggs	.24	Essence	.05
Syrup	.08	Butter	.22
Sugar	.10	1 drink	.05
Vinegar	.12	1 drink	.05
Raisins	.06	Tobacco	.15
Whisky	.45	1 drink	.05
Beer	.10	Beer	.10
Herring	.12	Jelly	.09
Beer	.10	Whisky	.45

Jelly	.09	1 drink	.05
Beer	.10	Barrels	.10
Lard	.12	1 sack flour	$1 63
Beer	.10

Of the 69 entries on these four pages 32 are for whisky, beer and "drinks"—almost one half the number. The total amount of purchases is $10 69, but of this $4 35 is for these infernal poisons. These entries are but a fair sample of the whole book. Any four pages, taken at random, would show similar figures.

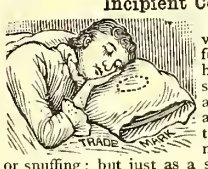
That the owner of this book is poor, is evident from the character and the small quantity of his purchases. As there are no entries, save at one or two places in the book, of vegetables purchased, we infer that he raised his own, which were probably stored in the cellar and afforded part of the subsistence of his family. If they ate any meat except the herrings mentioned, it was probably bought elsewhere.

In the two weeks we judge these entries to cover, this man guzzled $1.55 in beer; $2.05 in whisky, and 75 cents in rum and "drinks." In the same time he and his family purchased $3 26 in flour. Compare $4.35 spent in drunkenness with an expenditure of $3.26 for flour in the same time! Look over the rest of the list of purchases; there is but one thing that can by any stretch of imagination be called a luxury—jelly—and that purchased a few cents' worth at a time, probably to render the bread and oleomargarine butter palatable to the little child.

But why comment longer on this text? The bare facts are enough for any thinking man. He can fill out the painful picture without aid. He can imagine the bare, comfortless home, the care-worn wife, the ill-fed child, the coarsely-clad, bloated husband and father. Unfortunately such cases are all too common. Anyone familiar with the life of the poor in cities will recognize this unknown case as but one of thousands and tens of thousands of men going surely down to poverty, misery and death, dragging their wretched wives and innocent children along with them. It is only the common instance of a man upon whom the rum-demon has its infernal grasp, that is all; a laboring man, nearly half of whose weekly outlay is for drink. Is there any argument for the damnable rum traffic that can stand for a moment in the sight of such a showing?—Toledo Blade

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE,

In Debility.



Dr. W. H. HOLCOMBE, New Orleans, La., says: "I found it an admirable remedy for debilitated state of the system produced by the wear and tear of the nervous energies."

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in stating that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has been a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

NEEDLE WORK

Needle-Work: A Manual of Stitches and Studies in Embroidery and Drawn Work.

This manual is an attempt to Edited by Jenny June. systematize and arrange in an order convenient for workers, the modern methods in Embroidery and Drawn Work. The author has felt the desire and the responsibility involved in aiding women to a true and practical guide to the beautiful art of needle-work. When the Angel of Mercy begged that woman might not be created because she would be abused by man, as the stronger, the Lord listened, but felt that he could not give up the whole scheme of creation, so he gave the loving Angel permission to bestow upon her any compensating gift she chose, and the Angel pityingly endowed her with tears and the love of needle-work. This book is printed on fine paper, has a handsome cover, and contains

200 Illustrations

The list of stitches, with illustrations, are: Buttonhole—Hemstitch—Brier Stitch—Crow's Foot—Herring Bone—Fodder Stitch—Two Tie—Three Tie—Drawn Work—Stem Stitch—Twisted Chain or Rope Stitch—Split Stitch—French Knot—Solid Leaf—Satin Stitch—Padding—Darning Stitch—Skeleton Outline—Couching, Kensington, Filling, Coral, Italian, Leviathan and Holbein Stitches—Applique—Interlaced Ground—Weaving Stitch—Gold and Silver Thread—Arrasene Ribbon Work, etc.

Designs in Needle-Work are given to decorate My Lady's Chamber, My Lady's Robe, the Dining Room, Parlor and Library, and for Linen and Cotton Fabrics, including embroidery designs for Mantel Scarfs—Bed Spreads—Child's Quilt—Pillow Covers—Cushion Boxes—Bureau Scarfs—Table Covers—Chair Backs—Morning Sacques—Artist Jackets—Walking Dress—Afternoon Dress—Evening Dress—Handkerchiefs—Mufflers—Fichus—Piazza Wraps—Sashes—Fans—Slippers—Bonnets—Parasols—Aprons—Work Bags—Opera Bags—Glove Case—Sachets—Lunch Cloths—Dinner Cloths—Napkins—Doilies—Table Mats—Corn Napkins—Fish Napkins—Tray Covers—Tea Cloths—Curtains—Panels—Banners—Screens—Sofa Cushions—Piano Scarfs—Chair Scarfs—Sofa Rugs—Photograph Cases—Book Covers, etc., etc. This will be found to be the only standard book on the subject of needle-work.

Straining at gnats and swallowing camels is an old-time folly which our mayor is disposed to institute. Mr. Moody's meetings at the Casino Rink have been closed by his order. He did not want to have people assemble in large numbers, but the saloons, where rioters congregate and lawlessness is begotten, are in full running order. We visited lately the south part of the city and found that under the rule of the "Knights" nothing of any sort could be purchased after 7 P. M except whisky, beer and tobacco What an excellent system? Bread and beef prohibited, and tobacco and whisky in the ascendant.

A learned and excellent minister of the Swedish Lutheran church sends his renewal, and makes some comments on some views which we have maintained and which he and his people cannot accept. He says when we call Christmas and Easter "human inventions," "imitations of Rome," "coming down from the old sun worship, like the rites of Freemasonry," Lutherans and Episcopalians, as well as many others, will dissent. With all due respect to such Christian people as engage in celebrating Christmas and Easter, among which are many for whom we have profound regard, we wish to say, as Luther did at Augsburg and at Worms: "Convince me by the Word of God that I am wrong, and I will cheerfully retract." The question is one of fact. What is the origin of Christmas and Easter? We take our stand with Luther and the reformers that whatever cannot be shown to be of Divine appointment or sanction is an unwarrantable innovation on the teachings of the Gospel. We hold, too, that just in proportion as men have interpolated days and ceremonies, just to that extent have they forgotten the real commandments of God. We respectfully ask our learned Lutheran brother to re-examine this subject and show us if we are wrong.

The able article in the May number of the North American Review on the future of the colored race in America, by the Hon. Fred Douglas, contains a prediction that at some future period the negro will be absorbed by the more numerous body, and cease to be a distinct people. This view is by no means a new one. In 1844 Henry Clay thought that such absorption would take place in one or two hundred years. Patrick Henry openly advocated the absorption of the Indians, and sought to put a premium on the intermarriage of whites and the aborigines. There are influences at work that are stronger than law—stronger even than prejudices, for in spite of both more than one-fourth of the colored people are of mixed blood. It is a remarkable fact that it has been the white men who most hated the negro that have been the fathers of this intermediate class, and that those who have been conspicuous as the defenders of the colored people have, while quite indisposed to any admixture, insisted that any union of the races should be by lawful marriage rather than by concubinage. It is a sad indication of our public morals that those who have held this view have been denounced as traitors to their race and sinners against their country and their God, while men like Henry Clay and Richard M. Johnson, who were notoriously the fathers of illegitimate mulattoes, were the recipients of the highest honors in the gift of the people.

"And they besought him to depart out of their coasts." The official members of an M. E. charge in Eastern Pennsylvania have signed a request to their presiding elder that Rev. J. Lee Gamble be removed from that charge. The very grave offence of which Mr. Gamble is guilty, and which he does not deny, is that he holds the following opinions:

1. Church buildings should not be for parties, plays, suppers, etc. 2. Church funds should be raised by direct contributions. 3. That Christians should dress in Christian simplicity. 4. Christians ought to choose Christian companions. 5. That all Christians should withdraw from oath-bound secret societies. 6. That the prayer of faith will heal the sick; and (7) we are living in the last days, and that the time of our redemption draweth near. Which of the seven constitutes the deadly heresy, or whether they are all alike hostile to the principles and conduct of these "brethren" we are not informed. Had Mr. Gamble been a tobacco-user, a patron of the base ball club, the skating rink or of the Masonic lodge, it is safe to say that no objections would have been found against him. Unfortunately, like his Master, who drove out the devils and suffered them to go into the swine, he interfered with the business interests of his people, and, like the Chinaman, he must go.

Corporations have no souls, but their managers have; and hence, while the latter are reserved to the judgment of the great day, the former get a righteous retribution in the Divine disposal of current events. The railroads centering in this city have persistently violated the laws of God and man by running their trains on the Sabbath. They have trampled on the rights of their employes by compelling Sabbath desecration, and thereby enforcing demoralization. Now they are unable to receive and remove freight, and their whole freight business is at a standstill. The city of Chicago has licensed thousands of saloons. It has consented not only to their destructive influence on public morals, but to their persistent violations of the law. Now men, mad with the accursed drink, set all law at defiance, and become the tools of anarchists and incendiaries. The citizens and churches of Chicago have resolutely shut their eyes to the secret conspiracies of the city. Arms have been purchased and stored, and men carefully drilled for desperate deeds. Newspapers have openly advocated the destruction of property and the overthrow of all government. Speeches exciting to revolution have been a nightly occurrence. With an infatuation that was madness, the officers of the law have scoffed at danger, and the churches have been two busy with their schemes of propagandism to take thought of it. The retribution has come. A single dynamite bomb, together with the pistols of the mob, kills or wounds forty-four of our policemen. The haunts of the conspirators are found stored with missiles of death. The people are awakened. A brave police ward off a greater calamity, but safety and security have not come to stay. There can be no security to the people until we cease from the sins of violating the Sabbath, licensing the liquor traffic, and fostering secret conspiracies.

MR. WHITTIER'S POEM IN THE "ATLANTIC."

I pray for faith, I long to trust;
I listen with my heart, and hear
A Voice without a sound: "Be just,
Be true, be merciful, revere
The Word within thee: God is near.

"Believe and trust; though stars and suns
Through all occasions and events;
His wise, paternal purpose runs;
The darkness of his providence
Is star-lit with divine intents."

O joy supreme! I know the Voice,
Like none beside on earth or sea;
Yea, more, O soul of mine rejoice,
By all that he requires of me
I know what God himself must be.

No picture to my aid I call,
I shape no image in my prayer;
I only know in Him is all
Of light, life beauty, everywhere,
Eternal Goodness here and there.

TO THE SECULAR AND SUNDAY NEWSPAPERS.

BY GEO. W. CLARK.

DEAR SIRS:—Hosea Bigelow (James Russel Lowell), used to say: "You will have to get up early to get the start of God!" Some of you have undertaken this game—always a losing game in the end. You are setting God's laws at defiance, desecrating his holy Sabbath, and leading and encouraging thousands of others to do the same thing by publishing your Sunday newspapers—sending little boys on the streets bawling your God-defying sheets to the great annoyance of all who love and have a right to enjoy the designed quiet of the day; and especially all that vast class of law-abiding, church-going, and Sabbath-venerating people; and when these children should be at home, in church or Sunday-school. Thus you are teaching our boys to be irreligious and Godless in their childhood. With such a childhood what do you think and what may we expect will be their manhood? And how can you "rebuke Satan?" How can you condemn the saloons and other violations of the Sabbath while you thus trample it under foot yourselves? And think of the demoralizing influence of that class and character of reading you send into families all over the country every Sabbath. Business show-bills, theatrical show-bills, beastly plug-ugly fights, grog-shop rows, bawdy-house brawls, saloon murders, vulgar, illicit escapades, political chicanery, and all manner of worldly-filthy and foolish scandals! What a bewildering and demoralizing hodgpodge to put into families to be read by fathers, mothers and children on the Lord's Day, a day set apart for rest and meditation and divine worship. And such reading as you furnish them for Sunday creates a morbid appetite for that class of newpaper stuff, and destroys all desire or relish for the higher power and more intellectual reading, especially for moral or religious works, or the Bible. Families or individuals who patronize and read your Sunday newspapers are not those who "search the Scriptures that they may be made wise unto salvation," or who teach or "train up their children in the way they should go."

Sunday newspapers, Sunday railroading, Sunday excursions, Sunday theatres and saloons, and Sunday socialistic plotters and palaverers and kindred immoralities are completely breaking down and destroying the sacredness and wholesome influence of the Sabbath, and degrading American society and civilization to the infidelity and depravity of the French metropolis; and God will hold you, Sunday journalists, responsible for a large share of this depravity, not only for contributing to and sustaining it all, but for what you might do to condemn and stem the tides of wickedness, and turn the currents into a wholesome Christian observance of the blessed day. And then you have no decided effective condemnation of the infernal liquor business, the horrid effects of which you see every day all around you. No rebuke of the monstrous outrage perpetrated by those who would force the devil's beastializing drink upon the community by licensing and thereby throwing the shield and panoply of the law over and around the deadly traffic. Oh, for journalists that have moral principles; that have souls; that are not cowards; that would thunder out against these giant evils, and wrongs and outrages! And then you lend your columns to the selfish, the unprincipled and mercenary who prey like vultures upon the ignorant and incredulous by advertising and puffing not only the ordinary and villainous quack nostrums, the principal base of which is whisky, but you are now advertising and puffing "Duffy's" so called "malt whisky" of "Baltimore" (made on State street at Duffy's distillery in Rochester, N. Y.), but just as full of the devil, containing just as large a per cent of fiery, poisonous and destructive alcohol, and just as fatal and deadly to health, life and happiness as though made from corn or rye, or other grain, or as though distilled in tophet where the king and champion of the whole devilish liquor business presides. Do such journalists evince any more care for the good of society than does the liquor dealer or the compounder of quack nostroms, only so they get the "money" from their dupes?

While the friends of humanity, the friends of good society, of law and order and of happy homes are struggling to save the people from the terrible evils of the drink curse, you, with thousands of readers all over the country, for a little paltry pelf, are advertising and recommending these vile and poisonous poisons, knowing all about their deadly effects; and knowing also, or ought to know, that the ablest physicians or physiologists in the country, and over 300 in the profession in the Old World, with such eminent men as Prof. B. W. Richardson at their head, have exposed and most emphatically condemned and repudiated the use of these pernicious poisons. Every journal should denounce these villainous compounds, and warn the people against the swindle. Again, instead of making a fair, full or anything like a just report of such sermons or lectures, especially on temperance or prohibition, as might interest, enlighten and instruct the people in righteousness and reform, you either do not notice them at all, or give but a slight and often a very unfair and garbled, and sometimes outrageous, misrepresentation of what the speakers do say, fearing the truth might hurt your "party" or offend some of your liquor customers; while you often, with seeming eagerness, report at length and more fully the skeptical, the theatrical, the sensational, the nonsensical, the nasty, the scandalous, the brutal and disgusting, secret society, bosh-socialistic treason, with all its blood and thunder, and other brutal and disgusting things with all their revolting particulars. Is this the proper thing to do—the right way to conduct our public journals? Papers which should be moral, pure, educational, and which should enthuse the people with all that is good and noble, and for the benefit of society and for the peace, prosperity and permanency of our commonwealths.

What is to become of our republic with such demoralized and demoralizing journalism all over the country? A prominent paper recently quoted one Heterodox minister to justify its Sunday newspaper. The man or minister who is so much interested and absorbed in his Sunday newspaper as this minister appeared to be, and can thus commend this widespread and fearful desecration of the Sabbath by Sunday newspapers, can have but small regard for sacredness of the day and the higher and holier objects it was designed of God to secure to mankind.

The fact that some men, esteemed "very good men," read Sunday newspapers don't make it right, or justify such Sabbath desecration. Some so-called "pretty good sort o' men" used to make and use and sell whisky and tobacco. Did that sanctify the vile and pernicious business? There is a higher authority whereunto we would do well to take heed. That is God's word: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." And "whatever ye do, whether ye print newspapers or preach the Gospel, do all to the glory of God." And these commands are just as binding upon you as upon me; upon the editor as upon the preacher; upon the sinner as upon the saint. But you want to "make money." Yes; but "what do it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" I knew a man not long ago who went into this Sunday newspaper business "to make money." He was going to do it independent of the Almighty, and so he set God's laws at defiance. He made money. He reveled in his ill-gotten gains as he reveled in his wicked paper, by which he acquired his wealth. But, alas! a day of reckoning came—"Cui bono"—the retributions soon followed, and oh! the end, the dreadful end! He died as the fool dieth. He made his bed in hell! Verily, "what doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" "The wages of sin is death!"

MASONIC REDEMPTION.

BY S. B. KOKANOUR.

"There he stands on the threshold of our new Masonic life, in darkness, helplessness and ignorance. Having wandered amid the errors, and covered over with the pollutions of the outer world, he comes inquiringly to our doors, SEEKING THE NEW BIRTH, and asking a withdrawal of the veil which conceals Divine truth from his uninitiated sight." "Masonry stands before the neophyte in all the glory of its form and beauty, to be fully revealed to him, however, only when the NEW BIRTH has been completely accomplished." (Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, pp. 20-21.)

Here we have the "new birth" and "divine truth" linked together, and are told that Masonry cannot be revealed to the initiate until after the new birth has been accomplished; and when the new birth is completely accomplished, then Masonry will be fully revealed to the neophyte—the man just initiated into the lodge—"in all the glory of its form and beauty." Thus Masonry is trying to allure and deceive with flowery descriptions of its counterfeit religion the vain and unthinking.

But let us examine these claims of this nefarious system of Masonic redemption still further. On page 39 of Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, we learn that Masonry undertakes to enlighten the ignorance, purify the evil nature of, and rescue the Masonic candidate from the obscurity of the world in which he has been wandering. The man who formerly believed himself to be a Christian, and therefore in the kingdom of light, must get a poor opinion of his former belief and experience when he can thus betray the blissful light of the Gospel of Christ, if he ever had it, at the threshold of Masonry.

In Sickles's Gen. Ahiman Rezan, or Freemason's Guide, p. 70, we read: "Free and Accepted Masons are taught to make use of it [the common gavel] for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting us as lively stones for that spiritual building—that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Is it not pure blasphemy for a body of men, most of whom are of the lowest grades of society, to thus, in an unholy connection, take God's pure Word of life and pretend to do a work which alone belongs to the gracious power of God alone? How can preachers and church members engage in this unholy work of the lodge? I ask again, is it not blasphemy in the mind of every one of God's children to see these people thus presume and teach that with a small mallet they can divest their "hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life?" One thing is self-evident: that irreverent men who can thus presume on the intelligence of the great and living God have nothing but their gavels with which to thus relieve themselves. O, presumptuous man, how vain, how vain thou art!"

In Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, p. 16, we read: "Acacian—a term signifying a Masou who, by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, is free from sin." What are these "obligations and precepts" of Masonry which make the Mason "free from sin?" Are they repentance and faith towards God? No, never; Masonry teaches no such precepts as these. Search all their rituals, lexicons, jurisprudences, etc., and if you can find that their "obligations and precepts" require anything more than these:—First, keeping their secrets; second, protecting their members, right or wrong (the right need no lodge protection); and third, paying their dues, tell me of it. The whole institution, with all of its oaths and fearful penalties, its mock ceremonies, and heathenish, counterfeit religion, is kept up to deceive its people into an obedient observance of these three unholy and unworthy deeds. That is all that is required of them to make them "free from sin," and to a promise of "the house eternal in the heavens." All dancing-masters, rum-sellers and infidels, as well as preachers, can do this without a change of character, without regeneration. All persons, then, without regard to character other than ability to pay money and keep secrets, when they do these selfish, diabolic Masonic services are promised a happy future existence. This, then, is Masonic religion—the religion in which all men (Masons) can agree. Is it any wonder that those who sell themselves to the lodge Satan are satisfied when they are taught these things inside its deceptive portals?

In the above, and much more which I might quote, we have it in language simple and plain that Masonry promises all its candidates to rescue them from the evils of the world, and a blissful hereafter, if they obey the obligations and the precepts of the lodge. It would be difficult to frame sentences in plainer words than these claims to Masonic redemption. Is it any wonder, then, that the simple-minded members are bewitched by them into the belief that Masonry "is a good-enough religion for me?" What a terrible position for preachers and church members to take! What debased opinions they must entertain of their Bible, their church, their mothers' teaching of Christianity, and their God, whom they thus degrade to the level of the rough dancing-master, rum-seller, infidel, and the low with whom they thus associate in the lodge, with their more than two and a half score horrible oaths, that they will never tell their mothers, sisters and wives of these, to them, good things, and when they ask them, if it is necessary, that they will even lie and deny the truth about it! Is the lodge not, then, setting itself up as a rival to Christianity? The great beauty and crowning glory of Christianity is in the fact that, by the grace of God, it can take a poor, weak, sinful man through the NEW BIRTH, regenerate and reinstate him into the new divine life, and make him in fact a new man, with an unimpeachable character. But now Masonry, the man of sin, comes and promises its wicked votaries the same thing. Here, then, comes Masonry with an attempt to thrust itself between the Saviour of the world and the human family, and appropriate to itself the same mission, bestow the same work and light, while wholly ignoring Him who alone can do it.

The authors of this Masonic twaddle well knew that the claim of the new birth and reformed life of lodgery was the merest fiction. They were only mouthing the dictates of his Satanic majesty in this false claim. The whole thing shows that the whole fabrication was intended to destroy the Christian church. Our dilapidated churches show how nearly successful they have been. The same deceptive beast that appeared before old Mother Eve is plainly visible in the lodge deception. He takes words out of God's own mouth, as he did before Eve, with which to clothe his new falsehoods. The instigator of this diabolical system of deception well knows that by thus offering a great bargain for a small consideration—just as all swindlers do—he could deceive thousands upon thousands of the nominal professors of Christianity, and the lamentable result proves the truth of the inference.

Consistency, thou art indeed a precious jewel, but as rare among men as angel-visits to this sin and lodge-cursed world of ours.

ANDOVER.—ITS CURSE AND CURE.

One of the most remarkable features of "the new movement" in Andover Theological Seminary is the deep cunning with which, from the beginning, it has been conducted. So adroitly have those wily managers—professors—insinuated the leaven of their "advanced theology"—so effectually have they kept concealed the true animus of their great conspiracy, that great numbers in our churches have not only not suspected it, but when told and furnished with abundant evidence of it, they have utterly and persistently refused to believe it. But the evidence that the most, if not all, of those professors, are guilty of deliberate and most criminal malfeasance in office there, is simply overwhelming. Until recently, this fact was most emphatically and even indignantly denied. Now it is openly and boastfully avowed, with surpassing and most marvelous effrontery! And as a first step in this direction, each professor has "taken the creed" of the seminary; that is, he has given his full, unqualified and unreserved assent to and acceptance of its every article, its every statement. This acceptance and endorsement of the creed is supplemented with the following pledge: "I will maintain and inculcate the Christian faith, as expressed in the creed by me now repeated, . . . in opposition not only to atheists and infidels, but to Jews, Papists, . . . Unitarians, Universalists," etc., etc. All this is repeated once in every five years. Without this acceptance and adoption of the creed and pledge, no professor could be inaugurated there; without the quinquennial repetition, none could remain.

Among the most significant features of the "new theology," now taught there as Christian doctrine, is their theory of probation after death for certain classes of mankind, and a denial of what they contemptuously term "the old dogma of the perdition of the heathen." Rightly understood, these theories, in their belief or unbelief, are fundamental features in both Papacy and Universalism, "in opposition" to both of which they are solemnly pledged to teach. In the first place, their dogma of posthumous probation is but a rehash, with limitations, of the old

Pagano-Papal doctrine of purgatory, which the Roman church, with her usual, astute casuistry has adopted from the ancient Roman Paganism, and perpetuated as a legitimate and even fundamental element in the Christian faith! It is claimed by the Congregationalist that this theory, as taught in that seminary, "is not purgatory. But the very first, and therefore fundamental, idea of purgatory, its cornerstone, even, is probation after death. The acceptance and adoption of that dogma, therefore, under whatever restrictions or modifications, becomes a first step on Romish ground—the entrance upon a path which always and inevitably leads "toward Rome." But more: These facts show that this is not merely a Papal, but as well a Pagan dogma. While we look in vain for its origin, or even its recognition in the teachings of either Christ or his apostles, our search for that origin in the Papal purgatory is equally vain. It is the child of the Roman church only by adoption from Pagan Rome; yet not .even there do we find its birth. But, taking the staff of history—starting from ancient Rome and traveling down the long path of the ages, if we stop at ancient Egypt and look around among her superstitions, her corruptions and abominations, there, long ages before Rome was born, we find her priests of Isis and Osiris teaching, and their worshipers accepting and believing, this same dogma as an all-important and indisputable factor in her mythology. (See Wilkinson's Egyptians, vol. 2, p. 24, and vol. 5, pp. 383-4.) Thus, to go no farther back, we trace the lineage of this great abomination to ancient Egypt. From her it was transmitted in her mythology to Greece, from Greece to Pagan Rome, and from her adopted by the Roman church and perpetuated in her great scheme of purgatory; and now, by the united voice of the learned faculty of our great "school of the prophets," this vile emanation from that noisome fountain of all the earth's pollutions and defilements —this relic of the ancient idolatry, is brought forward to complete and adorn the "perfect work" of the great "Author and Finisher of the Christian faith!

But this dogma is also a fundamental feature in Universalism. Universalists everywhere so understand it and so teach. They claim that such probation, through its attendant discipline, secures the ultimate and eternal holiness and happiness of every son and daughter of Adam. Thus, with them, it has become an integral, necessary, and therefore indispensable element in their faith. It is not yet openly admitted that the faculty of Andover Seminary teach or hold that Universalism is necessarily a result or even a concomitant of that dogma; but, judging from the past, if the present order of things continues, such an avowal is simply a question of time and of circumstances. It is on record that a recent graduate from that seminary has testified, though with evident reluctance, that he was thus taught there, and that by the now senior professor! This, with the evident unanimity of that faculty upon eschatology, furnishes at least circumstantial evidence, and that not easily impeachable, that Universalism is the sum and substance, as it is the outcome, of the course of teaching now pursued there! Thus those professors, though pledged to teach "in opposition to Papacy," teach some of its well-known, fundamental principles, viz.: post-mortem probation—that is, purgatory (modified and refined, it is true, but purgatory still); and, correlatively and of necessity, prayers for the dead! Pledged to teach "in opposition to Universalism," they "maintain and inculcate" dogmas which, as they must know, are some of its fundamental, distinctive and most vital elements. But they do not stop there. In their zeal for what they call "progressive orthodoxy," they have boldly undertaken the work of, as the Golden Rule puts it, "recasting theology." That is bringing up a very distinctive feature of the original theology of the seminary—that of the creed, under pretence of "restatement," which is simply and primarily adulteration. Its true significance and its design, however, is evidently nothing more nor less than repudiation, effacement, and ultimate reconstruction! In this unholy and presumptuous crusade upon the truth of God they have even dared, with profane hands, to desecrate and to defile his Holy Word with the "untempered mortar" of their "higher criticism," changing, perverting, and thus belittling its teachings, to harmonize them with their false and blasphemous theories, or, as the case may be, limiting, qualifying, or virtually—yes, in effect, if not literally, denying its Divine inspiration. (See Andover Review for November, 1885, pp. 456-477.)

Such are the unscrupulous and wicked usurpations of the faculty of Andover Theological Seminary! Such is their own estimate of their own most solemn professions; such their respect for their own positive and most sacred pledge; and such, too, their own estimate of their own faith, and truth, and honor! And such are the men who are appointed to teach and qualify the future "pastors and teachers" of many of our Congregational churches! "Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thy heritage unto reproach!" How long shall these things continue? How long shall that seminary, founded and established by the prayers, the labors, and the sacrifices of men of God, remain a propaganda of a disguised, yet genuine infidelity—a Protestant Vatican, whose self-constituted popes and cardinals shall dictate faith to the church, and both faith and law to her great organizations for the dissemination of "the faith once for all delivered to the saints?" But "the triumphing of the wicked is short." Despite the "cunning craftiness," the glamour of apparent sanctity which is made to envelope and disguise this great iniquity, there is a way the evil can be removed. The constitution and statutes of the seminary require its board of visitors "to determine, interpret and explain the statutes of this foundation with respect both to professors and students." "They have the power to negative any vote of the trustees appointing a professor, and to remove any professor for heterodoxy." (Prof. Park, in Associate Creed, p. 46.) Of course, then, if the case of any such professor or professors be presented before that board, with the necessary evidence, they are bound by the organic law of the seminary, by their own solemn pledge of fidelity to the trust reposed in them, and by every consideration of justice and honor, to promptly remove such professors, and thereafter to suffer none but competent, honest, godly men to enter upon or to fill their places. Perhaps it may be asked, "What if such a 'notice to quit' should not be honored by such professors?" They must honor it. Should they refuse, the statutes provide that appeal be made to the Supreme Court, whose duty it would be to compel them to obey. Such an application of the constitutional and legal remedy would effectually "empty, sweep and garnish" the seminary of any such usurpers and of their corrupt and corrupting influence! Surely a great responsibility now rests upon those visitors and upon the whole body, especially the Congregational branch, of the Christian church. Not only should the visitors be called and pressed up to the great duty of the hour, but they should be encouraged, assisted, held up to it and in it, until that great "school of the prophets" has not only ceased to be a fountain of theological and spiritual pollution, but till from it shall again issue "streams which shall make glad the city of our God"—until her light, relieved of those influences which now becloud and obscure it, shall again shine forth "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible"—to the enemy—"as an army with banners.

DANGERS THAT THREATEN THE REPUBLIC.

BY T. S. WALTER.

ED. CYNOSURE:—That every nation, past or present, have had conflicts, none will question. These conflicts have all been the results of causes that preceded them. The conflicts of past nations are of but little value to us, only as we discern the causes that produced them, and see if like causes now exist in our own nation, and if so to avert the conflicts by removing the causes.

If Pharaoh had discerned the cause, and been willing to remove the cause of "conflict between the gods of Egypt and the God of the whole earth," he and his hosts had not been overthrown in the sea. There are many examples on the pages of history, both sacred and profane, that may shed light upon the dangers before our own glorious Republic. It has been demonstrated in history that in departing from God's laws and will nations have been overthrown. Hence our safety lies in conformity to the Divine will. God has by his providence, if not by special revelation, shown man that wisdom is above rubies. "Wisdom," says Solomon, "is the principal thing," so that the opposite, ignorance, is the greatest foe to man. Thus we see that ignorance is one of the dangers that threaten our Republic. While ignorance in the abstract is to be dreaded, yet ignorance of the acts of the institutions and organizations within our nation are of more consequence to us as a people. When dangers are seen then the greatest danger is past; so the danger from ignorance to the nation in the main is past, because it has been seen. The generous provisions of Congress proposed two years ago for education in the South and West, blended with the pre-existing school system of the States, aided by the many institutions of learning with open portals, will exercise a benign influence upon the masses. The acts of organizations and institutions must be shown the people, and this can only be accomplished by private effort until they engross the attention of the many. Then if their tendency is wrong they must be removed to avert conflict in the nation. Ignorance claimed the attention of the nation, the necessary provision to remove will be made, and if continued the danger will soon be past. We hope in our next to speak of some other dangers to the Republic.

MR. LOGAN'S SPEECH IN THE SENATE.

BY W. S. TITUS.

If Mr. Logan had substituted secret societies for secret sessions his speech would have been a masterly argument against all secret societies. Seeing that Mr. Logan is a high Mason, his position against secrecy in the Senate is remarkable. If he is strictly honest, his logic will drive him out of the Masonic lodge. He says "the treacherous stiletto would give place to open and manly warfare." How forcibly this illustrates the proscription that anti-secrecy men often feel without knowing where it comes from; their business is deranged, their reputation is assailed, and still they cannot tell where the hand is that struck them. He is prophetic in his declaration that the "power of public opinion is rising on this subject."

The people felt that they must and should know what Senators were doing. The principle of growth was coming to be recognized everywhere. It is because of the growth of the principle of liberty; of the principle of fair dealing." How aptly these principles, layed down by this Masonic statesman, apply to all secret societies. He is unwittingly sapping the foundation of his own secret order as well as all others of the kind.

He says again. Let Senators have done with childishness, and put on the garb of men. It seems to bring great joy to some Senators' souls to see the galleries cleared and the people turned out, as if some great mysterious thing was to be done in the Senate when the doors were closed—as if the Senate was in some way to become a magician and turn sticks into snakes, or do some equally incomprehensible thing. The whole thing is an absolute farce. Could any Anti-mason give a more logical analysis of the thousand and one secret societies of this country? Why cannot men demonstrate the same common sense and logic when they talk about secret societies in general? What is more of a farce than the hollow pretensions of the numerous secret clans now imposing on the people of this country? It is worse than a farce; it is an evil that will sap the foundation of this government and land it in anarchy and ruin if not checked. "The power of public opinion" is rising against not only secret sessions in the Senate, but against all secret plotting, whether in an organized or an unorganized form. The people are coming to see that the dividing and subdividing of the people of this free nation into a thousand secret clans, each one in sworn conspiracy against every other, is incompatible with the genius of such a government, and one or the other must go down. May the tide of this opinion roll on like the mighty tidal waves of the sea, until every sham organization, whether secret or open, shall be swept from the earth.

RETRIBUTION.

The rich railroad and other Sabbath-breaking and God-defying corporations realize that smoldering volcanic forces threaten them with ruin and overthrow. We have mingled freely with the strikers in their uprisings with a purpose to feel the pulse of the movements. The ferment and terrorism have not nearly culminated. The real cause of this unrest and feverishness lies far back of the ordinary relations of capital and labor. These rich, soulless and corrupt companies have trained hundreds of thousands of men to Sabbath desecration. They have bribed them to barter conscience and to trample upon the Bible for bread. God will curse every capitalist whose steam whistles are shrieking upon his holy Sabbaths. He will turn loose the hungry and desperate hordes whom they have debauched by Sabbath breaking. "Woe to him that increaseth that which is not his! how long? and to him that ladeth himself with thick clay! Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee, and awaken suddenly that shall vex thee, and thou shall be for booties unto them?" Hab. 2: 6, 7. Hardened men, stultified by Sabbath breaking, will seize them like wild beasts. One of them can spread a track, or fire an oil train or freight house in a moment. "Wherefore thus saith the Holy One of Israel. Because ye despise this word, and trust in oppression and perverseness and stay thereon; therefore this iniquity shall be to you as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall, whose breaking cometh suddenly in an instant." Isa. 30: 12, 13.

VACATION NOTES.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 30.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From the clear skies, the crisp and bracing air, and the snow-clad mountains about Reno, Nevada, to this metropolis of the Pacific we ran down without steam and with brakes on. The change is great but not unpleasing. For the roar of the Truckee over its rocks by which the ear was soothed to slumber, now early and late the din and clamor of a great city alarms the ear. The clear skies and pure air give way to cloudy weather which San Franciscans call fog. But to-day is clear, and the sweet persuasion of the sunshine has almost banished overcoats and furs from the crowds upon the streets.

The Central Pacific runs through some of the grandest scenery which a railway train ever attempted to pass in the night. What could have been the exigences of business which led the managers to so time their trains I do not know, but they have thereby murdered a thousand noble and life-blessing emotions before they could be born. Our train was two hours late, and so all was not lost. It was not yet daylight when we passed the gorges between Blue Canon and Alta, which an accommodating brakesman who has been thirteen years in these mountains said furnished the grandest scenery of the whole trans-continental. If this be so, after passing Cape Horn I wonder what it can be. As we rounded this bold mountain side upon a sheer precipice 1,500 above the hamlet and the valley, one must needs cry out with exultation. The sun was risen upon the heights around, but no mist obscured the deep gorge where the American river swept on to the west, often tearing its way, as if enraged, through the interposing cliffs. From Cape Horn and Colfax we run down the steep grades to the Sacramento valley, vineyards, orchards, grain fields, worn-out placer gulches on every side, and great sections of light clay where the hydraulic mining has swept off ore, rock, earth and vegetation from the hills until the law interposed to save the farm lands of the valley from a burial of silt more perpetual than the ash heap that covers Pompeii. Past Sacramento flats the eye and brain rest and rejoice in the quiet beauty of splendid farm lands with a back ground of rolling hills, grass-clad and green to their summits. Earth has few such lovely spots as bound the bay about Benicia, and the crossing on the great four-track ferry is a day's event.

Here in San Francisco I found Bro. Loveless and his devoted wife about the Master's business as earnestly as at No. 221 W. Madison St. last winter. They are holding meetings every evening at Silver Star Hall, and prodigals are coming back to the Father's house. They continue until their return on Monday, when Bro. Reid, an Illinois teacher, will continue them. He has come here with his family to work for the lost, and the Silver Star hall and hotel, owned by Dr. McDonald, the Prohibition banker and bitters manufacturer, who is heartily interested in continuing a mission work in the building.

Yesterday, while visiting the Cliff House with Bro. Loveless and family, we had the unexpected pleasure of the company of Mrs. H. H. Fuller and daughter from Wheaton, and before leaving the beach who should come toiling up the steep incline but our old friends and neighbors, W. K. Guild with Mrs. Guild, Mr. Hulett, of Wheaton, Dr. and Mrs. Guild of Bartlett, and Mr. and Mrs. Warfield of Geneva. We almost held an Anti-masonic camp meeting, only the late coming friends were all hoarse and voiceless from bad colds got among the Brighamites at Salt Lake City last Sabbath. Their songs and testimonies would need to have been in pantomime.

The afternoon was spent in weary toiling over these California hills looking after the two United Presbyterian pastors—not, however, as if they were stray sheep. I shall find them in due time. The tramp was not in vain, for from one height I had a glorious view of the city and bay and its farther shore where lie in beauty and in peace the suburbs of Oakland, Alameda and other towns with their background of pasture-clad mountains. Another more important—yes, most important result, was the meeting with a Congregational pastor who, though a Mason and a Good Templar, wants the subject of lodgery discussed, and urged me to present a paper before the meeting of the Congregational pastors in their Monday meeting at the Palace Hotel. This morning a welcome was given me at the office of the Pacific by Drs. Kimball and Warren, and the arrangement about completed for a presentation of our reform in this meeting and its discussion by the pastors. I hope to see Gen. O. O. Howard to-day and secure his promise to attend that meeting. He has lately come here as commanding general of this department. This will be an introduction at least of our work to the churches of this coast which have not yet considered the evils that beset their work from the lodge. Some are awake to the danger. One pastor said he regarded Rum, Romanism and Lodgery as the triple-headed monster that rules in the politics and is ruining the churches of the coast. God forbid that Christians should forget in whom is the power of victory. H. L. KELLOGG.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

WHAT THE DYNAMITERS SAY.

One of the leading editorial articles in Herr Most's paper, New York, on the riot in Chicago, speaks of the police being "regailed with dynamite bombs." The article concludes with: "Long live the war," and "Hurrah for Chicago."

Another editorial article concludes with: "Agitation! Organization! Rebellion! Workingmen, arm! Arm!" and declares that freedom of speech no longer exists in the land. "The police have invoked it! War is declared! Let the people arm!"

One of the leading Socialists of New York was interviewed. Speaking of the riot in Chicago, he said: "It is glorious news. Spies is a great man. I only wish that we had the same news from all over the world." "Are the New York anarchists in sympathy with their brethren of the West?" "Of course they are. We are actuated by the same principles, and have the same methods of abolishing the blood-sucking capitalistic classes and raising the condition of the working masses. I have only one regret, and that is, that there were not one but a dozen bombs thrown, and instead of the few blue-coated ruffians who were injured, the whole lot of them were not wiped out. It is only the first germ of the revolution, and will spread over the whole country. We may have it here before long, and if we do we are prepared for it"

"We shall continue the fight for liberty and right which this paper ever wages to the terror of the robbing employers and their deeds, and in their faces we fling our motto, which is: 'Down with everything which resists us!'"—Arbeiter-Zettung of May 7th.

"I shall wait just as long as I think necessary for the public to take warning, and then you decide your own fate. It must be liberty for the people or death for capital. I am not choosing more. It is your choice and your last. I love humanity, and therefore die for it. No one can do more. Every drop of my blood shall count an avenger, and woe to America when these are in arms. I have not yet slept, nor shall I until I sleep in death or my fellowmen are on the road to liberty."—A. R. Parsons, in letter to Daily News.

DEATH FROM INITIATION.

The following from the News of the 8th gives the case of a probable victim of initiation:

William J. Blew died at the county hospital last Wednesday. In the opinion of competent physicians his death was hastened, at least, if not directly caused by the fright he received while undergoing mock initiation ceremonies on his entrance to a local court of Foresters.

Blew was a compositor on the Times, and was induced to apply for membership to a new court being formed on the west side. He was regarded in the office as eccentric, and, it is said, greatly feared the ordeal which he was told he would have to undergo on his entrance. The other men in the office told the Chief Ranger of the court of Blew's peculiarities, and a job was put up on him. When he applied at the court he was put through a series of awful ceremonies which are supposed to have shocked him to the extent of blighting his mind and ultimately hastening him to his death.

Dr. Thomas A. Davis, who cared for him, never supposed that his malady was caused by a shock until he saw something to that effect in a morning paper. He placed little reliance on the story until he came to make an autopsy after Blew's death.

"We found all the organs except the brain sound," said Dr. Davis to a Daily News reporter. "The brain was very large and soft, and the cause of the death was degeneration of the brain tissue. We knew we would find this condition. But we were astonished, indeed, when we found no tumor of any kind. The symptoms were just such as would be induced by the location of a tumor on the brain. Those symptoms without the tumor make the case a curiosity in medical science, and one which has seldom come under my notice. A sudden emotion, such as Blew is supposed to have experienced, often causes dementia, but we rarely find an organic change from such a shock to the feelings. Still, such a thing is not nearly so rare as the presence of Blew's symptoms without an accompanying tumor. I think his death was certainly hastened by the shock. He would probably have died."

The chief of the order of Foresters was interviewed and asked:

"What have you to say about the initiation ceremonies of the order?"

"The formula are private matters; but I am at liberty to state, however, that it is our custom to have a good time at the time of the ceremony and after the meeting has adjourned. We usually have a lunch and something to drink."

"Are the initiatory ceremonies of the Foresters unusually severe?"

"No. We don't propose to have any but strong men in our order; there is risk enough at best."

MASONIC LEGENDS.—"The age is iconoclastic. Old landmarks, old modes of thinking, all give way before the spirit of innovation which is rife in our land. Yet there are old landmarks spite of Jacob Norton, Rebold and all others, who, with axe in hand, are hewing down the ornaments and supports of our temple. What a pity that such men devote their time and study to destruction! Far better would they build up and strengthen. That which they deem rubbish and would cast away from Freemasonry as such, is the very soul and sentiment of the institution. It is all that makes our system winning. Eviscerate Masonic history of its fancies, its sympathies, its legends, mythes and fables, and you make it as dry as a deist's religion."—Rob. Morris. By all means have the legends. It is better that Masonry should be silly than dry, but don't call these silly tales truths.

Why Morris protests against Jacob Norton will be seen in the following extract from a long article in the International Masonic Review, in which he demolishes the idea of ancient Freemasonry:

"Notwithstanding all your arguments for the antiquity of Masonry, it cannot be denied that Freemasons have been grossly deceived. First, by Romancers; and second, by Dreamers. The former supplied us with traditions, symbols, and degrees, and the latter gave explanations to the traditions and ascribed meanings to the symbols which the original inventors never dreamed of. There is an old adage, viz.: 'as long as some are fools others will be knaves,' and, consequently, we had in the craft a succession of both parties and continuous changes in the ritual. Another instance, in a Masonic catechism of 1723, the earliest ritual in existence, I find as follows:

"'Ques. What lodge are you of?'

"'Ans. I am of the lodge of St. Stephens.'

"The next ritual tinker had it 'the lodge of St. John,' and the next tinker made it 'from the lodge of the holy St. John at Jerusalem;' and this, of course, furnished conclusive evidence to Bro. Dreamer that St. John was an eminent Mason, a Grand Master, and what not! and even Bro. Mackey, in his Lexicon, says: 'We do not dedicate lodges to the saints, because they were Christian saints, but because they were eminent Masons. After the "parallel lines" were introduced into the ritual (that is near 1776) a new romaneer invented the story of how the Evangelist was Grand Mastered when he was over ninety years of age, and I think that the last invention dates either late in the last century or the beginning of this."

The following is the newly discovered origin of the Master Mason's Degree: The Master Mason had to go away, some say to Rome, for some purpose connected with the plans of the building of the chapel of Rosslyn castle. During his absence, which was prolonged, a clever apprentice, a widow's son, either from the plans or by his own genius, carved and completed the apprentice pillar out of the solid stone. When the master returned and found the pillar erected, he was so jealous of the success of his apprentice that he killed him with one blow on the forehead with a heavy setting maul. To prove this legend to be a fact, visitors to the spot are still shown three carved heads in the eastern part of the chapel, the master's, the apprentice's with a mark on his forehead, and the mother's. Some, however, believe that these three heads are mystical, and are meant to point to a well-known legend of our order, familiar to all our Master Masons. If so, this is an undersigned evidence to the antiquity of Freemasonry and its traditions.—Freemason.

BROWSING A BISHOP.

DEAR BRO. SHERMAN:—The other day I went to the Y. M. C. A., of this city, to hear Sam Jones and his begotten son, Sam Small. Before the meeting commenced Bishop Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal church of Chicago, came to me, shaking hands heartily, and shaking tongue, too. He had prayed, he said, for an interview with me. The object of it was to show me how to publish my French paper, La Trompette Evangelique. To sum up the whole thing in a few words, I will say that he thinks I ought not to speak against the Freemasons. "They are your best friends," said he, "against Popery. They will help you, too, if you let them alone." "How can they help me," I answered, "when they themselves have a great need to be helped in the ways of the Lord. As the Pharisees of old, they make broad their phylacteries and enlarge the borders of their garments, and love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men 'Rabbi,' 'Rabbi,' as you do yourself, Bishop Fallows. I suppose your are one of these," said I to my interlocutor. "Yes," said he, "I am a Knight Templar." "Don't you know, Bishop, that Freemasonry is an enormous falsehood, a false religion which professes to save men upon other conditions than those revealed in the Gospel of Christ? That it refuses all examination and veils itself, as Pastor C. G. Finney, of Oberlin College, Ohio, says, under a mantle of oath-bound secrecy; that it is a virtual conspiracy against both church and state? Ought you not, Bishop Fallows, to be ashamed of yourself to come and propose to me such a degradation as not to unmask the false and profane teachings, the barbarous and savage oaths of Freemasonry? Had you not better go on your knees and ask God to enlighten you on the subject? Ah," said I, "at that price I do not want the material help of those who theoretically and practically deny Jesus Christ, and that is what you do in and at your churches. No wonder that the world has come in those churches with all its puerilities and profanities."

I was going to continue my harangue to Bishop Fallows, when Mr. Hemmingway, president of the Y. M. C. A., came to the rescue of our Rabbi, and invited him to the chief seat in the synagogue, where the two Sams and a host of ministers—Freemasons—were sitting and waiting for Bishop Fallows, who opened the meeting by a prayer to his god that I don't know. May God open his eyes and heart is the continued prayer of La Trompette Evangelique, of Chicago, and its editor. P. A. SEGUIN, Pastor.

REFORM NEWS.

ADDRESS OF REV. W. S. TITUS BEFORE THE MICHIGAN CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

What will be the probable result of the action of the late General Conference? I answer, one of four things must occur:

1. The aggressors must abandon their project; or,
2. The loyal party must abandon their opposition to the Commission act; or,
3. There must be a compromise between the parties; or,
4. There will be a division in the church.

To hope for an abandonment of their project on the part of the nullifiers, is to hope almost against hope. If they are not convinced that legal difficulty will confront them and throw the church property into the hands of the loyal party in the end, they will unscrupulously disregard every other appeal that may be made to them, no matter how just it may be. When we consider the character of the men at the front in this revolution, we will have little to encourage us. Some of them are unscrupulous, not over-pious, ambitious, and bent on holding what they have got, and grasping for more. They are able men, but their ability develops more in low cunning and bulldozing than in honorable methods of warfare; they hide their errors under the rubbish of sophistry, and the common people fail to detect them. Again, facing the fact these men hold the reins of government and control the general interests of the church, including most, if not all, of the general boards and college faculties, we see their advantage.

As it was in the late rebellion, the rebels had the advantage of being in possession of the reins of government. They had the president (a weak one at that), the offices, the army, the navy, the treasury, the forts—in short, the whole machinery of the government. It was a dark day for the nation, and a time that tried men's souls. But God was against the rebels and the moral sense of the Christian world was against them, and it was only a question of time as to the collapse of the rebellion. So we, as a church, are called to pass through a similar experience. The parallel is striking. For thirty years or more the rebels strove to fasten slavery on the whole nation, by intrigue, nullification and bulldozing. So the enemies of our anti-secrecy principles have for the last thirty years kept up a similar system of nullification, intrigue, and at last regular bulldozing; and now our Fort Sumter is in the hands of the nullifiers, and a Buchanan bishop at the head of the government. This is, without doubt, the darkest day in the history of this once glorious little United Brethren church. But—

2. Will the loyal brethren yield to the aggressors? Many of them say they will not. They cannot consent to have the church and its founders so dishonored. They are conscientious in their opposition to revolution and feel that God is with them, and that they cannot stultify themselves by fellowshiping in the church members of the Christ-dishonoring lodge. They are thoroughly convinced that the act of the General Conference was a high-handed usurpation of power that did not belong to it, and that it is a precedent that will lay the foundation for further inroads upon the purity and simplicity of the church of our fathers. They will not abandon their opposition. To cease to contend for the long established purity of the church would be ignoble and cowardly, and probably end in the utter extinction of the church's testimony against the anti-Christian orders of the age.

3. Will the parties compromise? The nullifiers have already shown that nothing short of a complete abandonment of all prohibitory laws against the lodge will be acceptable to them. They proved this beyond a doubt when they rejected Mittendorf's amendment in General Conference that proposed to designate Masons and Odd-fellows to be excluded from the church by the new law. A compromise on their part must be based on a strong presumption that they cannot hold the church property, under the new constitution, in connection with a general paralyzing of all the general interests of the church. The power of a legal and financial pressure is the only consideration that will induce them to disgorge. And this our opportunity. As to a compromise on the part of the loyal wing of the church, this much may be said: If any secret society can be found that is fully in accord with the teaching and spirit of the Gospel, I suppose the Brethren would consent to fellowship it. My own opinion, however, is that all social secret societies are contrary to the plain, unselfish teaching of God's Word, as well as an infringement on the rights of all outsiders. If the avowed object of a social society is the good of society in general, then each individual has a perfect right not only to know but participate in the workings of said society. As well call a secret town meeting. A compromise with a party that has developed such a lawless spirit and reckless slaughtering of sacred obligations will be most difficult, if not impossible; indeed, it would be bordering on wickedness.

4. The last resort will be a separation—a much deplored and long dreaded division in the only American church that has existed for over a century without any permanent disruption or division. Good men are divided as to the best policy to be adopted by the loyal Brethren. Some of our best men are settling down into the conviction that a separation under the present and prospective circumstances is rather desirable than otherwise. They think the prospect is that the church will be so overrun by lodge men by the time the vote is to be taken on the proposed change that the result would be disastrous, even if the law men were to recognize the election legal and do their best to defeat it by vote; while, on the other hand, many think and feel that God is on our side, and that the discussion will wake up our people as they never were before, and that hundreds will thoroughly investigate the subject in all its bearings, so that before the sitting of the next General Conference we will have more true friends of the church than we have now. Another encouraging feature of the question is the growing opposition to secret societies in the country. When the U. B. church first inaugurated their opposition to secretism there were no newspapers printed in all the country against organized secrecy. Now they are springing up all over the land, boldly and fearlessly opposing the lodge, thus coming to our help. Other churches, also, are espousing the cause in this conflict with the dark orders. A host of able and fearless lecturers are being thrust out into the field of conflict, all bidding us God-speed. God is pouring out his Spirit upon the field of reform, and Joseph Cook says: "Find the point upon which the Divine finger is pressing, and press on that point." This he calls co-operation with God. And just here is where our brethren of the Commission project have left the Divine leading.

"See! see the faltering ones—Backward they fall!"

This is not the time for the United Brethren to falter and bring disgrace upon their faithful Captain and beloved church. Rather say with the poet—

"Surely, the Captain may depend on me!"

The spirit of reform is abroad in the world, and he is morally and socially blind who does not see his opportunity and duty. The question naturally arises: If we, as a church, waged a successful war against the lodge almost single-handed, keeping the enemy at bay for over a hundred years, will it not be downright cowardice for us now to ignominiously retreat, just as the Sheridan of our army is being heard in the distance—

"Hold the fort! for I am coming—"

(Sing it—)

"Ho! my comrades, see the signal
Waving in the sky!—
Reinforcements now appearing:
Victory is nigh!"

Victory may not appear nigh; but who expected slavery to die? What are we to think of those tall bishops and boasting D. D.'s crouching down at the feet of their lodge-masters like a cowardly dog at the feet of his master? Cowardice, the love of money, and worldly applause are at the foundation of the whole Commission business. In all the discussion of this question, from the output of Weaver's "Outlook" down to the close of the General Conference, there was not an untarnished motive for a change in our law presented; not a single claim set up that the church would be more pure or pious; not a single intimation that God would be better pleased with the church;—but simply this: We would get more members and more money (and even that is problematical), especially in cities.

Mr. President, I submit, can we consent to admit into the church secret orders that reject Christ and teach the doctrine of salvation without the atonement of Christ? For they all send their dead to the grand lodge or the grand army above, no matter what has been the moral character of the deceased. And our church is to be opened to these infidel institutions for no higher motive than to increase our numbers and wealth! What a prostitution of sacred trusts! Can we afford it? Can we afford to blot out our record of testimony against the lodge for the past hundred years to please the world and worldly church members?

But what will the result be? If the Commission had been strictly honest when Judge Shauk informed them that they had no authority to order an election, they would have stopped right then and there—and some of them desired it, but the majority of the more unscrupulous determined to push it through; and a system of bulldozing was inaugurated and has been pursued all along with a persistency worthy of a better cause. Another wicked trick of the Commission was to stave off the election for three years, to give them time to fill the church with lodge men, so as to make a sure thing of it when the vote was taken. And they are running in bogus members as fast as the rebels ran settlers into Kansas to carry the country for slavery. The fact is, the whole thing from beginning to end has been carried through by deception and fraud; and what can be the result of such action but disaster and ruin? If we submit to them, we will be partakers of their sins and our confidence in our leaders will be destroyed; and who will have courage to toil under such leadership? These men have staked their all and they will be desperate, and our only hope is in breaking their power by withholding from them the sinews of war. If the people can be enlightened, I have no fear that they will submit to an illegal and fraudulent attempt to admit the Christ-dishonoring lodge into the church. The majority of our people are honest and true United Brethren.

As to the final result, if the nullifiers cannot be broken down in their attempt, then there must be a division in the church; and the only question left to be settled then will be: Which party will hold the homestead? This will be settled at the end of a legal contest. And I, for one, hereby pledge my sacred honor and my available means to see the thing through, or leave somebody behind me to carry out my last will and testament!

ORANGEISM AND FREEMASONRY.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am learning a good deal about Orangeism and its similarity to Masonry. The fight here is hot, hard and severe. Truth is having a few victories. A few society men say, "God bless you, keep right on, you are on the right track" who, a while ago, counted the idolatry a good thing. One of them had just withdrawn from the Orange Lodge, and says if I am driven from this circuit by secrecy he will withdraw his support from the church. An Orangeman says that the lodge has not received a member since I cam here, and thinks it will die with this generation. One of the former pastors was induced to join this lodge, but became disgusted—tried to salt rottenness with soundness—and when he left, predicted that the lodge would be the death of the church.

In the same lodge-room an endeavor was lately made to organize a lodge of Foresters. I attended, but was only permitted to ask questions, not to reply, though I expressed a desire to do so. They had a great time painting lodge benevolence to look like Christian benevolence, etc. I asked for the use of the lodge, but was told I could not have it unless the Forester lectures could be there; but they quietly canvassed the whole community, and got up another meeting without my knowledge, and, to their chagrin, as a final result they had only six names. A couple of these are said to be unhealthy, and would probably be rejected by this benevolent (?) order, whose machinery requires about $50 from its dupes to set it in motion, so that the hum of its wheels as yet is only a distant enchantment; and instead of the impotent blessings promised the people, come Forestry's impotent curses on the head of their protector. S. O. IRVINE.

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY.

THE LIMIT OF PATIENCE PASSED.

That bomb which exploded on Desplaines street Tuesday night should be the last utterance of anarchy tolerated in Chicago. Until peace is restored, life is secure, and the law's supremacy is established, all agitation for social or industrial reforms should cease. The interests of capital and labor unite in repudiating the rabid sentiments and hideous deeds of the Socialists. There can be no compromise with incendiarism and crime. It is folly to palter with the situation.

Last January the Daily News gave a detailed account of how the Socialists of Chicago were preparing dynamite bombs for use against the authorities. Mayor Harrison dismissed the warning with the sneer: "The Socialists are blatherskites. They are not going to organize to blow up anything or shoot anybody." The Daily News obtained a bomb such as the Socialists were making, and reproduced it by a cut, with a description of how it was to be used, and how certain men were practicing its use. Chief of Police Ebersold replied: "I don't take any stock in this talk about bombs and explosives. Nobody but cranks would think of attempting anything here with them." The militia officers pooh-poohed the idea of bombs being effectively used against Springfield rifles.

Last Tuesday night, the Mayor, the police, and the militia were shocked into the acknowledgment that the incendiary harangues of Socialists had bred a progeny of lawless fanatics, and the ingenuity of "cranks" had armed them with an implement of fatal destructiveness. But it is no time now for reproaches over unheeded warnings. The Socialists have let loose their hatred against the peace of the community and the authority of the law in two days' rioting and one night's hellish work. With their first attempt to put their theories into practice they have forfeited the right to utter their insane venom against society. If words lead to such deeds, then it behooves the law to stop the mouth that utters and incites incendiarism, violence and crime.

The right of free speech must not be construed into the right to advise murder, arson and anarchy. The nettle communism that has been permitted to flourish in Chicago must be plucked up by the roots now, and those who have watered and tended it must be forever crushed. Chicago invites the residence of the sober, the industrious, and the law-abiding of every nation, but it offers no sanctuary for those who would dethrone American law for the rule of the torch, the bludgeon, and the bomb.

The days of socialistic agitation in Chicago are numbered.—News.

A committee of strikers waited on a manufacturer and informed him that he must discharge a laborer who had been in his employ for nearly a score of years. He asked why, and the answer was, "He refused to join the Knights of Labor." "How long have you been a member of that order?" was the next question. "A year." "How long have you been in this country?" "Five years." "Well, my great grandfather came to this country more than a hundred years ago. My grandfather, my father, and myself were born here. My grandfather was a soldier in '76, my father in 1812, and I in 1862. The man you want me to discharge belongs to a family who have lived here for a century. He was a Union soldier. He has worked for me three times as long as you have been in the country, and yet you, foreign born and not yet naturalized, come to me and tell me who I must, and who I must not employ. You remind me of the story of Patrick's Island—a mythical spot somewhere in the Pacific, where the custom was to make the latest comer king, the moment a stranger landed he was crowned. You fresh immigrants seem to think that America is Patrick's Island, but you will find yourselves mistaken. We do not propose to give up the control of this country just yet to those who have not been here long enough to speak English without a foreign brogue." This is a fair specimen of the spirit of a majority of the labor leagues who complain of the oppression of capital.—Interior.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE WRITINGS OF JOHN.

LESSON VIII, May 23, 1886.—Jesus at Bethesda.—John 5: 5-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Wilt thou be made whole?"—John 5: 16.

TIME.—Probably about the 1st of April, A. D. 28. At the Passover.

PLACE.—Jerusalem, at the pool of Bethesda.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The double healing. vs 5-9. There are truths in this lesson which apply both to spiritual and bodily healing. "Wilt thou be made whole?" was a question which, from the lips of Him who could never be, or consent to be, a partial Saviour, though the man understood it only in reference to his personal infirmity, must have meant infinitely more. That disease and suffering is always the consequence of individual sin, or even want of faith on the part of the sufferer, is an unscriptural idea, as proved by John 9: 3. But there is certainly a very close connection between a healthy body and a healthy soul; and in the land where they shall no more say, "I am sick," the perfect release from all pain and suffering is coincident with the perfect release from sin. How many invalids are like this man at the pool of Bethesda, putting their sole trust in human means and trying countless physicians and all known remedies, but forgetting to seek help from Him who made the body, controls all the laws which govern it, and understands perfectly all its hidden mainsprings. We do not consider it strange but perfectly natural that a man who makes a watch should be also able to set it right when it goes wrong. Shall we think it strange that the Creator of our bodies should have the same power—to alter diseased conditions to those of health, and in so doing not only not violate any law of nature, but really act in the highest and most perfect agreement with those laws? With the effort to obey the command, "Arise and walk," the electric current of a new life coursed through his withered limbs. There is neither sense nor Scripture in the doctrine that we are to make no effort for our own salvation. We are to make a great effort. We are to "arise and walk" in spite of every natural infirmity of mind, will or disposition which cripples our souls; and thereby we set in motion electric spiritual currents which flow into us in tides of strength and healing, so that still the saving power is of God and not of us.

2. True and false regard for God's law. vs. 10-18. The same men who laid this charge against Christ could so far violate their own traditions as to lift a fallen beast of burden out of a ditch on the Sabbath day. There is need now, when the most stringent laws are passed to protect property, animate and inanimate, while morals and virtue are left unguarded, to reiterate in the ears of our legislators Christ's scathing inquiry, "How much is a man better than a sheep?" It is the essence of Pharisaism to care for things rather than persons—to look out for material interests and let what is vital to humanity go. Malicious misrepresentation of Christ's work was not enough; they sought his life. Error must always resort to such weapons because she has no other. In the past she replied by condemning truth's adherents to the stake, and the prison, and the thumbscrew; so now she answers the self-devoted reformers who are fighting for a pure church against the anti-Christ of the lodge in as nearly the same fashion as our more enlightened age will allow. But to all who suffer for Christ's sake this lesson is full of consolation. The bitterer the cup of persecution, the more fully it is given unto them to enter into the fellowship of his sufferings; and the servant is not greater than his Lord.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How can we reconcile Phil. 2: 12 with Phil. 2: 13? 2 Cor. 3: 5.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"And a certain man was there." In one of the five porches of the pool of Bethesda.

"Which had an infirmity." The original implies rather a loss of power than a positive disease; probably it was a nervous disease of paralytic type.

"And knew." The word knew, in the original, indicates one of those instantaneous perceptions by which the truth became known to Jesus according as the task of the moment demanded.

Why did Jesus make this selection? Jesus read the man's past life and present condition of mind, and saw that he was in a state to receive spiritual good from the healing—convicted of sin, repentant, ready to believe.

"Wilt thou be made whole?" This question was asked, probably, in order to rouse the sick man out of his lethargy and despondency.

"I have no man." He is not only sick but friendless.

"To put me into the pool." Literally, "in order to (4: 47) throw" me into the pool; perhaps implying that the gush of water did not last long.

"While I am coming." Thus picturing the extreme haste and rapidity with which the favorable opportunity was seized.

"Jesus saith unto him, 'Rise.'" As in case of the paralytic (Mark 2: 9), Christ makes no inquiry as to the man's faith. Christ knew he had faith; and the man's attempting to rise and carry his bed after thirty-eight years of impotency was an open confession of faith.

"Take up thy bed." Light mattress or blanket.

"And walk." These commands would (1) test the man's faith; (2) prove the completeness of his cure.

"And immediately the man was made whole." The instantaneousness of the cure indicates its miraculous character.

"And took up his bed and walked." Showing the certainty and the completeness of the cure.

The diseased man has been a long time sick. He is helpless, friendless, in despair. He waits for an imagined moving of the water—an expected Divine cure that is to come without act or interposition on his part; and it never comes.

"The Jews said, . . . 'It is the Sabbath day; it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed.'" Either he must have left his bed at the pool, to be stolen, or he must have been allowed to take it home with him.

"He that made me whole, the same said." He had been authorized by One endorsed as sent from God; and this was, indeed, the very ground which Christ himself took.

"What man is that which." Once more they ignore the miracle and attack the command.

"He that was healed wist (knew) not who it was." Jesus had been at Jerusalem but little, and the man was so lame that he could not go around to see.

"For Jesus had conveyed himself away." Better, withdrew.

"Afterward." It is a sign of good augury that "Jesus findeth him in the temple," rather than anywhere else. It looks as though he was there returning thanks for the great mercy which had been so lately vouchsafed him.

"Sin no more." The original expresses rather, "No longer continue to sin" (compare 1 John 3: 6, 9). How his sickness was connected with his sin must remain undefined; but the connection is implied.

"Lest a worse thing come unto thee." More sinning after this warning would deserve greater punishment.

"The man departed and told the Jews." He expected probably, in the simplicity of his heart, that the name of Him whom so many counted as a prophet, if not as the Messiah himself, would have been sufficient to stop the mouths of gainsayers.

"And therefore." On this account, as related below.

"Did the Jews persecute Jesus." His language indicates not a legal persecution, but a malicious pursuit.

No less than seven miracles are recorded as wrought by Jesus on the Sabbath day, some of them among the most conspicuous and memorable in his ministry.

"But Jesus answered them:" "My Father worketh hitherto" (until now) "and I work." The Father's working is a pattern for our working.

"Therefore the Jews sought the more." They have now a second reason for their persecution.

"To kill him." Nothing less than this would do for them.

"But said . . . that God was his (own) Father." His Father in the highest peculiar sense.

"Making himself equal with God."" On the same level with God.

PRACTICAL.

1. Many are waiting for some singular emotion, remarkable impression, or celestial vision. Tens of thousands are waiting in the use of means and ordinances, and vows and resolutions, and have so waited time out of mind, and waited in vain.

2. Suffering often makes people selfish. Perhaps the loving Lord intended to rebuke this spirit of selfishness by choosing out the friendless one.

3. The greatness of our needs, our friendless and helpless condition, does not repel, but attracts the Saviour to our help.

4. Beside every pool of mercy or privilege in human life there are one or more unbefriended suffers. Jesus teaches us to look after those who have nobody to care for them.

5. This man, probably, brought this suffering upon himself by doing what he knew was wrong. (ver. 14). The fact that we may be ourselves to blame for our sufferings is no reason why we should not go to God to deliver us from them.—MacDonald.

6. A contrast. At Bethesda only the first comers had seeming opportunity for healing. The Gospel is abundant and free to all. One's healing does not hinder, but helps, the healing of others.

7. Ver. 6, 8. There are some invalids who are not cured, because they will not be healed. They will not rise, they will not walk, they will not work; yet it may be that for their illness the work so detested is the only cure or alleviation.—MacDonald.

8. Many are not saved from their sins, because they do not wish to be healed. They are not willing to forsake their sins; they are not willing to take up the work for Jesus that lies close at hand.

9. When Christ commands us to do anything, he will give us strength to perform the command.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

ADOPTED AT CHICAGO, JUNE 20, 1884

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile hands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and, therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country: "For God, and home, and native land," and trust that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 13, 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.
13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.
14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.
15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 13, 1886.

CAPT. WILLIAM E. TOURTELETTE, whose acquaintance Mr. Kellogg made in Wheaton College and has now renewed in San Francisco, Cal., enlisted under Captain (now Judge) Seth Daniels in the One Hundred and Fifth Illinois Volunteers, and fought his company at Chickamauga, in the terrible battles about Lookout Mountain and Mission Ridge. Capt. Tourtelette entered college with a chest of carpenter's tools as his base of supply, and acquired a good education, when the war opened and took him to the front as orderly sergeant. His leg was shattered on the field, mis-set, rebroken and set again; but by indomitable strength of will and the blessing of God he has walked firmly along life's pathway, and enjoyed the confidence of the country which he tried to save. At the last reunion of the One Hundred and Fifth here at Wheaton Court House, Gen. Dustin assured us that Capt. Tourtelette would be present. Many were disappointed at not seeing him. We shall hope to hear from him by letter, and introduce him to our readers.

Will the Interior, Advance, Signal and other religious papers please mention:

1st. That the present terrible strike was not commenced about wages, but by a demand of a secret order that men should be dismissed who would not swear their oath and join their union; doubtless men who were Christians, and dared not disobey Christ's word, "Swear not."

2d. That it was continued by Irons' demand that Hoxie should "recognize" the Knights of Labor, a secret order, having its own legislature, laws, courts and penalties, all secret, as on a level with legitimate State and Federal governments, to recognize which, is to recognize treason against the United States.

3d. Will the press also notice that the seats of these bloody and expensive strikes are in the cities which exclude the Bible from schools, leaving no moral standard in its place?

4th and lastly. Will the press notice and notify its readers that there is an American party whose platform declares for recognition of God; a Sabbath for laborers, and the Bible in schools, and which was thoroughly prohibition eight or ten years before the Prohibition party was born. And that this American party has paid for headquarters in Chicago and Washington, D. C., and that its principles are advocated by able papers in several States, and professed by some hundreds of thousands of Christian people.

The Cynosure decorously and fervently asks the press to give the above information to their readers. We voted for St. John in 1884, and hundreds of Prohibitionists now favor opening the secret temperance lodges to the world, adopting the American name, and voting in 1888 for "God and home and national law."

JUDGING GOD.

"Snatch from his hand the balance and the rod; Rejudge his justice—be the god of God."—Pope.

Bishop Foster, of the M. E. church, Boston, has, in two numbers in the New York Independent, one of the most stupendous articles written in modern times. It is entitled, "The Outlook of the World." It culminates in Prohibitionism in this style. After a masterly analysis of the world's population, the bishop proceeds: "At the bottom are the devil's poor—the broad base of begrimed and destroyed masses of men and women who, in horrid amalgam, are called 'the vicious classes.' Heathenism has nothing worse to show.

'For a generation, Christendom has been hearing a low growl from the kennel where she has been battening these wild beasts of passion—a growl in the kennel where they have crunched their victims. What means to-day the roar along Trafalgar square and London streets?" (Add now the streets of Chicago and Milwaukee!) "Rum engenders poverty, and poverty crime. From the government rum-shop the wild beast hunts his prey. There are hordes marching, with banners emblazoned 'Dynamite!' 'Anarchism!' 'Communism!' 'Nihilism!' 'Labor League!' 'No Sabbath!' 'Down with the Church!' 'Down with the State!' recruited from the dram-shop and officered from the kennel. Are we so deaf that we do not hear the tramp of these gathering legions? The rum-hole must be closed, or the rum-hell will engulf Christendom!"

This is magnificent—sublime. But we are sorry to add from this same matchless article and writer what seems to be a sitting in judgment upon God. He says: "If the awful thought could once take possession of my mind that the whole heathen world must be lost forever simply because they are heathen, I would not send them a Gospel which reveals such a God. Convince me that there is a God at the head of the universe who, without fault of theirs or any chance of escape, will damn the dead, the living, and the yet to live millions of heathenism, and you make it forever impossible that he should be worshiped by any but devils, and by them only because he becomes their chief."

Now, the Cynosure objects to this good Prohibition bishop sitting in judgment on the Almighty and daring God to damn the heathen or any other sinners; and there are worse sinners here than there. We dwell with delight on our Saviour's friendship for "publicans and sinners;" his commendation of heathen centurions; sending Elijah to a non-Israelite widow; casting a devil out of the Syro-Phœnician woman's daughter, and preaching to half-heathen Samaritans, and putting the "Good Samaritan" above priest and Levite: and we are willing these acts of Christ should hold out hope to deserving heathens. But to damn God if he damns heathen is not logical or becoming in a Methodist bishop.

We are willing to leave devil-worship in Chicago, Milwaukee, Congo, or Japan to the gods they worship; and Gentile idolators, who worship God without Christ, do worship devils—unless, as Ingersoll thinks, Moses and Paul were mistaken. And all Socialists, Knights, and loathsome, long-haired loafers who would snatch property from the hands that have earned and saved it, to be run by the greasy curses who preach plunder and blood to the ignorant poor who are starving for bread, with cigars in their mouths and beer enough in their bellies to feed and clothe them—these all worship devils in their secret lodges. They "believe not" Christ, and they must "be damned," whether living in Africa or the United States, if Christ knew.

"Our faculties are inadequate to world-making." Let us not criticize God. Nor do we see how the eternal loss of one single soul does not make as much against the wisdom, power and goodness of God as the loss of a whole continent of them. The Cynosure proposes to go by the Bible till we have something better; and the Bible declares that the devil and his worshipers—beast, image and all—shall be cast into "the lake of fire and brimstone," whatever that is. This is the last we hear of them.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

Mr. Kellogg, now in California, has for fifteen years been principal editor of the Cynosure—writing the first page, the literary notices, making the selections, and superintending the make-up of the paper; besides, by correspondence, engaging and keeping up the powerful corps of correspondents. During this period he has stood so constantly behind the paper that it has in some sort overshadowed him and kept him out of sight. We avail ourselves of his absence to introduce him to his readers.

Mr. Kellogg entered college with his mind turned by an excellent mother toward labor in unevangelized nations. But, seeing idolatry could be practiced in Christian as well as in heathen countries, and that here it endangered our destiny and that of the pagans—more here than there, he entered the Cynosure office on motion of Hon. Philo Carpenter; and by that unwearied diligence which is born of deep conviction, and with rare and excellent judgment, and some literary attainment, he has been a blessing to thousands who have not seen his face. His visit to the Pacific Coast is an epoch in the history of the Cynosure. We shall see society in the State which stretches 700 miles along the blue Pacific by the light of his letters, as we see objects by daylight, accurately and without hurting our eyes; and the friends he will find or make for the cause will open thousands of eyes there, where the lodge has reigned supreme.

THE EMEUTE.

We have run through eight or ten huge denominational church organs, and find in all but one of them discussions of the laborers' emeute. They are decidedly superficial and soporific, diverse in their ideas and suggestions as to the cause of and remedy for the upheaval. That real downright hardship and misery among the poor in our cities exist, no rational mind doubts. Christ's words, true in all ages: "The poor ye always have with you," is "o'erture" in this, owing to a variety of causes. Our terrible slavery has advertised us to the remote borders of the nation, and emigrants, by millions, have pounced in upon us, whom slavery, by its world-known horrors, used to keep away; and the oaths of Socialists and Nihilists in the old countries have inured them to secrecy and sworn obedience to desperadoes like those now in the Chicago jail. We saw the turn-out of the shop-tailors' girls, marched two and two by these foreign-born devils with a little white rag of a flag with poorly printed black letters: 8 HOURS' WORK—10 HOURS' LABOR.

The was no sham or pretense in that long unique procession. The girls were mere children from 8 or 10 to 17 years of age. They were poorly clad, yet decent, in gowns and aprons which had seen service, and their honest, young faces looked careworn and thoughtful without whimpering or hilarity; and though early morning, they looked as though a good breakfast would have been relished by them.

These young things work for $2 to $3 per week, and many of them have feeble mothers, younger brothers and sisters, and fathers who drink beer; and these young things are in a city full of wealth, and a country full of bread. The long procession halted before the depot, and we asked a stout, well-fed and dressed policeman, "Are they bridged?" and found our throat choking, and tried twice before the words came.

Pauper and millionaire are both members of the same fallen race; alike in nature; unlike in condition. And the wealthy undeniably have the advantage of the poor, and take it. "They that will be rich, fall into a snare, and many hurtful lusts." Gain gives greed of gain: while "the destruction of the poor is their poverty." But the success of Friend Quakers and some minor sects in keeping poverty at bay proves that it can and ought to be done. These sects have first kept out ignorance and vice, and found it easy to keep out misery also. The cost of a monthly survey of the poverty of the United States, with remedies applied, would sink to nothing compared with the cost of war, which must surely come if things go on as they now do. In 1831, Aug. 21, Nat Turner and nineteen other slaves rose and killed sixty white people before they were arrested. These sixty corpses were grouped at one funeral. The State troops of Virginia and United States troops were called out, and before the cyclone subsided, 400 blacks and whites had been slain. That showed how great a matter a little fire can kindle under a community bottomed on wrong. Now the railroad system of the United States, by dropping the Sabbath, is heathenizing a mighty host of our enterprising young men. The city horse-roads are searing the consciences of another host. And yet everyone knows that the carrying trade of the country could be done cheaper, easier and safer in weeks of six days than seven. And when young men are corrupted, they will corrupt young women in equal, or nearly equal, numbers. God gave Sabbath desecration as the sole sufficient cause of national disaster. "Then shall the land rest as long as it lieth desolate: because it rested not as long as ye were on it." The fourth commandment gone, the other nine follow, for the fourth gives the teaching day for the rest. The law of God gone, all the religion there is left will be man-invented, got up, false lodge worships with its cognate despotism! This is what has happened, and is now happening; and yet the so called religious papers of this country are now as ignorant and insensible of the cause of the incipient commotion and blood as a few years since the same papers were that slavery was undermining the Republic!

The noted absence of the Irish in the recent mobs is due to the fact that our policemen are Irish, and their priests do not wish Irish Knights of Labor to keep their own secrets from the priests in the confessional, and send their brother lodgemen to heaven without priestly absolution. But all religions which teach salvation by ceremonies will in the end be a unit against Christ.

"The Scripture hath many fulfillings," and these commotions are one. When Christ has come to this earth, whether to bring his people out of Egypt, or long afterward, from Babylon; or when long after that, he came to cleanse his temple at Jerusalem, similar tokens have preceded and attended his comings. When his disciples asked for the signs of his comings (Luke 1: 25), "There shall be distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring: Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Already the secret governments which worship Satan defy those which acknowledge Christ by swearing witnesses on his Book; and tender the issue "That none may buy or sell who have not received Satan's brand, in forehead or hand." "Swear our oath, practice our initiation, and you may work. But if you will not join our union, you are a 'scab.'" And the world "wonder after this beast" and say: "Who is like unto the beast! and who is able to make war with him?" Rev. 13: 4. Powderly boasts that his secret lodge despotism is "recognized" by the United States, not as a treason, but a peer! And the eight union men who would not receive Powderly's "mark" are cast out, or to be cast out in sixty days before the worshipers of the beast! And the "fear," "perplexity" and "distress of nations" described by Christ as preceding and presaging his comings, are repeating themselves in London, Chicago and Milwaukee. And all these are the beginning of sorrows! There is still hope. For their rainbows of promise spanning the clouds of wrath which send forth the thunderbolts of God. For the earth is to "open her mouth" and swallow up the flood of darkness which the dragon is pouring out of his mouth to carry away the sin-clothed, star-crowned woman, who represents the Christian religion, now being deluged, drowned, by these dark orders. Let us thank God, and snatch hope from these wrath-tokens, perplexity and distress, remembering that there is one mightier than Satan, who "rides the whirlwind and directs the storm."

SHALL WE JOIN THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR?

Our excellent contemporary, the Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, in reply to the query, "Is it right to join the Knights of Labor?" replies that "if the Knights of Labor are seeking to do away with strikes and encourage the settlement of disputes by arbitration, we know of no reason why a Christian may not join them." Without stopping to inquire whether these are the main or a real object of the Knights, we wish to say that, however desirable the end, there can be no justification in the use of means not in harmony with the Divine Word. That this organization is a wrong method we infer, first, because it is a secret society. Such societies are contrary to the genius of republicanism and out of place in a free government. They are suspicious, and are an unfortunate complication for a Christion. 2d. If the secrets of the Knights of Labor are what they profess to be, the interests of labor, they belong to all laborers, and ought to be published for their benefit. Manifestly they do concern the business interests of the country and the public welfare, and therefore ought not to be concealed. 3d. An oath or pledge of secrecy without reference to what is to be concealed is an immoral promise. No one can know that he has a right to practice such concealment. A promise to conceal is not in itself a justification for concealment. 4th. The Knights of Labor, like most other secret orders, is organized on the military principle of subjection to a central authority. When a strike is ordered every member, without inquiry, without respect to his convenience or his sense of obligation to others, must at once obey. Judging the obligations by the manner in which they are obeyed, we see that the interests of the people and the rights of private citizens are utterly discarded. Perishable goods have been retained and ruined. The United States mails are delayed, and multitudes of dependent laborers thrown out of employment. 5th. The Christian who unites with this organization is brought into an intimate relation with, and subjection to, unbelievers who make up the great majority of the members. Hence, he is unequally "yoked together with unbelievers," contrary to 2 Cor. 6: 14–18. And lastly, the practical workings of the order have been such as to result in the denial of the rights of laborers to work upon and for what wages they choose, and in numerous riots, murders and threatened anarchy. By their fruits ye shall know them. We need not expect figs from thistles.

THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR AND CRIME.

Much effort is being made in certain quarters to disclaim all responsibility on the part of the secret labor unions for the violence and crime of the Socialists and Anarchists, and especially the scenes of blood in our city.

We have never charged that all the members of these unions are Socialists or Anarchists. Not all Socialists desire anarchy, though some of them do, while others hold that our existing government is better than none. Nor do we charge that the Knights of Labor, as an organization, have openly avowed anarchical principles, but unless it can be shown that Anarchists are far more numerous than we have been wont to think them to be, it will not do to charge all the labor riots and the crimes against life and property, from the arson and murder in Pittsburgh, in 1877, down to the slaughter of the policemen in Chicago last week, to individual Anarchists. The weight of evidence is that nearly, if not all, the boycotts, the seizures of property, the intimidations and violence has been the work of the members of these secret labor organizations. In many cases it has been openly avowed, and responsibility has not been denied. If they have not, like the Anarchists, sought to overthrow all authority, they have at least sought to subordinate it to their rule.

We charge, too, that many Socialists and Anarchists are members of these orders, and that the papers that represent these organizations contain an open advocacy of socialism. All members of the secret trades unions are not Anarchists, but all Anarchists are secret organizations, who make use of the trades unions as convenient tools to overthrow the good order of society, and all secret labor unions are conspiracies against the rights and interests of all non-union men.

THE CHICAGO MINISTERS AND THE EMEUTE.

The able and excellent sermon by Rev. Dr. Goodwin, of the First Congregational church, of this city, on Sunday last, was on the riots and crime of the previous week, and the remedy to be applied. Among the causes are, 1st. The culpable indifference of our authorities to existing dangers. For years men in our midst have openly plotted anarchy and threatened the overthrow of all government. They have been arming, drilling and storing dynamite to be ready for any occasion. The only wonder is that there were not a hundred bombs instead of one. We have been sleeping on a volcano.

2. The drink curse, which is the inspiration of all mobs, was dwelt upon, and the importance of prohibition as the radical remedy, was shown. 3. The immense immigration of foreigners, their numerical power, and the fact that they include the great majority of the criminal class. 4. The great and rapid growth of the Roman Catholic church. He dwelt on the need of city evangelization, and said that but a tithe of the costs to the city and country of these strikes, boycotts and riots would have rendered them impossible. He demonstrated that the highest economy and profoundest regard for public safety demanded that steps be taken to evangelize the masses.

While we heartily agree with what was said, there was one element of evil and danger that was conspicuously absent from the enumeration. All of these strikes, boycotts, riots and murder are the work of organizations—organizations based on the principle of secrecy from public observation and unqualified obedience to autocratic authority. These orders have corrupted the morals, debauched the consciences and driven their members into these acts of crime. It would have been most appropriate to put them into the indictment. But, moreover, the highly respectable members of Dr. Goodwin's congregation—people who are shocked at the idea of a riot—are many of them members and patrons of secret orders, based on precisely the same principles, some of them armed and drilled, and which have on other occasions been the instruments of violence and crime.

We believe that Dr. Goodwin has no connection or sympathy with these orders, but many of his congregation, if not he himself, join hands with the men that mobs are made of, in resisting all discussion of this subject. Surely the doctor missed an excellent opportunity of striking a telling blow to one of our greatest dangers.

THE N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the National Christian Association is fixed by by-law No. 4 on the third Thursday in June of each year. Corporate members and all friends of the N. C. A. will please notice that this occurs on June 17th, and prepare to be prompt in attendance at 10 A. M. There will be two sessions, morning and afternoon, for the transaction of business at No. 221 West Madison street, Chicago, and an evening session at some suitable place provided by the programme committee.

F. W. CAPWELL, President.
W. I. PHILLIPS, Secretary.

Rev. J. P. Richards, an earnest co-laborer in our reform, has taken charge of the Congregational church at Lee Center, Ill. We had a pleasant visit with him at this office.

We have received a copy of a tract on "The Iniquity of the Liquor Traffic," by Rev. J. T. Michael, South Oil City, Pa. Price, ten cents per hundred pages. It is well written, and will be useful.

Rev. S. E. Lane has been appointed by the Michigan State Christian Association to labor in colporteur and reform work in that State. We bespeak for him the sympathy and co-operation of all our friends in Michigan.

The conquest of Burmah was easy to the British troops, but holding it is the difficulty. Like the flying machine, the flying is easy; the lighting is the trouble. There have been continued insurrections of the people, and now Mandalay is in ashes, burnt by the insurgents. Bad as was the reign of Thebaw, the reign of lawless insurgents is worse, and this the whole power of the empire seems unable to prevent. When will the nations learn that non-intervention, save by peaceful methods, is the profoundest wisdom?

A number of communications are on hand, some of which are accompanied with stamps, and which the writers ask to have returned if not accepted. In the absence of Mr. Kellogg, I have taken the responsibility to keep them till his return.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard preached on Sunday last to the Congregational church in Tonica in the morning and to the Baptist church of that place in the evening. He reports the members of the Tonica church in good heart and steadfast in their testimony.

We are glad to learn that the prospects of the annual meeting are cheering. For the first time we shall have a representation from the churches of the South. Rev. H. Woodsmall, Rev. B. A. Imes, and Rev. R. N. Countee, all of Memphis, Tenn., have written, expressing their purpose to attend. We trust that the recent outcropping of the Secret Empire in violent assaults on all authority and all law will give renewed emphasis to our efforts and determinations.

The following is an intercepted editorial sent to the Arbeiter Zeitung:

"Level down; we cannot level up. The capitalist, gold-bugs, and bond-holders have denied us all rights. They would make us slaves. Our only hope is in earnest, organized action. Burn, kill and destroy until we force the autocrats to terms. We have lost hope in God, hope in humanity, and hope in the world at large. Let every man do his duty. This is a time when the working man will ever become a slave or a master. Choose between the two, and choose at once. Let us give no quarter and ask none, only let us stand by each other and each man at his post. If we must die, let us die like men and not like slaves."

"Many professing Christians are so liberal nowadays that they can without any compunction have church fellowship with Jews and others who deny the Lord that bought them. But it is hardly credible that Christian ministers should, for the sake of giving no offense to an honest Jew whom they desire to draw into their broad union, agree to keep silence about Christ. Yet such a thing is reported to have taken place, not long since, in an Ohio city. An exchange reports: 'A union service of the various denominations was held, the Jewish rabbi among them. In order to effect it, the Christian ministers agreed to eliminate from the sermon and prayers all reference to Christ. Everything went on very well until one of the ministers at the close gave the apostolic benediction, he not having been advised of the agreement; and the rabbi was very indignant at what he thought was a breach of faith.' For the 'moral manhood' which is so much talked about by the liberal schools, and which they would substitute for faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, the Jew was evidently the best man in the crowd. Should not such crying sins, practiced in the name of charity, open the eyes of Christians to the abominations of unionism? L."

The above, from the Lutheran Standard, need occasion no surprise. So long as ministers of the Gospel belong to Christ-rejecting orders, and unite with ungodly men in their unholy secret worship, it is not strange that ere long they should openly deny the Lord that bought them.

LITERATURE.

The Century for May opens with a picture of Nathaniel Hawthorne, and steadily maintains its usual ability. Among the war papers is, "From the Peninsula to Antietam," with notes by Gen. McClellan; also, "McClellan at the Head of the Grand Army," by a private. An able article by the distinguished historian, George Bancroft, on the legal-tender decision of the Supreme Court, will pay for careful perusal.

The Missionary Review for May and June is full and rich in information and suggestions in reference to foreign missions. Eighty large pages are filled with the choicest facts gathered from the entire foreign field of all the different Protestant missions. The opening article on France and Madagascar gives a sketch of the great religious movement in that island, and of the course of the French nation in their war of aggression on a distant and comparatively helpless people.

THE HOME.

INVOCATION.

Lord of Truth, and Love, and Power,
In this bright, new morning hour,
Come into my soul, and be
Her King—a Royal Majesty.

Should I seek the wide world round,
Where could one like thee be found,
Who my aching heart could ease,
Filling it with joy and peace!

Thou, chief of ten thousand art—
Peerless Monarch of my heart.
Come! be seated on thy throne;
Henceforth it is all thine own.

For thy love hath me dethroned:
I can live in thee alone.
If thou comest not I die—
Lord, thou will not me deny!

Thou art come, O blessed Lord!
May my life with thine accord;
May this day the happiest be
That hath ever dawned for me.

May it be! It surely will,
For my soul shall have her fill
Of thy love, and grace, and truth,
And to-day renew her youth.

Royal King! Immanuel!
In my heart forever dwell:
Interlace my life with thine,
Till thy light through me shall shine.

Then my heart shall be thy throne;
Then shall I be all thine own:
And throughout eternity
I shall find my life in thee.

THREE DIVINE SOCIETIES.

One of the faults of all civilized countries is too many societies. There are labor societies, mercantile societies, political societies, army societies, farmer societies, and benevolent societies—societies almost without number, all of which have for their special object the benefit of an elect class, without any effort in the direction of relieving distress outside of prescribed bounds.

Organizations of different kinds are useful for special object, and it is not our purpose to maintain a position against such bodies; but to elaborate the view that our nation and the world would be better off without any standing societies in addition to those divinely authorized. By standing societies we mean those that have laws and regulations that continue unchanged in their main features, through decades and centuries, and are the binding chords of brotherhoods.

God has appointed three societies for the benefit and entire government of men. These supply every demand for permanent organizations and general brotherhoods, and afford ample room for the exercise of every redeeming trait of human character and the legitimate cultivation of every propensity and sentiment.

These societies are the Family, the State and the Church. They bear the impress of Divinity, and they are set apart by the great Master Builder that man's existence might be one of contentment and pleasure. All other permanent societies having a common rule of action, infringe, more or less upon the liberties, privileges and happiness of individuals who are not concerned therein, or amenable to the laws of union.

The Family is the smallest form of government there is in the divine order, and when its rules of action are framed with prudence and wisdom, the most beautiful strains of eloquence can only approach the actual in description. It is complete in itself, and in no way interferes with the duties that may be proper to assume in the remaining two. The State is a society that is necessary to provide for harmony of action in providing measures for self-protection and the regulation of commerce. Without the government of State the Family would be exposed to assaults that it would be unable to withstand, and there would be no guarantee of security, and no assurance of continued happiness and protection of possessions. The latter is, therefore, only subservient to the former.

The Church society is so comprehensive that a volume would be required to describe the works which it comprises. There can be no act of benevolence or veneration, no hope or spiritual impulse, no deed of equity or justice, no manifestation of philanthropic love or relieving sympathy, no strength of patience or power of example that is not fully authorized by the law from the Divine Hand, and enconraged by the church.

These three are in perfect harmony with one another, and meet every requirement of man. All other societies are disturbing elements, and promote one series of good works or sources of happiness to the abandonment of others. The society of State, in its entirety, can have no other ultimate purpose than the protection and promotion of the home, in earth; and the church can have no other ultimate purpose than protection and promotion for a home in heaven.

Loyalty in all these societies by the masses would obviate every necessity of other societies, and afford to all every benefit that earth and heaven can confer. —Gospel Messenger.

PEACE.

No signs of the times are more hopeful, perhaps, than the peace policy that prevails at present among the nations. The best strength of European nations has been diverted from productive industries, and ten million men are marshalled in standing armies. To maintain vast armies that menace each other on land and sea has amassed monstrous national debts. The support of idle soldiery, and interest upon enormous debts, drain off the hard earnings of the masses and drive them to madness. The greatest danger that confronts the crowned heads of Europe is not fear of foreign invasion, but internal ferment. Wise men see that there is imminent peril from the pressure that has awakened popular complaint. Useless and oppressive taxation has made the millions of malcontents. The fires of revolution are smouldering. Tyrannized, restless, miserable, hopeless multitudes are muttering and thinking and can not be restrained by fortifications, armies or navies.

This nation seems to lead the way to inaugurate the new era of peace. Various measures are now before Congress for the settlement of international difficulties by arbitration, and the bill to increase the army was defeated, though ably supported by leading statesmen. All these events indicate a growing sentiment of repugnance to war as an unnecessary and terrible curse. The late conferences of European powers have all made a record strongly opposed to bloodshed and for peaceful arbitration. May heaven hasten the time when war clouds shall be lifted, never again to wrap the world in black, sulphurous folds, when armies shall disband and warriors return to peaceable pursuits, when the roll of the war drum shall cease and battle flags be forever furled in a federation of universal amity and peace, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. Amen.—Sel.

TEMPER AT HOME.

I have peeped into quiet "parlors" where the carpet is clean and not old, and the furniture polished and bright; into "rooms" where the chairs are neat and the floor carpetless; into "kitchens" where the family live and the meals are cooked and eaten, and the boys and girls are as blithe as the sparrows in the thatch overhead; and I see that it is not so much wealth and learning, nor clothing, nor servants, nor toil, nor idleness, nor town, nor country, nor station, as tone and temper that renders homes happy or wretched. And I see, too, that in town or country good sense and God's grace make life what no teachers or accomplishments, or means of society can make it—the opening stave of an everlasting psalm; the fair beginning of an endless existence; the goodly, modest, well-proportioned vestibule to a temple of God's building that shall never decay, wax old, or vanish away.—Dr. John Hall.

FACTS AND FORCES WHICH MAKE FOR UNIVERSAL PEACE.

1. Commerce, by which the products and property of one nation comes to be common to all nations.

2. Steam, by which commerce is facilitated and travel increased by sea and land till all nations look in each other's faces and sit at each other's tables.

3. Electricity, by which every important fact passes immediately into possession of mankind; and the thoughts of one man may become at once the thoughts of all.

4. The press, which catches fact or idea as it flies, transfixes, multiplies and transmits it even beyond the utmost bounds of steam and electrical communication.

5. Dynamite, rifled cannon, armor clad steamers, and all those recent inventions that infinitely increase the cost and the destructiveness of war, so that the fears of mankind, whether on thrones or under them, are enlisted against war.

6. Geographical unity, as seen in the United States, Great Britain, Germany and Italy, by which old boundaries for centuries saturated with blood are abolished.

7. The increasing unity of Protestant and, indeed, all Christian churches. In half a century what hath God wrought in uniting those in heart who differ in opinion and even belief?

8. The decadence of Mohammedanism, the central thing in whose creed was the sword.

9. The dominance of public opinion, as distinguished from the will of kings, dukes and cabinets. If burning questions were remitted to the people and their decision made final, there would be less fighting. Those who pay money and give their blood to war are less fond of it as a pastime than royal huntsmen and imperial adventurers whose luxuries and ambitions can only be ministered unto by the sword.

10. The extension of intelligence, so that serfs, slaves, and even bayonets think.

11. The progress of Christianity, both as represented in the governments of Christian States and missions. Love disarms men. The absurdity of praying and fighting at the same time thus grows more apparent. Whatever subjects the lusts of men to love will abolish from among them wars and fightings.

12. The promises of God now hastening to their final fruition and fulfillment.

13. The Holy Spirit which takes of the things of Christ and so shows them unto men, that they can no longer sin after the similitude of good men who lived before the Comforter came. The fruit of the Spirit is love.

14. Local arbitration, which demonstrates in the little what may be done in the large and educates the people to demand the same of rulers and nations. —Advocate of Peace.

INTER-CHURCH CONVENTION.

A number of the churches opposed to secret societies are considering the propriety of calling a convention to deliberate on the best course to pursue against lodge worship, and to unify the labors of those who feel it their duty to oppose this growing evil. The United Brethren, the Wesleyan Methodists, United Presbyterians and Congregationalists have already identified themselves with the move, and their wish is that all other churches holding the same views in regard to secret societies would give an expression as to what they may think the best course to pursue. While we always hold anti-secret society views, we are not sure that we have been letting our light shine as we should. If this phase of secretism is wrong, it is our duty to publicly remonstrate against it the same as any other evil, on the principle that it is easier to keep people away from sin than to get them out of it when once in. It is the Christian's duty to teach men to avoid evil. There are hundreds of our children led into these societies without even knowing that the church believes it wrong for them to do so.—Gospel Messenger.

MOODY ON TALK.

1. Don't talk too much. 2. Don't talk unless you are posted. 3. Give the best you have. 4. Don't talk when people are asleep. Wake some one man, and you will hold the rest. 5. Don't try to show off your learning. 6. Get hold of the most stupid man, and you'll hold the rest. 7. Don't try, but don't be afraid, to make people laugh. Milk that slops one way will slop the other. 8. Be natural; don't try to be some one else. 9. Avoid cant and pulpit tones. 10. Don't talk too long. A man in London, who preached until the people all left, said he thought it was a pity to stop when there was anybody to hear. 11. Don't hesitate to repeat what God uses. 12. Don't keep on talking just because you are holding the audience. Send them away hungry. 13. While the people are gathering, use the time with song. 14. Shoot where people stand. As the old Quaker said to the burglar: "Friend, I am going to shoot where thee stands. Thee had better get out of the way." 15. Don't gesture and move about too much, and don't talk with your hands in your pockets.

It is useless to teach a soft religion. It is trifling with reason as well as with revelation to assume that anything less than deliverance from the love of sin and from the guilt of it can be an adequate round of spiritual peace. From the rapidity with which character crystalizes, it follows inexorably that whatever we do to secure this double deliverance must be done quickly. I care little for science or philosophy. I should care little for revelation itself, if they did not answer, and answer in harmony with each other, the supreme question, What saves men and why? and what must I do to be saved? Science, philosophy, revelation, all give emphasis to the word "now."—Joseph Cook.

"AS ONE HIS MOTHER COMFORTETH."

Thy way lies over the mountain road,
The end thou canst not see;
And, child, thou hast a weary load,
Wilt pause and rest with me?
As one his mother comforteth,
So will I comfort thee.

The night grows dark, the storm is wild,
Thy burden hard to bear,
Why stagger on, thou weary child,
When I am here to share—
Nay, as a mother comforteth,
To take myself thy care?

To be thy refuge from all harm,
To take thy grief and smart,
To me the pain, for thee the balm;
Thou of myself a part;
I make thy cradle in my arms,
Thy pillow is my heart.

There rest thee now; in every sound
Of wind or wave or tree,
Hear thou my whisper! "I have found
A child! Stay close by me!
As one his mother comforteth,
So will I comfort thee."

—Mary Lowe Dickinson, in the Open Window.

A BOY'S DECISION.

Many years ago, Mr. Hall, an English gentleman, visiting Ireland for the purpose of taking sketches of its most beautiful scenery, to be used in an illustrated work on Ireland, which has since been published.

On one occasion, while about to spend a day in the neighborhood of Lake Killarney, he met a bright young Irish lad, who offered his services as guide through the district.

A bargain was made with him, and the party went off. The lad proved himself well acquainted with all the places of interest in that neighborhood, and had plenty of stories to tell about them. He did his work well, and to the entire satisfaction of the visitors. On their return to the starting point, Mr. Hall took a flask of whisky from his pocket, and drank some. Then he handed it to the boy, and asked him to help himself. To his great surprise the offer was firmly, but politely, declined.

Mr. Hall thought this was very strange. To find an Irish boy who would not touch or taste whisky was stranger to him than anything he had seen that day. He could not understand it; and he resolved to try the strength of the boy's temperance principles. He offered first a shilling, then half a crown, and then five shillings if he would take that whisky. But the boy was firm. A real, manly heart, was beating under his ragged jacket. Mr. Hall determined to try him further, so he offered the boy a golden half-sovereign if he would take a drink of whisky. That was a coin seldom seen by lads of this class in those parts. Straightening himself up, with a look of indignation in his face, the boy pulled out a temperance medal from the inner pocket of his jacket, and holding it bravely up, he said: "This was my father's medal. For years he was intemperate. All his wages were spent in drink. It almost broke my mother's heart; and what a hard time she had to keep the poor childer from starving! At last my father took a stand. He signed the pledge, and wore the medal as long as he lived. On his death-bed he gave it to me. I promised him that I would never drink intoxicating liquor; and now, sir, for all the money your honor may be worth, a hundred times over, I would not break that promise." That boy's decision about drink was noble. Yes; and it did do good, too. As Mr. Hall stood there astonished, he screwed the top on to his flask, and flung it into the water of the lake, near which they stood.

Then he turned to the lad and shook him warmly by the hand, saying, as he did so:

"My boy, that the best temperance lecture I ever heard. I thank you for it. And now, by the help of God, I will never drink another drink of intoxicating liquor while I live."—Rev. Dr. R. Newton.

THE TOBACCO EVIL.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever, things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Phil. 4: 8.

"Whatsoever things are true." This cannot apply to the tobacco business. I believe it be neither true to God nor to the interests of man. The poor man who spends his money for it is not true to his family who need all his earnings for food and clothing. I saw a man go with his wife into a store, and without hesitation he paid fifty cents for tobacco; but stood and parleyed over half hour with his wife because she wanted a pair of shoes. He thought he could not afford to buy them! Was he true to her? The professed Christian who pays more for tobacco than for mission work, home and foreign, can he be true to Christ? And yet the great majority of those who use tobacco do pay more for the weed than for church work.

"Whatsoever things are honest." The marginal reading substitutes the word "venerable" for "honest." I know nothing about tobacco that is venerable, or to be venerated. While I may esteem some who use it as venerable, I cannot have any veneration for the habit, and I would certainly venerate them all the more if they would throw off the habit.

"Whatsoever things are just." Now, what interests of justice is subserved by the tobacco habit, it would take more than a Philadelphia lawyer to designate. It lies at the basis of much injustice, as we might abundantly show had we the time and space.

"Whatsoever things are pure." We have already seen that all who use it are unanimous in pronouncing it filthy, and, consequently, not pure.

"Whatsoever things are lovely." What a lovely thing is a quid of tobacco rolled up in the cheek! How exceedingly lovely is that puddle of ambier at your feet! But the fairest of all, and the one altogether lovely, is that specimen of the fair sex, who is constantly engaged in dipping snuff! Well, perhaps she was lovely at one time, when her breath was sweet and her complexion fair; but now she has dipped snuff so long that her face closely resembles in complexion a well cured ham, and her breath is unlike the spicy breezes that "blow soft o'er Ceylon's isle."

"Whatsoever things are of good report." This certainly condemns the use of tobacco, for its use is condemned by all text-books on physiology and by many leading educators. Prof. Seerly has been principal of the public schools is Oskaloosa, Iowa, for many years, and he published in the city papers an address to the parents, in which he told those parents whose children used tobacco that it was no use to keep their boys in school. He said the tobacco habit wholly unfitted them for diligent study and close application.

Everywhere evil report attaches to this habit, and none are more free to condemn it than those who practice it.

"If there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think of those things."

There is no virtue in it and no praise for it.

TEMPERANCE.

LITTLE JOE.

Poor little Joe! the sharp, cutting winds of winter had no mercy for him. They tossed his curly locks around his fair boyish face and bright red cheeks. There were tears in his deep blue eyes that he could not keep back, for it was so cold. Night was fast coming on. He dreaded to go to his home It scarcely deserved that name, for the winds swept through it and the snow drifted in the cracks, and mayhap a drunken father, cursing and swearing, would be the only one to meet him. Is it any wonder he hesitated before turning in that direction? He saw the coaches passing with their load of happy occupants toward home, to warm firesides and loving friends, and the tears rolled down his cheeks as he thought of the home waiting him.

He ran on among the crowd, scarcely heeding where he was going, when a heavy hand was laid on his shoulder and a thick voice ordered him home. He looked up. It was his father, drunk, worse than he had ever been before, with a strange look in his dark gray eyes. He pushed him along through the crowd, first this way, then that, for he was so drunk he could scarcely stand.

At last they reached home. With an oath that would make a sober man shudder, the drunken brute kicked open the door and thrust the boy in. He pulled a broken match from his pocket, lighted a half-used candle, and called the boy to him. Joe came trembling, not daring to look up in his face. "See here, youngster, you've bin 'round here long 'nough, and nary a cent have ye brought home, an' I ain't goin' to stan' it any longer; you've got to steal long as you won't beg. D'ye hear?" he asked with a curse. Joe answered in a low tone of voice, "Father, I do hear, but I cannot steal. Mamma told me it was wrong, and I cannot do it." As he ceased speaking his father sprang up, grasped the stool he was sitting on, and flung it at the boy. Joe sank down, moaning piteously.

As soon as his father found he was alive he staggered out to quench his thirst with that fiery liquid which had broken his wife's heart, ruined himself, and killed his son. Joe crawled into a corner and tried vainly to keep warm. The next morning the police and four men came in, bearing his father's body. He had never reached the saloon, but had frozen to death on the way. As they entered the room this is what they saw: A little, thin figure, covered, all but his head, with a shroud of cold, white snow. Two little hands, folded as if in silent supplication; blue eyes closed never to open again; curls flung over a little, thin, starved face, through which frozen tears glistened in the sunlight. That night, while other little forms were sleeping in warm covered beds, little Joe had gone to meet his mother, where no unkind words should ever more greet him, and no chilling winds ever more blight him, and God would wipe away all tears from his eyes!—Lillie Gifford, in Christian Advocate.

TEMPERANCE SIDE—LICENSE SIDE.

DEAR SIR:—Will not every editor throughout the country publish these simple but telling facts that every reader may see the difference between liquor and no liquor; between abstinence and drunkenness; between license and prohibition. Yours for the temperance side, GEO. W. CLARK.

In 1861 the Legislature of New Jersey granted Vineland a local option law. Under this law in 1874, 753 votes were cast; of these 742 were for no license, and 11 for license. The township is ten miles long and eight miles wide, and the population in 1874 was 11,000. At the start the valuation of the town was $128,500. In 1874 it was $4,500,000, with taxes $3.50 on $1,000. There was no lock-up, jail, house of correction, court, police, or fire department in town. Having no grog-shops, none of these agencies were needed. In 1873, an agent of the Massachusetts Alliance visited Vineland, and also New Britain, Conn., and collected statistics, the population of the places being about the same.

VINELAND.

Grog-shops	00
Cost of paupers	$ 224.00
Cost of police	75.00
Liquor sold	00
Habitual drunkards	27

NEW BRITAIN.

Grop-shops	80
Cost of paupers	$ 8,500.00
Cost of police	7,500.00
Liquor sold	319,000.00
Habitual drunkards	497

Greeley, Colorado, named for Horace Greeley, was established as a temperance town. A grog-shop has not been known. The town has no paupers and no criminals among 2,000 inhabitants (1874). There has never been a criminal case, and a "fast" young man is not known in the place.

SHOWERS OF GOLD.

It is said of an Emperor of China that he was a temperance man. He loved the cup of cold water, he hated the intoxicating bowl. He was clean in his habits; pleasant in his manners; a friend of his people. But he was much distressed at the sight of destitution and wretchedness incurred by the habit of drinking. The horrors of the liquor shop wore upon him till he could endure it no longer. He issued a decree that every saloon in the empire should be closed. That was prohibition like a thunderbolt. But the most remarkable thing related by the story is, that three days after the prohibition went into effect, the heavens rained gold. It fell down like showers of wheat; the people gathered it in great quantities; they had regained their senses since drunkenness was stopped, and got rich. This latter part of the ancient story may be metaphorical. Yet it is just what we would expect to follow a thorough prohibition of the liquor business. What an abundance of wealth would descend upon the people, in the precious coin of domestic joy, public peace, individual happiness, and national prosperity, if the outrageous traffic in intoxicants were wiped out. What a rain of gold, if the cost and expenses, arising out of that diabolical trade, were turned into a shower of gains instead of losses.—Standard Bearer.

April 23d, under the Local Option law, Newton county, Ga., voted prohibition by a large majority. Sixty-four colored men of Oxford voted. Fifty-eight voted for prohibition. The colored people of Oxford have been taught the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. Nearly all of the fifty-eight can read; the best taught were most pronounced for prohibition. Teaching pays as well among colored people as any people.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

The vote on disestablishment in Wales leads the London Standard (conservative) to say: "Disestablishment is now openly adopted by the present government as one of its principles, to be carried into effect as soon as time and opportunity shall serve."

—The churches of Mobile have held special services since the visit of Moody and Sankey, and have gathered in many converts. To the Methodist churches 99 have been added; to the Baptist, 81; to the Presbyterian, 83; to the Episcopal, 59—making a total of 317.

—The rabbis who united in the Pittsburgh Jewish Reform Conference have called a second conference to meet in Cincinnati, June 28th. All "American rabbis who favor the cause of reform and progress within the pale of Judaism," togther with "all teachers of righteousness, banner-bearers of light and truth, expounders of our people's immortal treasures and mission," are invited "in the name of God and Israel, and in behalf of American Judaism," to attend this grand council and fraternal union.

—The evangelists, Sam Jones and Sam Small, began their work in Baltimore on Sunday. Four thousand people were packed in the Biddle street skating rink to hear the evangelists, and two thousand more tried to get in at the afternoon services, but the doors were shut against them, and the surging crowd was held back by the efforts of a dozen sturdy policemen.

—The Rev. Mr. Babbitt, lately Universalist minister in Malden, Mass., has been installed as pastor of the Baptist church, in Dorchester, Mass., the sermon being preached by the Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., of the Clarendon street Baptist church, Boston; the Rev. Phillip S. Maxom, D. D., participating in the service. The candidate had been previously baptized.

—Nearly every evening in the Allahabad bazaar may be seen two blind Christians reading from a Hindoostance New Testament, printed in raised letters, to large audiences of Hindoos and Mohammedans, who marvel at the strange sight.

—One of the German papers states that "at Vienna last year no less than 363 Jews became Christians;" and another paper tells us that "at no period since the first century have conversions from Judaism to Christianity been so frequent as they are at present."

—At the anniversary of the twenty-one Methodist Sabbath-schools in Lucknow, India, Dec. 29, no less than 2,000 children marched in procession, each school having its banner. There were two elephants in line, and many Hindoo and Mohammedan boys walked beside their friends who were members of the schools. Over 1,000 prizes were given to those who had been regular attendants.

—In October and November last the Wesleyan Mission in Fiji celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. Special deputations from the neighboring Australian colonies brought congratulations. One of these came from Tonga. The delegate was a Fiji chief, a native minister, who was the first convert in the country and the first to preach the Gospel; who was banished from Fiji to Tonga because of his religion, and now, after half a century, bore the congratulations of the Tonga church to this mother church of Fiji. On returning to Fiji he did not find a score of heathen in the whole group.

—Revival meetings have been in progress in Sardis, Miss., since the last week in January. The first services were held in the Presbyterian church, a large gathering been the result. Then the Baptist church was opened for similar meetings with similar results, and after an interval of two weeks the Methodist church entered into the campaign. The result is the conversion of from 150 to 200 persons. The converts embrace all ages. The saloons have been closed, and the town is profoundly affected.

—At the recent special meeting of the General Synod of the Irish Disestablished church, the Bishop of Meath declared that beyond the claims of the Irish to home rule, "lurks a very advanced form of socialism." The synod passed resolutions of strong attachment to the legislative union of Great Britain and Ireland.

—A call has been issued for a convention of Christian workers among the unevangelized classes, to meet in Chicago, June 16–23. It is signed by ministers, evangelists, and missionaries of all denominations. Each worker is to have opportunity, far as possible, to explain his method of work, d to describe the difficulties and successes he meets with. Practical topics, such as "The Relation of this Work to the Churches; how best to cooperate, to help and get help," "Methods in Winning Souls," "The Best Way to Build up Converts," "The Christian Worker's Relation to the Enforcement of Laws against Evils which Entice Men into Sin," "How to Secure Workers," will be discussed. Plans will also be considered for a more systematic and vigorous prosecution of the work, for frequent conventions and for a closer union of workers. Those who are expecting to attend the convention are invited to communicate with John C. Collins, English Hall, New Haven, Conn.

—The next Episcopal General Convention will meet in Chicago.

—The London Missionary Society has sanctioned the printing and binding of an edition of 5,000 copies of the Bible Dictionary in the Tahitian language, prepared by the Rev. A. Pearse, of Raiatea.

—A German evangelist named Schrenk has been holding great meetings at Frankfort. Bible readings, prayer meetings and evening meetings in halls were all used to rouse and interest the people. Mr. Schrenk is of Berne, and goes out from there on evangelistic tours.

—The Missionary Review for March gathers from the publications of the different societies, mostly those of January and February, reports of the recent conversion of over 1,700 souls at various mission stations.

—A letter from Bro. Evans, of our U. B. mission, brings the gratifying intelligence that the spiritual prosperity of the work on the Mendi side is most encouraging. One hundred and twenty members have been received into the church since the annual meeting in December.

—The Children's Scripture Union, which celebrated its seventh anniversary in London, April 1, has over 300,000 members in all parts of the world, who daily read the Bible together, though in twenty-eight different languages.

—A new religious movement is creating much excitement in Southern Russia. The "Stundists," who are members of a Lutheran body, now call themselves Evangelical Christians, and are making surprising progress among the peasant class. In many villages the orthodox churches remain empty, while the meeting-houses of the Evangelical Christians are crowded. Dissent continues to multiply in Russia in spite of every kind of persecution.

—The total receipts of the American Bible Society in March were $58,463.59. The total receipts in the year ending March 31st were $521,910.59. The issues from the Bible House in March were 87,180. The whole number of volumes issued from the Bible House during the year, not including those issued in foreign lands, was 904,179.

—The archiepiscopal chair of Posen-Gresen, formerly held by Ledochowski, has at length, by agreement between Bismarck and the Pope, been bestowed upon Dean Dinder, of Koenigsberg. As the see has never before been held by a German, this is regarded as a great triumph for Bismarck.

—Dr. Newman Hall's church in London operates nineteen Sunday-schools, in which are enrolled 5,600 children.

—The Churchwoman's Mission Aid Society of Toronto sends out a box of necessaries in clothing almost every week to some poor country parson or congregation.

—During the May sessions of the English Synod there will be a temperance breakfast, at which an address is expected from Archdeacon Farrar.

—The new American Episcopal church at Paris is finished, with the exception of the beautiful marble flooring and some of the windows.

—Not since Saladin captured Hebron in 1187 has the Gospel been preached in that ancient city, the burial-place of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. This long line of centuries of darkness has been broken by Rev. Mr. Schneller, a missionary at Bethlehem, who preaches regularly in Hebron.

—The "Church of Scotland" bill, as it was called, which was introduced into the British Parliament by Mr. Finlay, a Scotch member, was defeated. It proposed such reforms in the constitution of the church that all the obstacles which now hinder the reunion of the Free church and the United Presbyterian church with the "Auld Kirk" would be removed. The bill contained a direct and unequivocal admission of the correctness of the Free church position in 1843, but this could not save it.

—Dr. Sarah Weintraub, now a practicing physician in Damascus, was a Jewess in Jerusalem converted to Christianity, and studied medicine in Philadelphia, and is acquitting herself most creditably.

—Moved by the personal and temporal advantages of one "off-day" in the week, the Hindoo shopkeepers of Calcutta have voluntarily started a movement to close their shops on Sunday.

—Two thousand children, nearly all of Hindoo and Mohammedan parentage, marched, not long since, in the annual Sunday-school procession at Lucknow, India.

—Miss Colenso, at Bishopstown, baptized several Kaffirs on Christmas day. The natives are considerably astonished, as many Church of England people doubtless will be, at this strange outbreak of the episcopal and clerical faculty in the family of the late Bishop of Natal.

—The fundamental law of Massachusetts declares: "Art. II. It is the right as well as the duty of all men in society, publicly at stated seasons to worship the Supreme Being, the Great Creator and Preserver of the universe. And no subject shall be hurt, molested, or restrained, in his person, liberty, or estate, for worshiping God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience; or for his religious profession or sentiments; provided he doth not disturb the public peace or obstruct others in their religious worship." And yet the mayor of Boston, a wholesale and retail liquor dealer, sent Rev. H. L. Hastings, the editor of the Christian, to jail for quietly reading the Bible on Boston Common. The Christian says: "P. S. On Sunday afternoon, April 18th, the editor of the Christian again read from the Bible to an orderly congregation on Boston Common. 'If this be treason, make the most of it.'" —In the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society at Pittsburgh, Pa., Mrs. Thorne, secretary and treasurer, read a letter she had just received from the missionaries in Japan. The letter is intended for the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church. It sets forth the absolute necessity of strong treaty stipulations for the protection of the missionaries. The Chinese outrages in this country, the letter continues, have caused the greatest indignation in China, and if they are continued it is hard to tell what the result will be.

—Last Sabbath was a day of unusual interest to the Congregational church in Hinsdale; forty-six, mostly young people, were received into membership. A beautiful floral tribute, the groundwork of white flowers and the word "Welcome" in purple flowers, had been neatly arranged upon the pulpit, as a silent expression of the cordial spirit with which the church greeted its new recruits. The ordinance of baptism was administered to twenty-five, and with the usual form they were received to the fellowship of the church. The audience was very large, every available seat being occupied. The day was every way a red-letter day in the history of the church.

—The American and Foreign Bible Society will hold its forty-ninth annual meeting for the election of officers and transaction of business, at No. 9 Murray street, New York, Monday, May 10th, 1886, at 2 P. M. Dr. J. W. Sarles and Rev. S. Williams will address the meeting.

—A convention was recently held in New Bethel, O., to arrange a basis of union between the six conferences of the Christian Connection in Ohio and the two councils of the Christian Union churches of the same State, A committee, appointed on a basis of union, reported the following, which was unanimously addopted:

"Whereas, The Word of God, as revealed to mankind in the Holy Bible, enjoins and requires that all who are saved by the grace of God and cleansed from sin by our Lord Jesus Christ, be one family, with 'Christ as the only head,' and 'Good fruits the only test of fellowship;' and, whereas, we believe the Holy Spirit is moving believers in Christ, who have been separated and apart, to come together on a Bible basis for the glory of God and the salvation of the world; and, whereas, initiatory steps have been taken already for the union of the two bodies, the 'Christians' and the 'Christian Union,' therefore,

"Resolved, 1st. That this convention recommend that a union of the two bodies be effected upon the following principles, viz.:

"1st. The Holy Bible our only rule of faith and practice.

"2d. Christ the only head of the church.

"3d. Christian character the only test of fellowship.

"4th. Individual interpretation of Scripture the right and duty of all.

"5th. The union of all the followers of Christ.

"6th. Each local church governs itself.

"7th. The preaching of partizan politics discountenanced."

BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Author of "Holden with Cords," "A Sunny Life," "Little People," etc.

The Best Story of the Reform.

Price, only $1.00.

Published by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This latest and best of Miss Flagg's works is now ready in handsome print, neatly bound. The story begins in a quiet New England home, and paints its homely joys with a delicacy and truthfulness worthy the hand of Harriet Beecher Stowe. The scene then changes to a thriving, growing, palpitating young Western city, and with great power and startling accuracy the writer leads us behind the scenes that we may see the machinery that works the liquor traffic and labor troubles. The story of the strike, the mob, the attempted assassination, the saloon-keeper's wiles, the curse of his trade, the power of the Christian faith to change him to a messenger of mercy, the criminal and the hidden power that shields him from justice, the land robbers tricks, the dark and secret conspiracies of the lodge—these and all the incidents of the book are portrayed with rare tact and great power of description. It is emphatically a book for the hour. And what is better and yet more striking, the incidents are facts, and every one a powerful and convincing argument against the lodge and the saloon.

Every temperance man and woman should read this book. No temperance story like it was ever planned, much less ably executed. A wonderful light is thrown upon the difficulties in the way of prohibition. Learn how they may be avoided.

Every one who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, true in incident, deeply intercsting in its narrative, should read this book.

READ THESE NOTICES FROM THE PRESS:

The Free Methodist, Chicago.

"Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking and observant people. The plot of the story is neither startling nor novel, but it develops a wonderful strength in following the experiences of people in the common, every-day walks of life.

Free Press, Birmingham, Iowa.

It differs from the popular story, "The Bread-winners" of a year ago. It greatly differs from that book in that it is written from the Christian standpoint, and its beautiful and touching descriptions of home life and home duties and heroic self-denyings will waken a responsive echo in every heart, that has not by dissipation lost the taste for the pure joys of home.

The Religious Telescope, Dayton.

The author, Miss Flagg, is a brilliant writer. The stirring questions in American politics are undoubtedly prohibition and the labor movement as championed by the secret unions of working men, which direct the strikes that with more and more frequency occur in our cities. "Between Two Opinions" is a story, its incidents vouched for as facts, which presents a powerful argument on these questions, and must attract thousands of readers among our thinking people.

The Christian Conservator, Dayton.

This is a charming book, written in an attractive manner. It is so full of sunshine and so radiant with light that one is enlightened, warmed, and, before they are conscious of it, set against the lodge. The style gleams, glows and sparkles. It is dignified and simple. It is the right book to place in the hands of your wife or daughter to superinduce co-operation with you in anti-secrecy work. Every minister's wife should read it, and then, if her husband is not an Anti-mason, he should take his turn next and become one.

The American, Washington.

We are reading, in spare moments, Miss Flagg's new book, "Between Two Opinions," and the estimate we have thus far put upon it is that it is masterly both in style and argument. One is insensibly made to feel that he is reading facts and not fiction; that the book is not a play upon the imagination but an unraveling of mysterious circumstances which have an important bearing upon current events.

Law and Order, Boston.

The book takes high ground for probibition of the liquor curse, for woman's ballot for home protection, and for a better and more honest brotherhood than is forced by their obligations upon the members of secret orders. It is, therefore, a valuable book for several large classes of American readers.

Christian Instructor, Philadelphia.

There are important questions pressing upon American politics to-day; two of them are prohibition and the labor question as connected with the secret unions of workingmen. This work is an expose of the twin evils, secret societies and the saloons. The truths are given in the form of a story; not startling, but thrilling experiences of home life that are vouched for as facts. The evidences presented of the impossibility of reaching the saloon keeper so long as he and the officers of the law are sworn brothers in the den of some secret society, are conclusive enough to awaken the most careless and obtuse member of society. It is a valuable book for the masses to read.

Evangelist, Berea, Kentucky.

The object of the volume is to illustrate the practical workings of Secret Societies, and especially to show how the Lodge upholds the saloon, and this very important design is wrought out with much skill, clearness and power. By reading it temperance people may learn much about the difficulties in the way of prohibition.

The Standard, Chicago.

It is written in the interests of reform, more especially temperance and Anti-masonry. The title of the story suggests the special aim of it, which is to protest against all "halting between two opinions;" in other words, is a plea for radicalism. The story is vigorously written, and will interest even readers who do not altogether believe in its doctrine.

The Pacific, San Francisco.

It is a story intended to do service against the saloons, and in favor of Womans' Christian Temperance work, and especially against the secret orders—Freemasons, Odd-fellows, the Knights of Labor, etc. No reflecting man can doubt that any combination of picked classes and individuals is liable to great abuse. It is obvious, also, that secret orders are specially capable of being used in a selfish and unprincipled way.

"THE WHOLE IS BETTER THAN A PART," AND YOU HAVE IT HERE IN A "NUT-SHELL."

HOME AND HEALTH.

REGULARITY IN EATING.

If there is one table-law about which all persons are agreed, it is that our meals should be taken at stated and regular periods. People may differ about vegetarianism, about sweets, about pies and cakes, about tea and coffee; but I have never met a person who would insist that regularity was of no consequence—that it was just as well to take two meals to-day and five to-morrow, to take dinner at 1 to-day, and 3 to-morrow, and 5 next day. Without understanding the physiological law, all are agreed that regularity is important.

A long journey by rail does not derange the stomach because of sitting in an unventilated car, for the traveler may occupy a still worse place in the pursuit of his business at home; neither is it because of the character of the food furnished at the railway lunch rooms, for the food at home is often worse; but the stomach derangement which nearly always comes with the long railway trip is, in great part, to be traced to irregularity in the times of eating. In a recent trip, we took breakfast the first morning at half-past 9 o'clock, the next at 7, and so with the other meals; only one day we had no dinner at all. When we reached San Francisco we were all suffering from indigestion; some were conscious of no discomfort in the stomach, but not one of us escaped the dullness and depression of spirits which come of imperfect digestion. Among the table-laws, this one of regularity is pre-eminently important.—Dio Lewis.

RESTLESS CHILDREN.

Mothers often complain that their children are wakeful and restless at night. They seem well during the day, but as soon as they go to bed and fall asleep they moan, cry, grate the teeth, rub the nose, and roll and thrash all night long. As a rule, such symptoms are thought to be caused by worms, and the unfortunate victims are frequently purged with "worm medicines," with a view of curing their nocturnal "tantrums." Now, in nine cases out of ten, the whole trouble is caused by indigestion and constipation. The child goes to bed with its bowels loaded with hard and dry fecal material, and with its stomach full of indigestible food. The quality and quantity of food it has taken during the day have been unfit for its powers of digestion, and therefore act as a constant irritant to its entire system. The irritation of its stomach and bowels by indigestible food excites the brain and spinal cord, and through these the whole system is kept in a state of excitement. "Hence, then, it is proverbial in early life that the stomach, being delicate and susceptible to any disturbance, we should be most careful to select a proper diet, to consider the quality of food that is supplied, to measure the capabilities of the digestive system, and to deal with them accordingly."—Dr. Crandall, in Morning Star.

REMEDIES FOR BURNS.

Apply the white of an egg;

Or, lime water and sweet oil;

Or, a paste of molasses and flour;

Or, a paste made from soda and cold water;

Or, sixteen parts of olive oil and one part of salicylic acid;

Or, oil of hemlock (this is said to heal without leaving any scar);

Or, cotton, wool, or wadding so that the burn will be completely covered, and then saturate with vinegar. This must be persevered in until a new skin has been formed.

Oil of hemlock is one of the best of remedies for a flesh wound or an old sore on man or beast. No inflammation or proud flesh can survive where it is applied.

Whole cloves are now used to exterminate the merciless and industrious moth. It is said they are more effectual as a destroying agent than either tobacco, camphor, or cedar shavings.

The Edinburgh Royal Hospital no longer prescribes stimulants for nervous prostration, but food exclusively of milk and eggs, in form of soft custards, sweet or salt, hot or cold, to taste.

Butter may be clarified by simply putting it into a saucepan and putting it over the fire to boil. While it is boiling remove the white scum from the top, and after it has boiled sufficiently pour the clear butter carefully into a dish ready for use.

An invaluable preparation for cleaning gloves, laces and muslins: Five oz. of aqua ammonia, 1½ oz. of alcohol, 4 oz. of white castile soap, ½ oz. of glycerine, 1 oz. of sulphuric ether, 1 quart of hot soft water, and 3 quarts of cold water. Dissolve the soap in the hot water; add the cold. When quite cool add the other ingredients, and then bottle.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH.

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. A Wonderful Woman, A Wonderful Life, AND A Wonderful Book.

Laura S. Haviland is a quiet, gentle, unassuming Quaker woman, 76 years of age, yet vigorous, who has had a remarkable career of usefulness, and has now given to the world a remarkable history of her "Life Work" as a teacher, at an early day, of the colored refugees in Canada and in Michigan, and in other States, as a traveler down South in the guise of a "berry picker," helping out into freedom many slaves; as a nurse and preacher to the sufferers in hospitals during the war; and with Gov. St. John and Elizabeth Comstock, relieving the destitute and suffering refugees in Kansas.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers; price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each: per dozen $2.00

National Christian Association.
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

General Washington Opposed to Se-CRET SOCIETIES. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 304 pages.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one In-ITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Beruard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Ma-SONRY. Showing the character of the Institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 De-GREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. In cloth, 25c. per doz. $3.25. Paper cover, 15c. Per doz. $1.25.

FARM AND GARDEN.

HINTS ON POTATO CULTURE.

We have received a bulletin issued by Prof. Samuel Johnson, of the Michigan Agricultural College Farm. It treats, in a general way, the entire subject of potato culture. We make the following extracts:

Soils and Fertilizers.—The soils best adapted to the potato are sandy and gravelly loams. Clay soils, if the season be wet, produce very poor potatoes, and they will be much more liable to rot than those grown on sandy land. An old pasture turned over, or any sod ground, is specially fitted for the growth of the potato. A little well-rotted compost, harrowed in thoroughly upon such a sod, to give the plants a good start, will usually give a fair crop upon comparatively poor soil. The potatoes grown upon sod are usually smoother, less liable to rot, and of superior quality. The application of fresh stable manure is not desirable on potato land, as it frequently results in a diminished yield and greatly increases the liability to rot. Mucky soils in a dry season often produce a good crop; but as they are deficient in organic matter, an application of leached ashes will be found desirable to supply the potash essential to the growth of the potato. Ashes are considered as a special fertilizer for potatoes, adding to the yield and improving the quality. They can be used on the hill or in it. A good way is to mix them with the earth that covers the seed, or as a top dressing after the plants are started.

Seed.—For seed select perfect specimens, of good shape and of medium size, rather than the largest potatoes, and cut with three or four eyes on a piece. It is quite as well to cut them when planted. It is often, however, desirable to have the cutting done before the hurried time of planting. The expense of cutting to one eye is no small item. If the weather is dry, there is so little of the potato that it dries up altogether, or makes but a sickly growth. The larger piece has vitality enough to start a good, healthy plant. Many growers favor early planting. Some seasons the early planted give best returns, and other seasons the late. We generally intend to plant the main crop about the middle of May.

Cultivation and Harvesting.—If the potatoes are a long time coming up, it is best to run over the field with a light harrow. Anything that will stir the ground sufficiently to cause the death of the little weeds and break the crusted surface will answer. When the rows can be seen, with a shovel-plow cover the rows of new plants with about two inches of earth. This should be done thoroughly. Frequent cultivation during the growing season is essential to a good crop, and if attended to properly, there will be little need of hand labor. In August it is well to go through the fields, each hand taking from four to six rows, and pull any large weeds that may have escaped the cultivator. Dig as soon as thoroughly ripe, and when the ground is dry, if possible. Store in a cool, dry place. We have never had a potato-digger that proved satisfactory, and dig in the old-fashioned way, with hooks.

Varieties.—We have been testing several of the newer varieties for some years. The Beauty of Hebron and Burbank's Seedling are our main sorts for field culture. They yield well and are of excellent quality. The Early Ohio, Clark's No. 1, the Rural Blush and the White Star are good yielding sorts, but they have not proved equal, with us, in smoothness, uniform size and quality, to the two varieties first named.

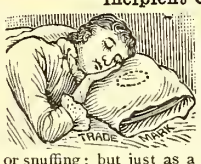
HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE,

In Constipation.



Dr. J. N. ROBINSON, Medina, O., says: "In cases of indigestion, constipation and nervous prostration, its results are happy."

ALL-NIGHT INHALATION!

"A positive revolution in the treatment of Air-Passage Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Lungs, and, for the purpose designed, as valuable a discovery as vaccination."

THE PILLOW-INHALER.

A Speedy, Positive and Permanent Cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Incipient Consumption.

It is a hair pillow, with reservoirs of evaporating liquid, the fumes or vapor of which is inhaled all night long, whilst sleeping as usual, and without any discomfort. It is used only at night, and is perfectly safe to the most delicate. There is no stomach-dosing, douching or snuffing; but just as a smoky lamp will leave a deposit on a whitened wall so the PILLOW-INHALER, for say eight hours at a time, spreads a powerful healing balm or salve on the inflamed inner coating of the diseased air-surfaces, from the nostrils to the bottom of the lungs, and hence into the blood. Old-fashioned inhalation, through a tube, for a few minutes a day, sometimes cured. Think of eight hours constant action, on the same principle, but intensified a hundred-fold! There are no pipes or tubes. The medicine is breathed in, not swallowed, and goes right to the diseased parts.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

HON. E. L. HEDDEN, Collector of the Port of New York, says: "I take pleasure in statiug that the PILLOW-INHALER has been of the greatest relief, and I believe of permanent benefit, to my wife, who has beeu a great sufferer from Bronchial and Catarrhal Troubles, accompanied with distressing Asthma. I recommend its use to all persons afflicted with such maladies."

E. L. HEDDEN, 38 West 49th St., New York.

MR. H. G. TEELE, 50 Bryan Block, Chicago, Ill., says: "I suffered fifteen years from a severe case of Catarrh; coughed incessantly day and night. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and since using it my cough is gone; my lungs are no longer weak and sore, and I am in better health than I have been for years."

During the six years of its existence the PILLOW-INHALER has wrought cures of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, that have been more like miracles than the usual treatment of disease. It is not expensive, and is within the reach of every one. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Testimonials, or call.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

NEEDLE WORK

Needle-Work: A Manual of Stitches and Studies in Embroidery and Drawn Work. This manual is an attempt to systematize and arrange in an order convenient for workers, the modern methods in Embroidery and Drawn Work. The author has felt the desire and the responsibility involved in aiding women to a true and practical guide to the beautiful art of needle work. When the Angel of Mercy begged that woman might not be created because she would be abused by man, as the stronger, the Lord listened, but felt that he could not give up the whole scheme of creation, so he gave the loving Angel permission to bestow upon her any compensating gift she chose, and the Angel pityingly endowed her with tears and the love of needle-work. This book is printed on fine paper, has a handsome cover, and contains Edited by Jenny June.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The House has struck for six hours' work and passed a resolution stating that the daily sessions should hereafter commence at 11 o'clock in the morning and continue until 5 in the afternoon.

James McHale was Thursday appointed inspector of customs, to be located at Chicago.

The House has passed the River and Harbor bill by a good majority and with few amendments.

The Committee of the House on the Judiciary report adversely to the proposed Woman's Suffrage amendment, and direct that it be laid on the table. The minority dissented and advocated the right of women to vote. The Commitee on Education and Labor has reported in favor of eight hours a day for letter carriers

The Indian Appropriation bill, as agreed upon by the committee on conference has been finally passed by both houses of Congress

The Senate has passed a bill appropriating $[illegible] as a subsidy to mail steamers.

CHICAGO.

On Monday, the 3d inst., the strike for eight hours and advanced pay was carried out by the freight handlers of most of the railroads centering in Chicago, and by some, but not all, of the switchmen. This resulted in great embarrassment to the business interests and an almost complete suspension of transportation.

In the afternoon there was a meeting of strikers, led by prominent Socialists, in the vicinity of McCormick's reaper works, at which it was demanded that the buildings should be burned and the authorities resisted. At the hour of closing a fierce attack was made on the 700 workmen who were emerging from the shops. After a severe conflict, in which some were killed and a number wounded, the police finally dispersed the mob.

There were on Monday night serious riots in other parts of the city, in all of which Socialists were prominent, but they were put down by the police, the rioters and some of the policemen being either killed or wounded. Meanwhile, at Bay View, Wis., thousands of strikers took possession of the railroad buildings, and threatened violence to life and property. The military was called out and finally overcame the mob, after four persons were killed and a number wounded. Since then they have been kept at bay.

Tuesday night (the 4th,) was the culminating period. The Socialists, who are simply the radicals among the trades-union people, had been parading with red flags and the national banner reversed. They had for a week scattered proclamations all over the city urging all laborers to resort to arms and overthrow all existing institutions. Their organ, the Arbeiter Zeitung, which has issued 6,000 copies daily, was full of incentives to riot and bloodshed. At about 8 P. M 5,000 met at the corner of Desplaines and West Lake streets. They were being harangued by their leaders, and were prepared for desperate deeds. About 400 police appeared and commanded them to disperse. Just then a dynamite bomb was thrown from an alley and fell in the midst of the policemen. The explosion was terrific. Some thirty to forty were struck and several of them fatally injured. The explosion was followed by a volley from the revolvers of the rioters, seriously wounding others. The entire number of policemen wounded by the explosion and pistol shots was forty-four. With remarkable steadiness and bravery the police rallied, fired on the mob and pursued them with pistols and clubs in all directions. Many were injured and some fatally. Many arrests were made, including the leaders of the Socialists—Spies, Schwab, Fielden, etc. Search was made, and pistols, rifles, dynamite and bombs were found. The organ of the Socialists has been suppressed, though a small edition has since been printed. The Mayor has issued his proclamation asking all citizens to abstain from great meetings and promising to enforce the law.

The city has had a taste of anarchy, and is in no mood to tolerate any violations of the rights of labor or property. The leaders are incarcerated without bail, and the press are a unit in the defense of order. The city is greatly indebted to the good discipline and efficiency of its police. But for their steadiness in a great emergency crime and death would have prevailed.

Police Officers John Barrett and Geo. Miller, victims of the late riot, have died at the county hospital. Both were unconscious when they died.

The revival has been discontinued on accouut of the labor troubles. Mr. Moody will return Oct. 1.

Nearly a full force of new men are at work in the Northwestern freight-houses, under police protection.

The strike at Deering's has been settled on an eight-hour basis and 15 per cent advance, and the 1,700 men have consequently agreed to return to work.

The switch-tenders on the Western Indiana road, which leases tracks to the Fort Wayne, Wabash, Chicago & Eastern Illinois, Chicago & Atlantic, and the Grand Trunk, struck last week and seriously retarded the business of the roads named.

COUNTRY.

Eight hundred employes of the Peninsular car shops at Detroit struck Wednesday.

One of the walls in the Brackett block at Minneapolis, Minn., collapsed Wednesday afternoon, burying a number of workmen, four of whom were killed and seven dangerously injured.

Paul Grautkau, editor of the Labor Review, and a companion named Gustave Roussler, were arrested at Milwaukee Wednesday night for making incendiary speeches.

At Thursday's session of the American Medical Association, E. H. Gregory, of St. Louis, was elected president, and Chicago selected as the next place of meeting, and June, 1887, as the time.

Representative liquor dealers of Indiana met at Indianapolis Thursday and formed an organization, Frank Maus being chosen president. The association is said to be for mutual protection, and not for political purposes.

Two anarchists named Simon and Hirth were arrested Thursday at Milwaukee and locked up. In their houses were found concealed various kinds of arms, with a large supply of ammunition.

FOREIGN.

The Academy exhibition is the poorest in many years, and the London papers are a unit in denunciation of it.

It is asserted that the Gladstone Home Rule bill will have a majority of at least twenty in the House of Parliament.

The Austrian government has vainly endeavored to suppress the Galician uprising. Wholesale arrests have been made, the military has been ordered out, and yet the peasantry persist in rebellion.

Russia will not accept the reply of Greece to the ultimatum of the Powers. All Europe is discussing the trouble between Greece and Turkey. There seems to be an impression that the troubles have been bridged over. A Berlin correspondent says Turkey is bankrupt, and Russia has to borrow to pay interest. Bulgaria is sound, with uniimited credit.

It is officially announced that cholera has appeared in Venice and Vicenza. Several new cases and some deaths are reported in these places daily.

In the House of Assembly of Nova Scotia, last week, the secretary gave notice that the members of this branch of the Legislature of Nova Scotia are of the opinion that the financial and commercial interests of the people of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward's Island would be advanced by those provinces withdrawing from the Canadian federation and uniting under one government; or, in default of that, that Nova Scotia again become an independent province of Great Britain.

Fifteen new cases of cholera and five deaths are reported from Brindisi, and nine new cases and three deaths from Venice.

The latest advices are that Turkey and Greece are hurrying troops to the front. Several European papers are of the opinion that Russia will secretly support Greece. A demonstration was held at Athens Sunday, at which war-like speeches were made and a resolution favoring war with Turkey carried amid wild excitement.

Mr. Joseph Cramer testified before the Congressional committee that, while he was a Knight of Labor and a striker, he was ordered by the Master Workman of his assembly to proceed to a certain place and stop a freight train. This he declined to do because it was an unlawful act, and he was promptly expelled. Now, since he has not only violated his oath of obedience to his master, but also his covenant of secrecy in disclosing the private doings of the assembly, he is to be regarded as a perjured wretch, unworthy of confidence and deserving of universal abhorrence. Such is lodge logic. To a fearful extent the people have been corrupted by it. By and by, public opinion will swing round and conclude that not he who breaks but he who keeps his oath of fealty to an organization which is a law unto itself, is the sworn conspirator and the enemy of all government and all law. Such changes have not been unfrequent. We once elected slave-holders to be Presidents of the United States; now we make slave-holding a crime.

We are glad that the decrees of the Plenary Council at Baltimore are not altogether lost on Protestant churches. That is a deplorable unwisdom that will not gather instruction from whatever source. The fact that Roman Catholic churches have found church fairs and festivals, as a means of raising money, "schools of wickedness and scandal," shows that human nature is not widely different among people of all religions. We heartily concur with Obediah Oldschool in the Interior that the Lord does not want us to raise money for his cause by fairs, festivals and excursions; that the church that cannot be sustained without such expedients had better be disbanded, and the minister who must have annual donation parties had better quit preaching or seek some other field of labor. We shall be profoundly thankful when a great council of Protestant churches shall give us a deliverance on Christian morality as important and timely, and especially shall have the courage to speak what they think on lodgery and its abominations.

Irish home rule has received a backset by the action of the Ohio Legislature during its pending session. Whatever may be true of Ireland, it is doubtful whether Ohio is capable of self-government. Commencing with a dead-lock, they have culminated in a strike, followed by a weak imitation of the Rump Parliament, and have shown an incapacity for republican government worthy of the Ashantees. Their last performance is the attempted passage of the old Scott law, taxing liquor dealers $200 and dealers in beer $100, thus giving them a legal recognition and status, which, since 1850, when the people of that great State decided that no licenses should be granted, did not exist. If this was meant for genuine legislation it was a farce. If not, it was a fraud. More than 300,000 of the citizens of Ohio demanded constitutional prohibition, and they will be slow to accept a legal recognition and a paltry tax passed by a legislature without a quorum. It is time the good people took their legislature in hand, elected men who will not subordinate all interests to the demands of the party and the dictation of liquor dealers.

Mr. G. N. Sceets, who edits a paper claiming to be the organ of the Knights of Labor in this city, has, within a few days, made a public speech in which he said that about fifty first-class funerals would be a benefit to the city. He would not advocate the killing of the manufacturers for they were not worth the powder, but it would be a blessing if God would give them an easy death. Between such men and the wretch who threw the bomb at the policemen, there is only the difference of the murderous cowardice that keeps within the forms of law, and the brutal outrage that defies all government. The one is as truly the enemy of society as the other. The man who suggests crime is often the more dangerous of the two. But we need waste no wrath on these poor wretches. It is the system under which they labor that should demand our execrations. So long as secret combinations, which subordinate all interests to their own and require unqualified subjection to their commands, are a controlling influence in the community, we may expect just such a class of men as Most, Parsons and Sceets.

The arrest of Herr Johann Most, the New York Socialist, will give a greater sense of security both to that city and to this. No man in the nation has done more to array the baser elements of society against all government and all law. Arrested and imprisoned in his native Germany for criminal opposition to the government, he fled to England, where he was again in prison; and from there he came to this country, to be an agitator in behalf of anarchy and blood. There is no man so bad but he has his following; and, unfortunately, in all our large cities there are multitudes ready to respond to the appeals of just this class of desperadoes. The secret labor unions are the hot-beds in which Socialism is propagated, and the seed that has been so industriously sown has, within the past few weeks, been partially reaped. Cutting off the branches of the Socialistic tree may check its growth, but until it ceases to be propagated we shall not have permanent peace.

A bill has passed the Senate appropriating $800,000 as an annual subsidy to steamers carrying the U. S. mails to the Central and South American countries. The object is to secure their trade, only one seventeenth of their imports being from the United States. A shorter, simpler, and in every way more righteous method would be the negotiation of treaties of commercial reciprocity. The articles which these nations wish to purchase are such as we can abundantly supply. Their articles of export are such as, by reason of climate, we cannot produce. To levy taxes on each other's commerce is as absurd as it would be for Florida to collect duties on ice from the Kennebec, and Maine on oranges from the St. Johns. Were the obstructions of tariff and navigation laws removed, we should need no subsidies to greatly enlarge our commerce, open new markets for overstocked manufactories, and remove the deadlock on the general business of the country.

Some of the labor assemblies of this city and elsewhere are lifting up their hands in horror at the murderous assault on the city police. They are ready to denounce all anarchists as the enemies of society who should meet with no mercy from the officers of the law. Doubtless the mass of the Knights are sincere. They have never sought to overthrow the government, nor have they any sympathy with those who seek its overthrow. But between open rebellion and persistent violation of personal liberty, the right of property, the laws of the land and the general interests of society, there is a difference, but it is a difference in degree rather than in kind. So long as the Knights of Labor intimidate and abuse non-union men, insist that they shall not be employed, seize property, misplace railroad switches, obstruct trains and disable engines, to say nothing of attempting to enforce their rights with Winchester rifles, they have small reason to complain of the anarchists. The fifty persons killed or wounded by the anarchists of Chicago does not equal the number that during the past two years have been killed or maimed by members of secret labor unions. Let those who live in glass houses beware of throwing stones.

Thirty years ago there were plenty of people who freely admitted and deplored the abuses of the system of slavery, but contended that the system itself was not inconsistent with the genius of our government or the demands of Christianity. Bad as were the fruits of slavery, it was the system itself that constituted that great and terrible wrong that brought down divine judgment, so that "His fury went forth like fire and burned that none could quench it." It was only in the entire overthrow of the system that we could hope for permanent peace. So, too, of the system of organized secrecy in all its forms. Its most earnest advocates admit the abuses that grow out of it. None who deplore arson and murder can fail to see that the secret labor organizations have been their fruitful source, and that literally "they have filled the land with violence."

But just so surely as that the abuses of slavery could not be removed except as the system itself was rooted out, just so certainly will it be found that the unquestioned evils of the system of organized secrecy are an essential element of the system, and that if we would avoid moral, social and political ruin, we must, as we did with slavery, destroy our destroyer.

We have read with interest and appreciation the "secret" circulars of Mr. Powderly addressed to the Knights of Labor, in which he deprecates the recent violations of law and exhorts to temperance of spirit and action. We have also read the able and wise admonitions of the Roman Catholic Archbishops of Montreal and Baltimore, urging all good Catholics to practice sound Christian morality. Surely, there was great need in either case of such admonitions; but it is equally certain that they will largely fail of their objects. The Roman Catholic church and the Knights of Labor are organizations well fitted to accomplish certain objects, but not to make either good Christians or good citizens. There are those who belong to these organizations that are both, but they are such in spite of, rather than because of their convictions. Whatever takes away the sense of personal responsibility to God or to the civil government, diminishes alike Christian morality and practical good citizenship. The Roman Catholic has his individual responsibility absorbed by and merged in the church. It is to the church rather than to God that he must respond. The result is that his sense of loyalty to God is greatly diminished, and all the admonitions of the church, however excellent, fail to make him a good Christian. So, too, the Knight of Labor has given himself to his order and sworn obedience to its laws. His individuality as a citizen is merged in and lost in his covenant to the organization. He acts by its direction, and forgets his responsibility to the laws. His allegiance to the body politic has been divided and diminished, because it has been transferred to another government. He may or may not have wise admonitions to loyalty and good citizenship, but the system under which he has placed himself will tend strongly to break the force of such admonitious and loosen the restraints of all legal obligation. We expect little good from Mr. Powderly's fine words.

FREEMASONRY AND HOLINESS.

BY WILLIAM FENTON.

There is no mistake in saying that Freemasons, Odd-fellows, and all other secretists, with all their shuffling tricksters who defend them from the outside, do "love darkness rather than light." D. G. Strong's letter in the Cynosure of April 8th moves me to say something more upon this subject. However much anyone may deprecate such a crisis as he fears, that crisis must inevitably come. That the righteous will be separated from the wicked is as certain as the shining of the sun in the material heavens. And the sooner we will act upon that prediction the better for our own souls and humanity. While it is true that Judas Iscariot was called to be one of the twelve, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled; and that God, to fulfil his decrees, sent the lying spirits into the false prophets to entice Ahab up to Rameth Gilead, it is not safe for us to tamper with the lying spirits of the Freemasons and Odd-fellows. Judas Iscariot, the son of perdition, was finally lost, "went to his own place:" and Jesus said of him: "It were good for him that he had never been born." Ahab likewise perished in his sin and went to his own place. And we all know the fate of the lying prophets who became the willing abode of lying spirits. Whence do these lodge vassals derive their authority for harboring and sending forth the lying spirits of the lodge to do business as for God? If from God let them say so, and we will look into the matter. But that is just what they hate: they love darkness too well to admit any investigation.

D. G. Strong tells us that holiness is the only adequate power in this work of reformation. I think I know what he means by "holiness," having had some experience in holiness meetings and with holiness leaders. To call a man a Christian who does not love and embrace holiness is a misnomer. To be holy as God is holy is the very first desire of a new-born soul; it comes, not by education in a modern holiness meeting, but by inspiration of the breath of God at the new birth.

To expose the sham holiness, many incidents might be related. Rev. William McDonald, a distinguished holiness leader, told me at a camp-meeting, just as he was about to ascend the platform, that he was a Freemason, that he knew nothing wrong about Freemasonry, made light of the suggestion to confess that he had sinned in joining the Masons, and immediately stepped upon the platform and preached a sermon on perfect love. From which it is evident that he considers the perfect love he preaches quite in harmony with the sworn secret cut-throat devil-worship of Freemasonry.

This William McDonald is also a distinguished editor and author of writings on holiness. I would ask D. G. Strong how many "tons" of his literature would be adequate to deliver Methodism from Freemasonry? Seeing that his holiness goes upon the plan of silence and secrecy, silence and secrecy may be spiritual weapons, but they are the weapons of Satan, and not the weapons of Him who said: "In secret have I said nothing."

They tell us, "preach Christ, preach holiness, mention any sin but Freemasonry, and when men are converted they will leave Masonry." In this they betray their own false position; besides condemning multitudes of preachers, holiness leaders, class leaders, and church members who would rather give up the church than their darling sin of the idolatry they practice in the secret lodge, whom they fellowship as Christians and holiness men in the church. Freemason Methodist preachers manifest a brazen-faced impudence on this subject where the devil himself might stand abashed. Why? Because they have truth, or God, or Jesus Christ to fall back on? Oh no, but because Freemasonry is the bulwark of the Methodist denomination. A short time ago a conference of the M. E. church was held in this city. Bishop Simpson presided. A young minister in attendance was asked if the Bishop was a Freemason. He replied that he did not know, but supposed as a matter of course that he was: for otherwise he did not believe that he could hold the position of Bishop. When the young minister was asked if he himself was a Mason, he said no: but he expected to become one. I was startled, not being prepared to realize that the M. E. church was so far down hill, although painfully aware that many of the preachers were brow-beating bullies of the lodge. The following fell from the lips of a Masonic victim, happily out of the coils of the lodge serpent. He is a seceded Mason and a minister of Christ. While preaching in the Methodist connection he was a Mason, but came to realize the wickedness and hypocrisy of his position. He saw through the mock prayers, mock resurrection, the loathsome blasphemy of the Masonic diablerie, and felt the galling of conscience under his Masonic obligations, backed by the murder penalties. He trembled to be free from Masonic bondage; and says that while removing to another State he resolved not to make himself known as a Mason. But at the first district conference he attended in that State he had presented his report and was awaiting the decision upon it and his character. He had waited a long time, when a preacher came out from the conference and hailed him with a Masonic sign. In that ungarded moment he responded Masonically; and was informed that his character was being massacred, and his reputation ruined, but they were not aware that he was a Mason; that now it would be all right. And accordingly the crafty old Masonic preacher informed the brethren inside, and our friend was made welcome to the grim brotherhood. Surely, if Jesus ever meant that his own words should find an application in this dispensation, we have found a place to apply them. "Ye serpents, ye vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" There are some awful judgments predicted in the New Testament, and which remain to be fulfilled. Their precise application I must leave; knowing that "Christ has no concord with Belial." "Come out from among them and be ye separate." The alternative to this is, "Put away the wicked man from among yourselves." There is another alternative; it is found in the following Scripture: "Come forth, my people, out of her, that ye have no fellowship with her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues: for her sins have reached even unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities." Rev. 18: 4–6. Thus we may be sure that God remembers iniquity, and therefore he will not forget Freemasonry. I see no way out of the awful dilemma but by some such Scriptural plan as that proposed by Bro. Michael. And when all Scriptural methods fail to bring about the crisis, the two alternatives remain, namely, come out, or remain and be punished with the Masons. "Be not deceived; he that doeth righteousness, is righteous." Perfect love, holiness, or sanctification in sympathy with the diabolism of the secret lodges is unrighteous, and unmistakably of the devil. Some look upon that sympathy as a matter of imprudence. And therefore we need to be on our guard lest they continue with a mere change of tactics on the part of the devil, renouncing Masonry. "But he that is spiritual judgeth all things." Therefore, we are able to judge in other matters besides Freemasonry. Certain manifestations concerning Freemasonry are quite sufficient, however, to show that righteousness has no place in some of the "holiness" and "faith holiness" meetings; likewise in many of the churches which teach a concealment of crime in the secret devil-worship of the lodges. But if there were no such, then the Scriptures which testify of such would not be fulfilled. "False apostles, deceitful workers, fashioning themselves into apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for even Satan fashioneth himself into an angel of light." 2 Cor. 11: 13, 14. And, again, "There were false prophets, also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them" (Masonry, Odd-fellowship, etc., does that very thing) "and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of." 2 Pet. 2: 1, 2. How applicable this to Freemasonry. Freemasons tell us that Christianity is merely a mythology. (See Rebold's History of Freemasonry).

The sooner the issue is made, and the awful crisis met, the easier the conflict. We are living in an age wherein "Wicked men and seducers wax worse and worse." And we may depend upon it that the churches will be no better without a conflict of righteousness against the wicked lying spirits of the lodges in the heavenly places. Shall it be as in the days of slavery, when the churches went on in their fellowship with iniquity until the life of the nation was in peril, and there was danger of perpetuating the crime of slavery, with its consequent ruin, beyond hope of recovery, and until a long and cruel war was the only alternative?

We are warned. Let us not go on provoking the wrath of God by fellowshiping the miserable, lying, secret lodge idolaters, until he smites, as he did in the case of slavery, or will smite in the world to come. Also, "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils." 1 Cor. 10: 21. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Prov. 16: 25. "Idolaters, and all liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." Rev. 21: 8.

LODGE DELUSIONS.

BY S. B. KOKANOUR.

A few days ago, while talking with a young Odd-fellow, who says he is a Christian, about the unchristian nature of secret societies, I related to him a conversation I had not long ago with an acquaintance, who told me that he formerly belonged to the Odd-fellows and the secret temperance societies, but that he has withdrawn from all of them because of their unchristian tendencies and unbecoming amusements.

"What curious ideas," my friend remarked, "some people have about Christianity. I cannot see anything in Odd-fellowship that is antagonistic to Christianity. I suppose you would say that it was wrong for the lodges to take the sacraments—the communion, baptism, etc."

"Indeed I would," I answered.

"Well, I wouldn't," he laughingly replied.

"All those things," I said, "performed in the lodge by men who are scoffers of religion, and among the commonest grades of society, and church members, all in a medley crew, more engaged in sport and frolic than any sincere reformatory work, constitute nothing but a mockery before God, and the Scriptures say, 'God is not mocked,'" etc.

All these things are incorporated into the lodge by Satan, the father of the lodge, to deceive the unwary. No man who is born of God, with God's grace in his heart, can engage with infidels, scoffers and criminals in the lodge in those ceremonies or sacraments borrowed from Christ's "pure and undefiled religion," and be blameless and pure.

It is strange how so many people can allow themselves to be enticed and deceived by his Satanic Majesty into the belief that they are Christians, when indeed they are given over to reprobacy of mind where they believe lies, and take them to be truth.

But there are so many of the lo heres and lo theres in our land, against which our Saviour warned us, which are misleading the people, speaking peace, peace where there is no peace, and deceiving them so that there are thousands upon thousands who cannot see the trap which the devil is so successfully building around them.

The sociables and the dissipating "good time," with which these spurious sects are always alluring those who are supporting them, so prepare the boys who are attending them that they can look on the mocking farces of the lodge with complacency.

These people, not being converted, and therefore not having the Christian's spiritual discerning power that true conversion gives, think that these lodge ceremonies are solemn Christian rites, because preachers and church members engage in the hollow mockeries of the counterfeit religion.

They can look on with cheerful satisfaction when these pretended preachers and Christians, in such representations as the initiating candidate is represented as David, son of Jesse, visiting Saul, king of Israel, and the attempted slaying, and afterwards with the journey from "Jerusalem to Jericho on a mission of humanity" with the pretended falling among robbers and thieves, who left him for dead, as something bordering on the truth and heroic, while it is nothing but plain devil-worship. Indeed, they may well sum the whole substance up as "a mimic" [imitate for sport—Webster] "journey of life," as they do in the charge to the candidate in the last or Purple or third Encampment degree. I can well believe that the whole affair is a mimic imitation for sport, nothing else.

How indeed they are benighted and blindly led into the snare of lodge darkness to sin, thus adroitly laid for them, supposing that this mimic counterfeit religion is genuine.

When, oh! when, will these lodge people waken up to a full realization of their dreadful condition. Oh! that we had the voice of a trumpet loud and shrill enough to sound the alarm and warning voice against the lodge deceptions into every hamlet of our beloved country.

LIVINGSTONE.

During a recent interview between Mr. Stanley and a newspaper correspondent, the distinguished and intrepid explorer said: "I have been in Africa for seventeen years, and I have never met a man yet who would kill me if I folded my hands. What has been wanted and what I have been endeavoring to ask for the poor Africans, has been the good offices of Christians, ever since Livingstone taught me during those four months that I was with him. In 1871 I went to him as prejudiced as the biggest atheist in London. To a reporter and correspondent such as I, who only had to deal with wars, mass meetings and political gatherings, sentimental matters were entirely out of my province. But there came for me a long time for reflection. I was out there away from a worldly world. I saw this solitary old man there and I asked myself, 'How on earth does he stop here? Is he cracked, or what? What is it that inspires him?' For months after we met I simply found myself listening to him, wondering at the old man carrying out all things as was said in the Bible, 'Leave all things and follow me.' But, little by little, his sympathy for others became contagious; my sympathy was aroused, seeing his earnestness and how he went quietly about his business. I was converted by him, although he had not tried to do it. How sad that the good old man should have died so soon! How joyful he would have been if he could have seen what has since happened there!"—Christian Herald.

Psalm 126: 6.

He who goes forth in sadness and in weeping,
And by all waters seeds of blessing leaves,
